Mr. BUTLER. I simply desire to state that if what the Senator from New York says is true in regard to foreign nations not believing us when our inspectors give a clean bill of health with meat or pork or any other commodity or live-stock, they certainly would not believe anybody on this side the water.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator can see that there is a great difference between a certificate on the exportation of meats and that of live cattle. Meat can be inspected and it can be certified to whether it is healthful or not; but cattle may be exposed to pleuro-pneumonia, may be put on board ship apparently perfectly healthy at New York, and the disease may not appear for a number of days until after the vessel arrives in England. Therefore an inspection of live cattle amounts to nothing so long as the disease is known to exist in the country from which the cattle goes.

Mr. BECK. I do not desire to make a speech or detain the Senate at this late hour longer than necessary to state my own difficulties. I have stated one of the reasons why I am so anxious that something should be done. Another reason is this: I in part represent a State dealing very largely in cattle of the most costly character, that have been purchased for years by other States and Territories for the improvement of their own. We can not compete with the great Territories of the West in raising cattle for quantity.

We have to compete in raising, if at all, for quality; and we have to sell to them. Our State may be ever so clear of pleuro-pneumonia, and we may be able to prove it, but our State must be in a condition to satisfy the other States that that is the fact. They quarantine against us. That closes our market, no matter whether there is danger or not. When Illinois, Iowa, and other States refuse to allow our cattle to pass through their limits on their way to the Northwest, because under the law of the United States all cattle transported on railroad cars must be taken off once in twenty-eight hours, and they might be three or four days on freight trains in passing through those States—when our State is quarantined against, our trade is cut off absolutely by State action, no matter how thoroughly we may have proved that there is no danger. That is an evil which the State can not rectify.

I have no personal interest, directly or indirectly, in this matter. Nobody connected with me has any interest that I know of in the great cattle interest of the far Northwest, because, while I have a son there, what he has is on his own place, and he never had any range cattle. But I know from observation made year after year that if this disease ever does reach the loose herds of the Northwest, the cattle trade of this country is gone for twenty years, so far as exporting cattle is concerned. Those are the regions from which the cattle come that are exported, or that make up the surplus, and more than the surplus, of all that goes abroad.

We may defend our own cattle, and the quarantine should take care of them in our barnyards in the States; but if ever this disease reaches the cattle on the ranges, that is the end of them and the end of the cattle business of this country; and millions, yes, hundreds of millions, will not cover the loss.

The markets have been lost for a year or two now, and it will continue so until assurance is given that some power has taken hold of the question. Whenever the disease reaches the ranges where three-fourths of the great herds are fatted, that is for twenty years the end of the export trade of the United States in cattle.

I want some method devised that will stop that. I will vote for the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, because I think it will strengthen the bill and send it over to the House. I may vote for the substitute of the Senator from Vermont, though I have not heard it yet. I want something to go to the House. I want consultation with the House; I want action taken before we adjourn, and I am going to waive points of constitutional scruples in order to have that consultation, hoping that the final result will be good.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I say a word to my friend from Kentucky about my amendment, so that he will understand it, as he has not heard it read, as he was not in? It is simply to put into the discretionary power of the President a million dollars to be expended to aid the authorities of the several States, each and all of them, according to the interests—probably chiefly at this moment in the State of Illinois largely, where these cattle are brought—to aid the State and pay for it out of the pockets of the whole people, to do what the State power clearly has the right to do—to exterminate this disease.

The trouble about national action is that we have constitutional limitations, difficulties as to the power of the United States to regulate the police, the health of men or cattle, or anything else in a State; and, therefore, if this bill put in the names of human beings instead of the word "cattle," it would be just as constitutional as it is now, of course, because it is all the same, and, therefore, with every sympathy with what my friend from New York has said, and with what my friend from Kentucky has said, wanting to accomplish this thing, I do not wish to hold out the ashes of disappointment to the people of the United States in passing a bill that, the first time any resisting citizen chooses to test it, will, as I sincerely believe, break down without counsel on the other side being heard at all.

It is so plain to me that I prefer as we now stand, and in the present condition of things, to put all the money that is necessary—I do not care if it is ten millions, or twenty, as my friend from Kentucky says it is of vast consequence—into the hands of the Executive to aid the State authorities, and pay for everything that the State authorities think ought to be destroyed, or quarantined, or whatever else, and get rid of this thing. Then we are sure of our ground, and we know we can do it; but if we hold out to the people of the United States this proposition as it stands, and my idea should turn out to be the right one—I think I could demonstrate it in a little while, and I will to-morrow if it is necessary—we have then been misleading (not intentionally but by effect) the people in this business, and we shall have allowed this disease to go on, when in the other way we shall be able with the aid of every State—I am sure no State would wish to have it go on—to accomplish the result we all desire.

I make this explanation to my friend from Kentucky so that by to-morrow he will be able to consider whether that is not the best way.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a moment. I want to see if we can not agree——

Mr. CAMERON. I do not withdraw the motion.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator certainly——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the motion will be voted down. I call for the yeas and nays. After we had an agreement to go on with the bill it can not be taken away in this way with my consent.

Mr. CAMERON. There is no quorum here.

Mr. MILLER. Then have a call of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe the Senator from New York only wants an understanding as to the time when the bill shall be finished.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the bill is so important that we had not better cut off debate.

Mr. MILLER. I do not care to fix the time, but I want an agreement that the bill shall be taken up immediately after the conclusion of morning business to-morrow, that instead of going on with the passage of ordinary House bills as we have been doing under the rule heretofore, many of which are of little importance, we may take this bill up immediately and proceed with it, and I think we can get a vote on it before 2 o'clock. With that understanding I am entirely willing to adjourn now.

We have two important amendments. We have gone through the text of the bill. It is all perfected. There are two propositions before us—one the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, which is in the form of a substitute; the other is the very important amendment of the Senator from Missouri entirely modifying the bill. There can be but three votes possibly called for—one upon the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, first; then upon the substitute of the Senator from Vermont, and then on the final passage of the bill. I have no doubt that by allowing a moderate amount of debate to different people, we can can get through by 2 o'clock to-morrow. If I can have that agreement I will not make any objection.

Mr. VANCE. I object to debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made. Debate is not in order. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania that the Senate adjourn, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. MILLER. I do not care to call a quorum here to-night or to have any trouble over this bill, and it seems impossible with the——

Mr. VANCE. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order, and the Chair has so announced.

Mr. MILLER. I give notice that immediately after the conclusion of morning business to-morrow I shall move to take up this bill; and I now withdraw the call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON. I insist on my motion to adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The call for the yeas and nays is withdrawn. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 24 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 25, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 24, 1887.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VETO MESSAGE—ANTHONY M'ROBERTSON.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. TAULBEE, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 7327, entitled "An act granting a pension to Anthony McRobertson."

The beneficiary named in this bill was badly wounded in a battle which occurred about the 17th day of November, 1863.

He applied for pension in 1874, and the same was granted in November, 1886, to date from the time of his disability, November 17, 1863.

He is now receiving the highest rate allowed under the general law for cases such as his, and he would be entitled to no more under the special act.

It could not therefore by any possibility be of the least benefit to him, but on the other hand might jeopardize his advantages already gained.

GROVER CLEVELAND,

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 23, 1887.

VETO MESSAGE—MARGARET R. JONES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. TAULBEE, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 10082, entitled "An act to increase the pension of Margaret R. Jones."

The beneficiary mentioned in this bill is now receiving the highest rate of pension allowed in cases such as hers under the general law.

All the information which is available to me fails to furnish any reason why this pension should be specially increased, except the general statement in the claimant's petition that she is in necessitous circumstances, and that the rate now allowed her is insufficient for her support.

The further statement in the petition that her husband's death "was caused prematurely by his endeavor to comply with unusual, disrespectful, and indefinite orders," to go to League Island navy-yard, certainly does not in all its bearings furnish conclusive proof that his widow's pension should be increased beyond that furnished others in her situation.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 23, 1887.

VETO MESSAGE—WILLIAM H. MORHISER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 5877, entitled "An act for the relief of William H. Morhiser."

This beneficiary, though apparently not regularly enlisted in the military service of the country during the time covered by this bill for his relief, performed military duty, was captured, and imprisoned. No technicality should be interposed in considering this bill to prevent the receipt by him of the same pay and allowances awarded under like circumstances to soldiers regularly enlisted.

But this bill proposes to appropriate for the benefit of this claimant such sum as pay and allowances as would be allowed a private of cavalry from November 30, 1863, to January 1, 1865. It appears from the records of the War Department that he has already been paid for at least two months of that time.

The bill also provides that there shall also be allowed to the claimant such additional pay and allowances, as commutation of rations and so forth, as were allowed prisoners of war, from July 30, 1864, to January 1, 1865. The records disclose the fact that he has been allowed commutation of rations from July 30, 1864, to December 11, 1864.

As the purpose of this bill, as gathered from the report of the committee to whom it was referred, appears to be to secure for the claimant therein named compensation "at the rate at which other soldiers in the same situation were paid," and as he seems already to have received a considerable part of the compensation provided for in the bill, I am led to suppose that a mistake has been made in framing the same.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 23, 1887.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I desire to ask if this bill is privileged whether it goes to the committee or not, to be called up at any time?

The SPEAKER. It is, as the Chair has heretofore held.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. That bill was not reported from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, but from the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I ask its reference to the proper committee.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not observe what committee had reported the bill, but it will be referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

VETO MESSAGE—LOREN BURRITT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. TAULBEE, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 8002, entitled "An act to increase the pension of Loren Burritt."

The beneficiary named in this bill enlisted in October, 1863, and in December of that year was mustered in as major of the Eighth Regiment United States colored troops, was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, and very badly wounded in February, 1864, and was mustered out with his regiment November 10, 1865.

His condition at the present time is most pitiable, and his helplessness is such that he needs the constant care and assistance of others. He was obliged to give up business about the year 1873.

In 1866 he was pensioned for his wound, which was in the right leg; and such pension has been increased from time to time until he is now in the receipt of $72 per month, the highest pension allowed under general laws. This rate was awarded him under a law passed in 1880, increasing from $50 to $72 per month the pensions of those who were rendered permanently and totally helpless, so that they required the regular and personal attendance of another.

On the 30th day of June, 1886, there were 1,009 persons on the rolls receiving this rate of pension.

This bill was reported upon adversely by the House Committee on Pensions; and they, while fully acknowledging the distressing circumstances surrounding the case, felt constrained to adverse action, on the ground, as stated in the language of their report, that "there are many cases just as helpless and requiring as much attention as this one, and were the relief asked for granted in this instance it might reasonably be looked for in all."

No man can check, if he would, the feeling of sympathy and pity aroused by the contemplation of utter helplessness as the result of patriotic and faithful military service. But in the midst of all this, I can not put out of mind the soldiers in this condition who were privates in the ranks, who sustained the utmost hardships of war, but who, because they were privates, and in the humble walks of life, are not so apt to share in special favors of Congressional action. I find no reason why this beneficiary should be singled out from his class, except it be that he was a lieutenant-colonel instead of a private.

I am aware of a precedent for the legislation proposed, which is furnished by an enactment of the last session of Congress, to which I assented, as I think improvidently; but I am certain that exact equality and fairness in the treatment of our veterans is after all more just, beneficent, and useful than unfair discrimination in favor of officers, or the special benefit born of sympathy in individual cases.

I am constrained therefore to agree with the House Committee on Pensions in their views of this bill.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 23, 1887.

SALARIES OF JUDGES, UNITED STATES MARSHALS, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury in relation to salaries of additional judges in Alabama and California and salaries of United States marshals for the fiscal year 1887, and statements and estimates of appropriations therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with a letter from the Attorney-General, a statement of unsettled claims for which additional appropriations are required; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

STORAGE OF SILVER, ETC.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of an appropriation for two additional clerks in the office of the United States assistant treasurer in the city of New York, and also an estimate of an appropriation for the storage of silver; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TAMPA, FLA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 2992) to make Tampa, Fla., a port of entry; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida. I ask unanimous consent of the House that I may be permitted to make a brief statement in reference to this bill, and to request that it be considered now. This bill has passed the Senate. A similar bill has been considered by the Committee on Commerce of the House and reported favorably, and the necessity for the passage of the bill is very urgent. As will be seen from the report of the committee of the House last summer, the Postmaster-General made a mail contract for the carriage of the United States mails from Tampa and Key West to Havana and return. This mail is now being run in connection with the fast mail on the Atlantic Coast Line.

In addition to this mail line, there is also a weekly line from New Orleans to Tampa, Key West, and Havana, and a semi-monthly line from Tampa to the Bahamas.

Another company has offered to put on a steam line from Tampa to Aspinwall, and several business houses have also proposed to put on good steamers to ply between Tampa and Central American and West India ports. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida asks unanimous consent that this bill be now considered. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the port of Tampa, Hillsborough County, Florida, be, and the same is hereby, made a port of entry.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3268) to amend an act approved June 15, 1882, changing the boundaries of the fourth collection district of Virginia; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I ask unanimous consent to substitute for this bill and put upon its passage the corresponding House bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the regular order.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3300) to provide for the judicial determination of the rights of the United States in lands granted to the State of Florida for the purpose of aiding in the construction of railroads, under an act of Congress approved May 17, 1856, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STRAIT. Does not the bill properly go to the Committee on Public Lands?

The SPEAKER. It provides for the judicial determination of certain questions. Does the gentleman desire it to go to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. STRAIT. I do.

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee on the Public Lands.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 103) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to cause 7,500 copies of the map of the United States and Territories to be printed; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the joint resolution (S. R. 108) providing for the sale of public documents; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10072) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other pruposes, with a message from the Senate requesting a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House insist upon its disagreement and agree to the conference requested.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. RANDALL, Mr. FORNEY, and Mr. RYAN.

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 10395) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, with Senate amendments.

Mr. BRAGG. I ask unanimous consent that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill and amendments will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. BRADY said: I withdraw the objection I made to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia withdraws his objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin to concur in the Senate amendments to the Military Academy appropriation bill. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 14, strike out "two" and insert "five."

Page 3, line 16, strike out "two" and insert "five."

Page 8, after line 11, insert "for the erection of a gymnasium for cadets and for repairs and alterations of the present gymnasium building, $35,000, to be immediately available."

The SPEAKER. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. The reading of the amendments does not indicate the changes made. I ask that they be read in connection with the context.

Mr. BRAGG. I think I can explain the effect of the amendments in less time than it would take to read them in connection with the text of the bill.

The first two amendments provide for an increase of salary of two clerks at West Point from $1,200 to $1,500 a year. The Committee on Military Affairs do not think at this stage of the session that it is wise for us to haggle over the sum of $600 on a general appropriation bill. The third amendment provides for the construction and erection of a gymnasium. That has been recommended year after year. The board of visitors last year made a special examination in reference to that subject and in January the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs went to West Point for the express purpose of examining the subject to see if the improvement is of actual necessity. Upon his return it was recommended to the Committee on Military Affairs, and as the appropriation bill had passed the House, the Senate committee, by a vote of the Military Committee of the House, were requested to insert that recommendation in the bill as an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would be glad to inquire how the aggregate amount appropriated in this bill compares with the appropriations for the current year.

Mr. BRAGG. This bill, with the amendments, exceeds the appropriation for the current year about $134,000; at least I think that is about the amount, speaking from memory. That increase consists in the construction of quarters which have been recommended year after year for the residence of the troops that are there stationed, which are now in a tumble-down building; for the repair of Government workshops, which are now almost uninhabitable, and for the repairs and refitting of the Academy building, which came very near being destroyed by fire last year by reason of its imperfect construction.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONCURRENT RESOLUTIONS FOR PRINTING.

The Speaker also laid before the House resolutions of the Senate, in which the concurrence of the House was requested; which were severally referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

For printing a compilation of the laws of the United States in reference to the construction of bridges over the navigable waters, including the laws of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress;

For printing the report of Lieut. Henry T. Allen of his explorations in Alaska;

For printing the Flags of all Nations, prepared, by order of the Secretary of the Navy, by the Bureau of Navigation; and

For printing 4,000 additional copies of Wharton's Digest of International Law.

BRANCH SOLDIERS' HOME.

The SPEAKER announced as conferees on the part of the House on the bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains Mr. BRAGG, Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, and Mr. NEGLEY.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN ILLINOIS.

The SPEAKER. In House bill No. 367 an error was committed by inserting the words "United States district attorney" instead of the word "clerk." The bill has been sent to the President, and if there be no objection the Chair will lay before the House the resolution which the Clerk will now read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding the terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection this resolution will be considered as agreed to, and the Clerk will be directed to communicate it to the Senate.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season; and

A bill (H. R. 2539) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange property purchased at Abingdon, Va., as a site for a public building, for more suitable property, and for other purposes.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday afternoon it was agreed by the Committee of the Whole considering the Post-Office appropriation bill, or the Senate amendments thereto, that at 12 o'clock to-day we should take a vote in the House on the recommendations of the committee. It is so near that hour now that I think it well to call attention to the matter and to ask that the vote be taken at this time instead of at the hour appointed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] desires to call up a privileged matter which will occupy a portion of the time between now and 12 o'clock.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I will not insist on my request.

CONTESTED ELECTION CASE—KIDD VS. STEELE.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for consideration at this time, as a privileged matter, the resolutions reported from the Committee on Elections in the contested-election case of Kidd vs. Steele.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Meredith H. Kidd was not elected a Representative in the Forty-ninth Congress from the eleventh district of Indiana, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That George W. Steele was duly elected such Representative, and is entitled to retain his seat.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, there is no opposition to this report, and I therefore demand the previous question upon the adoption of the resolutions.

The previous question was ordered, and the resolutions were agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolutions were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EXPENSES OF GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WILSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations to submit a privileged report, and to ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The SPEAKER. The report will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10802) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend non-concurrence in all of the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. WILSON. I move the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON] asks unanimous consent that the report be considered at this time. Is there objection?

Mr. BURROWS. I desire to ask the gentleman whether the committee recommend non-concurrence in all the Senate amendments?

Mr. WILSON. They do.

The report was adopted.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the order made yesterday for the taking of the vote on the Post-Office appropriation bill be vacated, that the vote be taken now, and that as soon as that vote is taken the House proceed to consider House bill No. 10457.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the Chair will proceed to take the vote on the Post-Office appropriation bill, and after that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] can call up the bill to which he refers.

Mr. BURROWS. It was agreed yesterday that the vote on the Post-Office bill should be taken at 12 o'clock to-day. Some gentlemen who desire to vote upon it are still absent, expecting to be here at 12 o'clock, and they might possibly lose their votes if the course suggested should be adopted.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] objects.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman to object.

Mr. BURROWS. I am informed that a gentleman whom I had in view in asking that the vote be delayed is now present. I therefore make no objection to the vote being taken now.

Mr. DUNHAM. I object.

Mr. JAMES. I have a little matter that will occupy ten minutes. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. MATSON. I call up for consideration the veto message of the President of the United States which was postponed until to-day.

Mr. BLOUNT. I trust I may be allowed to make a statement. I hope the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] will not object to letting the vote upon the Post-Office appropriation bill go on now. We are in the closing hours of the session, and these appropriation bills ought to be expedited as much as possible. There is really no question except on a single proposition. I beg the gentleman from Illinois not to object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois, as the Chair understands, does not withdraw his objection. [Cries of "Regular order."]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Can we not have the call of committees?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] calls up a privileged matter which was postponed until to-day.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Yesterday afternoon it was agreed by unanimous consent that the previous question should be considered as ordered upon the amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill, and that the vote should be taken at 12 o'clock to-day.

The SPEAKER. But it is not yet 12 o'clock; and the gentleman from Illinois objects to taking the vote before that time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am aware of that; but my inquiry is this: Suppose we should now begin the consideration of the vetoed pension bill, will the House when 12 o'clock arrives be called on, under the operation of the previous question, to vote upon the amendments to the Post-Office appropriation bill?

The SPEAKER. The previous question, according to the agreement as shown by the record, is considered as ordered, and at 12 o'clock, unless the House refuses to consider the matter, that bill would come up.

Mr. BLAND. I move that the House take a recess until 12 o'clock.

Mr. BLOUNT. I appeal to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] to withdraw his objection.

Mr. BURROWS. Allow me a word. There are four amendments of the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill. Suppose we proceed with the consideration of the first three, and by the time we reach the fourth, the only one on which there is any contest, 12 o'clock will have arrived.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed at this time with the consideration of the first, second, and third amendments of the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the previous question on the amendments.

The SPEAKER. The record shows that the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then I ask a vote on the first amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon concurring in the first amendment of the Senate, which will be read.

The first amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1, after line 16, insert:
"And the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to rent a suitable building for use of the branch of the Washington city post-office known as Station C, at a rate not exceeding $1,000 per annum, until further action of Congress."

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee recommend concurrence in this amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

On page 1, after the last amendment, insert the following:
"To pay rent of building for use of the Washington city post-office, at a rate not exceeding $5,000 per annum, $5,000."

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee recommend that this amendment be concurred in.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

After the words "for free-delivery service, $5,522,500," insert:
"Provided, That no boxes for the collection of mail matter by carriers shall be placed inside of any building except a public building, or a building which is freely open to the public during business hours, or a railroad station."

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee recommend concurrence.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 138, noes 8.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, are we entitled to have tellers on this vote?

The SPEAKER. If the point be made that no quorum has voted, the vote must be taken by tellers.

Mr. BURROWS. I trust my friend will not make that point, but allow the fourth amendment to be read.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Very well; I presume that will consume the time till 12 o'clock.

The result of the vote was announced.

So the third amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the votes by which the first, second, and third amendments of the Senate were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The fourth and last amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

After line 22, on page 3, insert the following:
"For the transportation of foreign mails by American built and registered steamships, to secure the greater frequency and regularity in dispatch and a greater speed in the carriage of such mails to Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the Republics of Uruguay and Paraguay, and other Southern and Central American republics, $500,000; and the Postmaster-General is authorized to make, after due advertisement for proposals, such contract or contracts with such American steamships, for a term of not less than five years, and at a rate of compensation not exceeding for each outward trip $1 per nautical mile of the distance in the most direct and feasible sailing course between the terminal points, as shall be found expedient and desirable to secure the ends above set forth; but every such contract shall be subject to be modified or annulled by act of Congress. One of the lines of steamships to carry the mails provided for in this act shall be required to sail to and from a seaport of the Gulf of Mexico or the Mississippi River."

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee have recommended non-concurrence in this amendment. As the question is an important one, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURROWS. I move to concur in the amendment of the Senate.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no objection to the question being taken on that motion, as the form of the question is not important.

The SPEAKER. The motion to concur has priority over the proposition for non-concurrence. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] moves that the House concur in this amendment.

Mr. BURROWS. I will say to our friends on the other side that I want to carry out strictly the agreement; and there will be no further vote asked for—only this one vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken on concurring in the Senate amendment; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 130, nays 157, not voting 31; as follows:

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

During the roll-call,

Mr. KING asked, by unanimous consent, to dispense with the reading of the names.

Mr. KELLEY objected.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. CANDLER with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. CLARDY with Mr. REED.

Mr. BOUTELLE with Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DAVENPORT.

On this vote:

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. HANBACK. Mr. CLEMENTS would vote "no" if Mr. HANBACK were present.

Mr. CROXTON with Mr. CANNON.

Mr. WINANS with Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

Mr. SADLER with Mr. SYMES.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. LAIRD.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BLOUNT moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move we ask with the Senate for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. RIGGS, and Mr. BINGHAM as conferees on the part of the House.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A messsage from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture and create an executive department to be known as the department of agriculture and labor, with amendments, in which concurrence was requested.

The message further announced the Senate had requested a conference with the House of Representatives on the said bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. MILLER, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas as conferees on its part.

The message further announced that the President having returned to the Senate the bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers, with his objections thereto, on reconsideration, by a vote of two-thirds, had passed the bill over the veto of the President and had communicated the bill and President's objections to the House for its action thereon.

DEPENDENT SOLDIERS PENSION BILL.

Mr. MATSON. I now call up for consideration the veto message of the President on House bill 10457, for the relief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support.

Before proceeding with the debate it is quite important the House should agree as to the limit of debate. I therefore ask that debate be closed at half past 3, when the previous question shall be considered as ordered, one hour and a half to be given to those who favor the bill—that time to be controlled by myself; the other hour and a half to be occupied by those opposed to the bill—that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

Mr. MORRILL. I hope we will not limit the debate to that short time. We ought to have at least four hours. To allow the debate to run until half past 4 would only give us four hours.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Let us have at least one hour on this side.

Mr. CONGER. Certainly; on a matter of so much importance as this I trust there will be no attempt to limit debate to an unreasonably short time.

Mr. MATSON. Then, if it meet the views of all gentlemen, I will ask consent that the debate be closed and the previous question be considered as ordered at half past 4 o'clock. [Cries of "That is right!"]

Mr. COX, of North Carolina. I object.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Then I move to amend by making it half past 4.

The SPEAKER. There is no motion; simply a request for unanimous consent.

Mr. MORRISON. Say 4 o'clock.

Mr. MATSON. Then I ask unanimous consent, as a compromise which I believe will meet the views of all parties, that the debate be closed and the previous question be considered as ordered at 4 o'clock, the time intervening between now and then to be equally divided between the friends and opponents of the bill, the time in behalf of the bill to be under my control, and the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] to control the time on the other side.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. MATSON. I now yield three-quarters of an hour to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. MORRILL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER].

Mr. CONGER. Mr. Speaker, in the brief time allotted me I shall not attempt to answer in detail the criticisms of the Executive. I am content that the very elaborate report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions shall go to the country as a free and complete refutation of all the pretended excuses furnished by the President for his veto. But as a member of that committee, which has devoted as many hours of faithful unremitting service to the matters given it in charge as any committee of this House, it may not be inappropriate for me to say that the bill under consideration had, when before the committee, my hearty approval of all its provisions, so far as they went; though, in my judgment, the bill should have been of much broader scope and afforded a much larger measure of relief. It had my cordial support and my vote when on its passage, and, Mr. Speaker, I have discovered nothing since, either in the hyperbolic criticisms of the President or elsewhere, to weaken my faith in the merits of this legislation, nor to shake my confidence in the belief that the objects sought can be obtained by the provisions of this bill, fairly and sensibly construed.

I believed I was right then, I am sure I am right now; and I shall cheerfully record my vote in favor of the passage of this just and humane measure, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Every objection, with a single exception, that the Executive urges against this bill will obtain with equal force against the Mexican pension bill, which was passed by this House on the same day and signed by him with such marvelous alacrity. This objection is, that so many years have not elapsed since the close of the war of the rebellion as since the close of the Mexican war. In the judgment of the President a sufficient number of the defenders of the flag and saviors of the Republic have not yet died off to warrant the Government, "economically administered," in granting this measure of relief, as the President said in his last annual message, to "those who, having served their country long and well, are now reduced to destitution and dependence."

Wait, the President says; wait, wait until the scythe of time has made broader openings in their ranks. Wait until their number is so reduced by destitution and death that the pensions granted will not so appallingly reduce the surplus.

This, Mr. Speaker, was the argument used by the leaders of the rebellion in justification of their inhuman barbarities against these same men when they were incarcerated in the prison-pens of Andersonville. Reduce their number, they said; reduce them by starvation, brutality, and death; it will then require less room to hold the remainder, and cost fewer dollars to care for and control them.

I am not ready to believe that the patriotic people of this country will ever indorse such an excuse as this or commend their chief ruler for suggesting it.

I have failed, Mr. Speaker, to discover any general opposition to the passage of this bill from any localities except the great money centers of the country and from the so-called Southern States. From those, on the one hand, who were enabled to make great fortunes out of the necessities of the times which made the beneficiaries of this act disabled and dependent, and on the other, from those who were responsible for the conflict in which the disabilities were incurred, and who, in fact, by shot and shell and prison-pens themselves inflicted the wounds and planted the diseases for which these pensions are to be granted.

Gentlemen, has it indeed come to this, that Wall street and the "solid South" are so instrumental in the election of the Chief Executive of this great nation as to be able to command him to give his approval to a measure largely to inure to the benefit of men who dishonored their country's flag and sought to destroy their Government, and at the same time constrain him to withhold his approval from another measure for the relief of dependent heroes whose wounds, sufferings, and sacrifices saved the nation and made it great? Surely this can not be.

And yet, for this cruel veto, these localities are to-day resonant with plaudits for the President, and distinguished Representatives within the shadow of this Capitol gleefully boast that for this act alone the South will be solid for Cleveland in 1888. Still, because of this veto, unanswered must be the cries for aid from the poor mothers whose darling boys went down to death in the blood and carnage of dreadful war, and unrewarded patriotism must still totter on in shame and disgrace "over the hills to the poor-house."

Surely, Mr. Speaker, there is no politics in this measure; there should be none; nor should we be controlled by prejudices or by sentiment; but duty, stern duty, should lead and direct us.

For myself, I will yield to no man in my admiration for the courage of those mistaken men whose bravery I have witnessed on many a hard-fought field, nor shall any man go before me in sincere respect and esteem for the distinguished representatives of the "new South" who honestly desire the prosperity and advancement of our whole country; but I submit, sir, that it ill becomes the men who accumulated vast wealth for themselves out of the misfortunes of war, or the men who made pensions a necessity, to now assume absolutely to decree with what measure the bounty of this nation shall be distributed among its needy pensioners.

It is now no secret that the centers of great wealth in the North, the people of the South, and the President of the United States are opposed to all further general pension legislation for surviving Union soldiers. They believe the statute of limitation should now be raised against the Government's most sacred obligations. And so, Mr. Speaker, I desire to remind them here and now—and I recall the fact simply for their comfort and for their consolation—that the Union soldiers of the war of the rebellion are dying by whole brigades every year. Every twelve-month four thousand of them stack arms for the last time and answer to the last roll-call; so that but few years shall pass away until there will be left but a corporal's guard to show their wounds and ask for help. Why, at this rate they will soon, very soon, all have passed to that blessed bourne where pensions can give no aid, nor Presidential vetoes pain.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SAWYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a few remarks upon the bill under consideration, in part to defend it against the criticisms of the President, and in part to show that the objects sought to be gained by it are such as should commend themselves to the good judgment of all patriotic citizens of this country.

The first section provides for a change in the law granting a pension to dependent parents.

The law as it now stands provides that if any person entitled to a pension under the law shall die leaving no wife or child, "but has left or shall leave other relative or relatives, who were dependent upon him for support in whole or in part at the date of his death, such relative or relatives shall be entitled, in the following order of precedence, to receive the same pension," &c.: First, the mother; secondly, the father," &c. By this section dependence at time of death is essential.

Now, a very large per cent. of the bills introduced into this House during this Congress and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, of which I have the honor to be a member, were bills granting pensions to parents who were not in dependent circumstances at the date of the soldier's death, but are now in poor and dependent circumstances.

Such bills have been favorably reported by the committee, and with scarcely an exception have passed this House, and when submitted to the President have with scarcely an exception received his approval.

And during the last session it was on more than one occasion suggested on the floor of the House that a general law on this subject should be passed.

The bill known as the Weber bill was introduced into the last session of this Congress and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and, I think, reported back to the House favorably.

The Secretary of the Interior, on page 50 of his last annual report, speaking on this subject, says:

> In considering appeals from the decisions of the Pension Office I find some classes of cases of such peculiar hardships that I deem amendatory legislation advisable. Section 4707 limits the claim of dependence of an aged parent or a minor child, and fixes its initiative at the moment of time of death of a soldier on account of whose death the dependent is made pensionable.
> It seems to me to be a wiser rule and a more just one that when dependence has occurred in the natural order of events at a time subsequent to the death of the soldier on account of increasing years, or of misfortune, not contributed to by the beneficiary, the dependent pension should then have its foundation and beginning.

In accordance with this suggestion and with the action of this House, and believing it to be eminently just and proper, the first section of the bill was inserted therein.

The President makes no objection to this section, and I can conceive of no just or valid objections thereto.

As to the second section:

This section has been severely criticised by the President in his veto message, and by many of the leading newspapers of the country.

At the last session of this Congress members of the Committee on Invalid Pensions were appealed to by many brave soldiers, now poor, unable to work, dependent for support upon the charities of others, and many of them inmates of county poor or alms houses and cared for as paupers, and relief was asked for either by special or general legislation.

These appeals touched the sympathies of the committee. They did not believe that a grateful country, saved by the bravery, heroism, and sufferings of its heroic soldiers, should leave them when poor—not from their vicious habits or gross carelessness—and unable to work to be supported by the charities of others or live and die as paupers in public almshouses.

The Commissioner of Pensions appeared before this committee and advised with them on this subject; and caused an examination to be made to ascertain as far as possible the number of this class, and the result of his examination appears at page 6 of his last annual report. He gave as the number so receiving support nine thousand.

The Senate at its last session passed what is known as "the Blair bill," which provided for a system of graded pensions for disabilities incurred since the civil war. This bill came to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and they declined making a favorable report. One of the committee, however, a member from Ohio, introduced a bill containing substantially the provisions of this section, which received a favorable report and is now before the House. This was the last session.

The President in his last annual message spoke very strongly on this subject, as follows:

> Every patriotic heart responds to a tender consideration for those who, having served their country long and well, are reduced to destitution and dependence, not as an incident of their service, but with advancing age or through sickness or misfortune. We are all tempted by the contemplation of such a condition to supply relief, and are often impatient of the limitations of public duty. Yielding to no one in the desire to indulge this feeling of consideration, I can not rid myself of the conviction that if these ex-soldiers are to be relieved, they and their cause are entitled to the benefit of an enactment under which relief may be claimed as a right, and that such relief should be granted under the sanction of law, not in evasion of it; nor should such worthy objects of care, all equally entitled, be remitted to the unequal operation of sympathy, or the tender mercies of social and political influence with their unjust discriminations.

Now, at the commencement of this session the committee were again appealed to on this subject. Our convictions had been strengthened by reflection and consultation with our constituents, and believing religiously in the wisdom and justice of both these objects, I for one have no apologies to make for my vote on this bill either in the committee room or in the House.

I then and still believe that no more just and patriotic legislation has been had in this Congress, and when understood this bill will receive the approval of three-fourths of the people, at least of that section of the country which furnished the men most largely interested in it.

Now, what are the things made by this section absolutely requisite to obtaining a pension under it?

First. The claimants must have been in the service of the United States at least three months.

Second. They must have been "honorably discharged therefrom."

Third. They must be "dependent upon their daily labor for support."

Fourth. They must "be suffering from mental or physical disability."

Fifth. This disability must not "be the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness."

Sixth. The effect of such disability must be that "it incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support."

Seventh. "For such total inability to 'procure their own subsistence' by daily labor" this section provides, the other prerequisites being established, a pension at the rate of $12 per month, to commence from the date of filing the application, upon proof "that the disability then existed, and continue during the existence of the same in the degree herein provided."

I submit that the above contains a full statement of everything necessary to secure a pension.

In considering this section I wish to call the attention of the House to a distinction in the phraseology of this bill stating for what the pension is granted, and the phraseology of other statutes granting a pension to a soldier other than those for some specific thing, such as loss of arm or leg.

As, for instance, section 4692 of the Revised Statutes says:

> Be entitled to receive for a total disability or a permanent specific disability such pension, &c.

Section 4695:

> The pension for total disability shall be as follows.

I find no exception to the rule, that in the present law when it speaks of granting a pension to a soldier for other than specific disabilities, it speaks of granting a pension for a disibility and not for the effect of such disability.

While this section by its terms grants the pension for the effect or result of the disability, and not for the disability, it does not say shall be entitled to be placed on the list, &c., and be entitled to receive for such disability $12 per month, but it says shall be entitled "to receive for such 'total inability to procure subsistence by daily labor' $12 per month."

The specific thing for which the pension is granted is clearly, distinctly, and concisely stated. It is not for the disability, but for the effect or result of such disability as therein described.

Would not a person seeking a pension under this bill be required to show that in consequence of some disability "he was totally unable to procure his subsistence by his daily labor?"

If so, it seems to me that the criticism of the President is not a pertinent one when he says that "it is not probable that the words last quoted, 'such total disability to procure their subsistence by daily labor,' at all qualify the conditions prescribed in the preceding language of the section."

These words are used to describe a certain condition for which the pension is expressly given, and I submit that they not only qualify but absolutely control the other conditions prescribed in the preceding language of the section, and the requirement of these words must be complied with before a pension can be claimed or received, and this is rendered still more certain by the provision that the pension is to continue only during the existence of the disability "in the degree herein provided."

The President says "that in no case is there any grading of this proposed pension." I agree with him. But still I can see no greater difficulty in the Pension Office, by its rules and regulations, grading pensions under this section at less sums than $12 per month than it now has in grading a pension in cases of rheumatism and chronic diarrhea and similar disabilities, when the pension for total disability is $8 per month, so that the pensioner shall receive pensions in sums varying from $1 per month and upward.

I have been unable to find any law which expressly confers this power already exercised, and I am informed there is no such law, but that the same is done under the rules and regulations of the office.

But I agree with the President that this bill does not provide for grading rates. I do not understand that such was the intent of the framers of the bill. They intended to provide one simple and single rate of pension, for one simple, single effect of disability, namely, "total inability to procure subsistence by daily labor."

To suppose that the committees which reported this bill or the Congress which passed it intended to or supposed they had reported or passed a bill which by providing a pension of $12 per month for "total inability to procure the means of subsistence" by "daily labor," had reported or passed a bill which would grant a pension of $12 per month to a pensioner whose disabilities are so slight that they are now receiving only $1 per month; or to suppose that the committees which reported this bill or the Congress which passed it intended to or supposed they had reported or passed a bill which would grant a higher rate of pensions for disabilities that have been incurred since the war than the existing laws granted for similar disabilities that were incurred while in the line of duty and in the service, can not be regarded as either a compliment to their good sense or sound judgment. Such an intent would be unnatural and unreasonable, and we have no right to place such a meaning on the section unless its language is so clear and explicit as to permit no other construction.

The criticism of the President upon the provision of the section, that the disability must not be the result of the applicant's vicious habits or gross carelessness, it seems to me is not just. He says: "Practically this provision is not important. The attempt of the Government to escape the payment of a pension on such a plea would, of course, in a very large majority of instances and regardless of the merits of the case, prove a failure."

Under this bill this fact, like all other facts entitling the applicant to the pension, must be proved by him in the manner and in accordance with the "rules and regulations to be established by the Secretary of the Interior." This fact is a very simple one, and if true easy to be shown. On the proof of this fact the applicant holds the affirmative. He must furnish "due proof."

We have no right to presume that the applicant and the witnesses produced by him will commit perjury. And it is no compliment to the intelligence or virtue of the people to say that in a case of fraudulent application for a pension where the applicant was fraudulently claiming his disability not to be the result of vicious habits or gross carelessness, there would be "nearly universal willingness to help the individual as between him and the public Treasury, which goes very far to insure a state of proof in favor of the claimant."

The President also criticises the word "support," used in this section, and says:

> What is a support? Who is to determine whether a man earns it, or has it, or has it not? Is the Government to enter the houses of claimants for a pension, and after an examination of their circumstances settle those questions?

Had he forgotten that the pension law of 1818, granting a pension to the Revolutionary soldier, required the beneficiary "to be in need of assistance from his country for support?" Had he forgotten that the law granting a pension to dependent parents was conditioned on the fact that they were dependent on their sons for support, and that the Mexican pension bill which he has approved recognized dependency, which means dependency for support, if it means anything, and that each of these laws requires an examination and a decision of what is or is not a "support?" In view of this, it seems to me that this criticism loses its force. The question has been passed upon thousands of times at the Pension Office without any inquisitorial entrance to "the homes of claimants" or any unpleasant or difficult examination of their "surroundings."

Again, the President says that this section does not require of the claimant that he "should be without property," but only that "labor should be necessary to his support in some degree."

The section does say those "who are dependent upon their daily labor for support," and I can not see how a man who has property which he can sell, and from the proceeds of which he can support himself, can be said with any propriety to be "dependent upon his daily labor for support," so long as he remains the owner of the property or the proceeds thereof remain undisposed of.

Again, the President says:

> It is now proposed by the section under consideration to award a service pension to the soldiers of all wars in which the United States has been engaged, including of course the war of the rebellion.

I am surprised that the President should use this language. It in no sense awards a service pension, and it in no sense provides a pension to all soldiers.

Its benefits are confined to one single class—those who, being poor, are totally unable to provide for their subsistence by their own daily labor. It does not, as the Mexican pension bill may do, secure to a member of Congress a pension of $8 per month, although he is at the same time receiving a salary of $5,000 a year.

Again, the President says he—> can not believe that the vast peaceful army of Union soldiers, who having been disabled by the casualty of war justly regard the present pension-roll on which appear their names as a roll of honor, desire at this time and in the present exigency to be confounded with those who through such a bill as this are willing to be objects of simple charity, and to gain a place upon the pension-roll through alleged dependence.

Our pension-roll is a roll of honor, from the name of the distinguished and gallant Commissioner of Pensions, who receives for his wounds a pension none too high, down to the name of the humblest private soldier. No nation ever had a grander roll. It includes the names of brave soldiers and the widows and minor children of dead heroes, the widow of the firm, unyielding Thomas, the cool and determined Hancock, and to which I hope may soon be added the name of the widow of Logan, the most conspicuous civilian soldier of the Army, who, living, was the pride of his command, and now dead, his name is written in the heart of every Grand Army man in the nation.

But does the President suppose that any soldier whose name is on this grand list would prefer to see his brother comrade poor and dependent from no fault of his, totally unable to procure his subsistence by his daily labor, suffering for the necessities of life, living an object of charity, or as a pauper in some almshouse, rather than that a grateful nation, in recognition of his services as a soldier and his undeserved poverty, should place him on the same list and grant him the small sum provided by this section? I think it an insult to every soldier so to believe.

The President seems to think that making this provision for the deservedly poor and needy soldier in some way is to be regarded as a reflection upon the other soldiers of the Army. Was it so regarded when in 1818 a pension was granted to the soldiers of our Revolutionary war, those men who by their courage and sufferings made our national existence possible, a law which required every beneficiary under it to be "one who is, or hereafter by reason of his reduced circumstances in life shall be, in need of assistance from his country for support?"

Was this bill then regarded as objectionable by any one? Did any other Revolutionary soldier feel that to any extent his reputation had been lowered by this provision? No. Some of us can well remember how, when but very few of this noble army were left, with how much respect they were treated and the pension they received was regarded as a most just and honorable recognition of their worth. And the time will come in the not far-distant future when the remnant left of the brave soldiers who saved the nation will be held and treated with the same respect.

Will it be regarded as any reflection upon the soldiers of the war with Mexico whose names are now on the pension-roll that the first one to receive a pension under the Mexican pension bill just passed should be an ex-member of the United States Senate, having received as such a salary of over $5,000 a year, who, although a brave officer in the Mexican war, is placed on the roll neither on account of disabilities or necessity, showing that under this law the first one to be benefited was a man who for nearly four years endeavored to destroy the Government that now makes this provision in his favor?

The President speaks of "the present exigency." I do not know what he means by this. He can not refer to our ability to pay, for our National Treasury is full to overflowing, and the great question is how we may reduce our national income.

I shall not speak of the cost of this bill. I fully believe, however, that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions is nearly correct when he estimates the probable cost to be about $5,000,000. This country is fully able to pay all that justice may require.

The simple question is, what ought the Government to do for this class of soldiers? This being determined, the country is fully able to do it without creating any burden that will be felt by the people.

Let us compare this bill with the Mexican pension bill which the President approved, and the provisions of which we may assume he also approves. The following are the substantial requirements of this bill:

> Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men, including marines, militia, and volunteers, of the military and naval services of the United States, who, being duly enlisted, actually served sixty days with the Army or Navy of the United States in Mexico, or on the coast or frontier thereof, en route thereto, in the war with that nation, or were actually engaged in a battle in said war, and were honorably discharged, and to such other officers and soldiers and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in said war, and the surviving widow of such officers and enlisted men: Provided, That such widows have not remarried: Provided, That every such officer, enlisted man, or widow who is or may become sixty-two years of age, or who is or may become subject to any disability or dependency equivalent to some cause prescribed or recognized by the pension laws of the United States as a sufficient reason for the allowance of a pension, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act; but it shall not be held to include any person not within rule of age or disability or dependence herein defined, or who incurred such disability while in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aiding or abetting the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

Under this bill only sixty days' service is required. There is no "requirement of actual engagement with an enemy in battle" or "any subjection to any of the actual dangers of war." It is sufficient if he actually served in "Mexico or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto."

If the soldier had left his home, and was in the place of rendezvous, and there discharged, he was en route. It grants to every soldier of the age of sixty-two years or upward a pension of $8 per month without any reference to his necessities or pecuniary condition. It grants to every soldier now under sixty-two years of age who has any pensionable disability under our present law a fixed pension of $8 per month, although the disability was not the result of his service, but is the result of his own misconduct since the war, and although for a similar disability received in the line of duty in the service the Union soldier might not receive a pension of more than $1 per month.

It grants to the widow of a Mexican soldier the sum of $8 per month, without reference to the cause of her husband's death, while the widow of a Union soldier must show, as a necessary prerequisite to her pension, that her husband's death was the result of his service in the Army.

The widow of a Mexican soldier is entitled to this pension even though her husband was killed in battle, a soldier in the confederate army, endeavoring to destroy the same Government that makes this generous provision for his widow.

If either bill is objectionable and deserving a Presidential veto, it seems to me clear that it is the latter one.

Why in the light of this veto message the President should have approved the latter bill I am unable to see. The character of the votes in the House upon these two bills is remarkable.

For the vetoed bill every Representive voting from what are known by the old distinction as the Northern States, with the exception of three, gave an affirmative vote, while of the 76 votes in the negative, 73 were from the South, 32 of whom had been in the confederate service.

As to the Mexican bill, there were only 5 votes cast against it, 2 Northern Democrats, 2 Northern Republicans, and 1 Southern Democrat. It is true that a larger proportion of the benefits derived from the Mexican bill would be scattered throughout the South, for it furnished 66 per cent. of the men who enlisted in that war.

The President's criticisms as to the use of fraud and perjury in obtaining pensions and the willingness of the people to help the soldier in his application without reference to the merits of his claim are grossly unjust as it regards the soldiers and is an unjust attack upon the people.

It would be strange if among the hundreds of thousands of soldiers there were no bad men, or if among the thousands of claims no improper ones had been made. If it were not so it would show a state of moral perfection that has never elsewhere been found; but I submit that the unqualified insinuations contained in the message are unjustifiable.

We have a large pension-list, but we had the largest army known in modern history. They were opposed by an army of brave men, nearly as large as their own, led by able officers. Our men were by the thousands killed in battle and died in camps and hospitals. They were exposed in camps and on the march to hardships, exposure, and malaria.

A pension-list, if one exists at all, must necessarily be large, but the beneficiaries of this are scattered through every State of the Union.

In all of the 2,647 counties of the United States, except 118, pensions are being paid.

I have prepared from the last report of the Commissioner of Pensions the following statement of the number of pensioners and the amount received in each of the States and Territories of the Union:

Table showing the number of pensioners on the rolls in each State on the 3d day of June, 1886, and amount disbursed per month during the quarter ending June 3, 1886.

Which shows that the beneficiaries under the proposed legislation would come from all portions of the country, and the money thereby paid would be distributed through every State and Territory.

By previous legislation we have provided for all those soldiers whose disabilities can be shown to be the result of their military service, although I most sincerely believe that in some instances the amount granted is altogether too small. We have provided for the dependent parents of sons who died in the service when such parents were dependent at the time of their son's death.

But there are many parents who lost their sons in the service who at that time were in health and able to support themselves, but by reason of advanced age and inability to work, and by the ordinary misfortunes of life, they are now poor and needy. Their brave boys, given by them to their country, would, if now living, be impelled by filial and moral obligations, and in my State by express legal obligation, to support and care for them. For such as these the country ought to provide, and to such this bill does bring relief.

All through our country we see men of good character, men who served their country faithfully in the hour of its necessity, men who are dependent upon their own daily labor for support, men who have become disabled by the effect of age or sickness or misfortune, not the result of vicious habits or gross carelessness, to such an extent that they are now totally unable to procure their own subsistence by daily labor, living upon the charities of their friends or of their brethren of the Grand Army post to which they belong, or living as paupers in some almshouse. For such the country ought to make some provision.

For myself, I am not willing to see such a soldier as is described in this section, "according to its obvious meaning and import," so living or supported so long as by my vote or influence I can do anything to secure what seems to me to be simple justice.

I know a man in my own district who served during the whole war faithfully and bravely, and was honorably discharged. Immediately on his discharge it was noticed that his health was failing and his mind giving away, and he became so weakened in mind that he was unable to furnish or aid in furnishing evidence necessary to procure a pension under existing laws, and he is now living in the county almshouse a pauper, while his poor wife is obliged to support herself and her child by washing.

To all such men as can establish by "due proof," under the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, their right to a pension under this second section, I am willing a pension should be granted.

I have so much confidence in the fairness and wisdom of the Secretary of the Interior that I know he will establish such rules and regulations which, while they will secure justice to all worthy applicants, will at the same time protect the Government against fraud and imposition.

I have so much confidence in the Commissioner of Pensions and his able assistants that I believe he will, in administering this law under the rules and regulations so established, be able to secure its benefits to the worthy claimants, and at the same time fully protect the Government against fraudulent and unworthy applicants.

The name and residence of every soldier on the pension-roll is known in the Pension Office, and the four hundred special examiners of this office, scattered throughout the country, can, by personal examination of every application, see that the provisions of this law and the rules and regulations of the office are fully complied with and the Government fully protected against fraud and imposition.

Since the preparation of these remarks my attention has been called to an editorial in the Philadelphia Times of the date of February 23, 1887, a copy of which I found on my table yesterday morning. I know not by whom these papers were distributed or the secret influence which led to this. Whether behind this article there is some secret influential power seeking to affect or control the action of this House I know not. Whether the lobbies of this House are swarming with parties seeking to "manipulate" the defeat of this bill, I know not; but this I do know, that some of the statements of this article are so palpably false that they demand notice.

The article says:

> The lobbies of Congress and of the Washington hotels are swarming with the importunate pension sharks who conceived and manipulated the passage of this monument of reproach to the honest soldiers of the land; and all the thousands of political demagogues and mercenary hangers-on of the noblest soldiery of the earth are ceaseless and boisterous in their demand that the nation shall stamp its veterans as a dependent class and cast upon them the shame of pauperism.

As a member of the committee reporting this bill I have some right to speak, and I say that no "pension sharks" or agents, no "political demagogues" no mercenary "hangers-on" have ever appeared before our committee or sought to influence its action, nor has one of either of these classes spoken to me on this subject; and I have been assured by other gentlemen of the committee that such has been their experience.

I know nothing of the Washington hotels, but if the lobbies of Congress are swarming with the classes spoken of I can only say I do not know them and I have not consciously seen them. So far as I have any personal knowledge on this subject, these pension agents take no interest in this bill.

The fees which they can receive under it are limited to $5. Certainly a sum too small to induce them to swarm around the hotels and the lobbies of Congress to manipulate the passage of this bill. This whole statement is an exaggeration and an unworthy appeal to the prejudice of the ignorant, and I assume that every member of this House knows it to be untrue.

This article further states:

> Common justice to the true soldiers of the Republic demands the defeat of the dependent pension bill. None can measure its cost, and none can measure the flood-tide of fraud and shame it will inflict upon the nation and its veterans. There are not less than one hundred and seventy-five thousand present pensioners who could become new pensioners under the pending measure, and thus add hundreds of millions to the aggregate pensions of the war.

Does any intelligent person at all familiar with our pension laws for one moment believe that there are "one hundred and seventy-five thousand present pensioners" who can become new pensioners under the pending measure. There is not a single pensioner now on the roll for any disability, entitling him to a pension at the rate of $8 per month, or for a less sum, that can claim a pension under this bill unless he can show that he is so physically disabled that he is incapacitated for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render him unable to earn a support, to be totally unable to procure his subsistence by daily labor. And if he can prove himself to be in such a condition he can under the present pension laws, under which he is now receiving his pension, claim and receive a pension at a higher rate than that given by this bill.

Again this article says:

> They not only could do so, but they are asked to do so by the direct invitation of the Government to idleness and dependence; and with pension sharks and successful pension frauds in every community, there would be not less than 350,000 new pensioners, adding $40,000,000 to our annual outlay for many years to come.

Can any intelligent person believe that this statement even approximately approaches the truth?

There were at the close of the year ending June 30 last nearly 366,000 names on the pension-rolls, of which 265,854 were army invalids.

Does any one for a moment believe that the passage of this bill would add 350,000 new pensioners to the roll—a number nearly as large as the sum total of all the names now on the roll, and nearly 100,000 larger than the total number of army invalids now on the roll?

I appeal to every member of this House; think over the soldiers in the circle of your acquaintance, call to mind those who are now receiving pensions and then tell me whether, besides these, there is a larger number of soldiers coming within the provisions of this bill fairly construed.

If there is such a number, what a sad commentary on the terrible effects of the military service of our noble soldiers. It would present an almost unanswerable argument in favor of the claim made by many that a pension should be granted to every soldier.

But sufficient for this article. It is an appeal to prejudice, ignorance, and avarice. It is unjust to the soldier and is opposed to the dictates of patriotism. It is false in its statement of facts and unsound in its conclusions. I would not say that the writer of it is a political demagogue, but I do say that it is such an article as a political demagogue, inspired with contempt for our soldiers, would write.

And now, Mr. Speaker, in closing I wish to say that I believe this law to be a wise and just one. That its aim and meaning can be easily understood, that its execution is not difficult, and that it is demanded by the best sentiment of the people. It met my approval at first, and the more thought and examination I have given its consideration, the more my conviction of its wisdom has been strengthened, and it appears to me clear that the bill should become a law.

We are now receiving, and shall continue to receive from all sections of the country, from the common people, not from the organs of the capitalist at our financial centers, but from that large and, in the end, that controlling class in our country, the common people, strong expressions in favor of this bill, and appeals to secure its passage.

And in concluding, I would say that from the veto of the President, and from the decision of this House, if it shall refuse to pass this bill, I appeal to the people of the United States, believing that their sense of justice will, in the end, lead them to favor what is right, and knowing that from their decision there is no appeal.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER].

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, we are this day to choose whether as representatives of the American people we will stand by the brave men of '61 and '65 who preserved us a nation, who are dependent upon their daily labor for a support, and who by reason of old age, disease, or misfortune are unable to earn a living, or whether we will stand by the President who refuses to sign a bill that is intended to keep these old veterans out of the almshouses of the country. This nation should blush to see one of the least of these, its defenders, the inmate of the county poor-house, or his widow begging bread. As these men when their step was firm did not hesitate to cast aside party ties in the defense of the nation's life in the day of her extremity, let us this day turn a deaf ear to the dictates of party and by our votes show the nation's gratitude toward these destitute and dependent veterans who with their comrades, living and dead, by their valor, trials, and sufferings dedicated every inch of American soil to freedom and strengthened the Union of the States established by the fathers.

As for me, rather than do an injustice to these old soldiers I would sink my party. It is, I fear, popular in some quarters to magnify what the nation has done for its defenders and at the same time belittle what they did for the nation. There are persons now living who were young able-bodied men during that gigantic struggle for the life of the nation, who remained at home, preferring the ease, comforts, and pleasures of the drawing-room or the club to the trials, privations, and dangers of the camp, the march, or the battlefield; they then turned a deaf ear to the cry of patriotism, as now to the cry of distress from the old and destitute soldiers of the Republic, who left the farm, the bench, the desk, the office, the school-room, the college, the pulpit, and went forth as the American volunteers, imbued with the heroism of an Arnold Winkelried and the dauntless courage of a Marshal Ney—the chosen apostles of liberty, union, and the rights of man—then they were acclaimed as patriots; now, if, broken in health, old and destitute, unable to earn a living by manual labor, upon which they are dependent for daily bread, they venture to ask a small pittance from the General Government they are denounced as paupers and beggars.

In olden time "there arose up a new king over Egypt which knew not Joseph." History repeats itself. Let others do as they may, I will stand by my comrades in their distress and want. Their cause shall be my cause. This veto message, Mr. Speaker, in my judgment, does violence to the sense of justice of the American people and I trust does not voice the sentiments of any political party or of the brave men who fought on the side of the confederacy. It may reflect the sentiments and meet the approval of those "who were in favor of the war, but against its prosecution," and who, like Job's war-horse, "snuffed the battle from afar."

Certain it is that the members of this House, the representatives of the people, expressed their approval of the bill under consideration by a vote of 180 for to 76 against. Then, I admit, it was fair to assume from the language used in the President's last annual message that he not only favored but was anxious for legislation that would keep the wolf from the door of dependent soldiers and sailors of the late war. Now it is known that he regards such legislation as dangerous and mischievous. He is strong and powerful—the beneficiaries in this bill weak and helpless; he has favors to bestow, they naught but their blessing. How far these and other considerations may influence members to vote for or against the bill the result will tell. The issue joined between the House and the Executive is sharp and well defined.

A vote to sustain the veto is a vote to leave two classes, to supply whom with the necessaries of life was the humane purpose of the framers of the bill, in abject poverty. They are—

First. Dependent parents whose son was killed in battle or has died from wounds or injury received, or disease contracted while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty. The soldier having left neither widow nor minor child, such parents being "without other present means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for their support."

Second. All honorably discharged soldiers or sailors who have served not less than three months in any war in which the United States has been engaged, "who are dependent upon their daily labor for support," and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering "from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support," and who can make due proof of the fact, then "for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor," they are placed on the list of invalid pensioners and given $12 a month. While the President does not approve of aiding the dependent parents named in the first section it is against the second class that he has poured out his vials of wrath.

This measure would seem to be humane and just, but neither its humanity or justice commends it to the Chief Executive.

No defect in the bill is so small as to escape his "microscopic eye," and when found he has applied to it the magnifying-glass. He has no sympathy with the proposed legislation or those it intended to relieve. He is more concerned in reducing the surplus revenues of the Government than in legislation that shall keep from beggary the men who rendered that surplus revenue possible.

If this bill—

Says the President—

should become a law * * * I am thoroughly convinced that further efforts to reduce the Federal revenues and restore some part of it to our people will, and perhaps should, be seriously questioned. It has constantly been a cause of pride and congratulation to the American citizen that this country is not put to the charge of maintaining a large standing army in time of peace; yet we are living—under a war tax which has been tolerated in peaceful times to meet the obligations incurred in the war.

The internal-revenue tax is the war tax that has been tolerated. The duties collected on imports are not a war tax. Do the people, does the President desire that the internal-revenue tax be taken off of whisky and tobacco? Do the people demand free tobacco and free whisky even at the cost of keeping the men and women provided for in this bill in the poor-house or remain the objects of private charity? I know of no more sacred obligations resting upon this Government than its duty to "provide for him who shall have borne the battle." This obligation, it is true, it would be popular in some quarters to repudiate. As we pay our obligations to the bondholder to the last farthing, as we should, let us sacredly and fully pay the royal debt the nation owes the American volunteer soldier and sailor—a debt "which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent." As we revere the flag let us hold sacred the debt the nation owes the brave men who carried that flag to victory on a hundred well-fought battlefields.

As we shall from year to year pay a grateful tribute to our dead soldiers and sailors "who died that a nation might live" let us not be unmindful of our duty to the living. It is fitting that on each memorial day we should strew flowers upon the graves of the nation's dead. Let us also feed the hungry and clothe the naked comrades of our dead, who, by reason of disease or old age, being in poverty, are incapacitated from earning a living.

The President thinks this legislation is premature, that there is undue haste in relieving distress. He says: "Hitherto such relief has been granted." He admits that it is not without a precedent, but gives as a reason why the precedent is "more honored in the breach than in the observance" in this case the fact that in former legislation the relief came to "surviving soldiers few in number"—too many ex-Union soldiers remain—although of those who went out in 1861, 1862, and 1863, 279,376 to wife, mother, sister, or sweetheart never returned. He adds that the benefaction heretofore has only been to those "venerable in age after a long lapse of time since their military service, and as a parting benefaction tendered by a grateful people."

When death, two scores of years hence, is ready to claim the cold, naked, and hungry veterans, "venerable in age," few in number, who shall have survived, then, and not till then, should come the "parting benefaction."

That is, the principle of the bill is right, but we must withhold our relief until those now reduced to destitution and dependence by reason of advancing age, disease, or misfortune, and those who shall be like circumstanced for the next twenty-five or fifty years shall have died, then tender to the few who shall remain the benefits conferred by this bill as a "parting benefaction" of a grateful people.

The good that we should do to-day as a "grateful people" we put off a quarter or a half of a century, not on account of inability, but that we may reduce the "war tax." A city is stricken with a plague, its citizens are in utter destitution, they cry for aid, the answer comes back wait until next month or next year, then there will be but few of you left from the ravages of the pestilence; they, "few in number, venerable in age," shall be witnesses of the "parting benefaction tendered by a grateful people."

Would it not be more in keeping with the dictates of humanity to clothe, feed, and warm the naked, hungry, and homeless veterans of to-day and trust a grateful people to take care of the future?

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions of this House [Mr. MATSON], after a careful and thorough consideration of the question, calling undoubtedly to his assistance the Commissioner of Pensions, and using all the facts obtainable in his office, estimates the number of old and destitute soldiers and sailors and dependent parents to be benefited under the provisions of this bill at 33,105, and the increased cost at $4,767,120.

This estimate, it is claimed in the veto message, is wide of the mark. It is argued by the President that because the number to be benefited under the Revolutionary pension law enacted seventy years ago was greatly underestimated it necessarily follows that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] has fallen into the same error. He ignores the fact of the more accurate means of obtaining the required information in 1887 than existed in 1818.

The second reason given for his fears that the numbers to be benefited exceed 33,105 so much that, to use his language, the "probable increase of expense would be almost appalling," is that when the law of 1853 was passed "for the benefit of the surviving widows of Revolutionary soldiers" the number to be benefited was estimated at 300, the actual number being 3,742. These glaring mistakes, "venerable with age," he concludes renders it highly probable, if not conclusive, that the distinguished chairman of the Invalid Pensions Committee of this House has blundered. Thus cavalierly does the President dispose of the estimates made by a committee of this House. They are entitled to no consideration by him.

In arriving at his conclusions as to the persons who are to be benefited by the second section of this bill, to my mind, the President has given a forced, strained, and unnatural construction to its language; in its examination he has been hypercritical and captious. He shuts his eyes to the reasons that gave birth to this humane measure. He does not attempt to arrive at its meaning by looking for the sufferings to be alleviated and the remedy to be advanced. He seems ignorant of the fact that to-day over 30,000 of the men who made the fame of a Grant possible are in utter destitution without any fault of theirs, by reason of old age, disease, or misfortune; that 10,000 of them were when he penned his message the inmates of the poor-houses of the land; that yet other thousands were being supported from the relief funds of Grand Army posts. That these brave men so circumstanced, many of whom are entitled to pensions under existing laws, but are unable to furnish the evidence required by reason of the death of comrades or commanding officers—they had no hospital record, they were not camp-followers, they shunned the surgeon's tent and the hospital, they and others who deserve well of their country—are now by reason of old age, disease, or misfortune rendered unable to earn a living. It was to provide raiment, clothing, and shelter for these that the second section was inserted in the bill. It reads:

SEC. 2. That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States in any war in which the United States has been engaged, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide in pursuance of this act, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive, for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor, $12 per month.

Those entitled to a pension under this section, I submit, are those whose "inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor" is total. In that respect the law is not as broad as I would have it. If it had been the intent of Congress to include as the beneficiaries of this section all those whose ability to earn a living by labor was in the least degree impaired, as urged by the President, why, I ask, should the phrase "total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor" be used to define those who are entitled to receive a pension? The disability must be of such a degree as to render them (the soldiers or sailors) "unable to earn a support;" then, to make the intent clear, it is declared that the inability to earn a subsistence must be total. The President, by the construction he gives to this section, strikes out the word total and makes the clause read "for such inability which in any degree impairs their ability to procure their subsistence by daily labor."

In the construction of one part of a statute every other part must be taken into consideration, and certain it is that in the construction of one part of a sentence in a statute you can not ignore other parts of the same sentence.

It is claimed by the President that "if there is a reduction in any degree of the support which he (the soldier) might earn if sound he is entitled to a pension of $12 a month."

I submit that to render the section susceptible to the construction claimed in the sentence just quoted from the President's message words must be interpolated by him, and the word "total" eliminated from the section. The result of such a construction is thus expressed by him: "I do not see how those now on the pension-roll for disabilities which diminish their earning capacity can be denied a pension provided in the bill." There are, we are informed, 202,621 pensioners receiving fifty-eight rates, ranging from $1 to $11.75 per month.

To make the increase "appalling" and to furnish a reason for the veto, these 202,621 pensioners by construction are given $12 a month

if this bill should become a law. Such an interpretation of the statute is, I claim, unwarranted. In the first place, thousands of the class of pensioners just named are not "dependent upon their daily labor for their support," and therefore are clearly not within the provisions of the bill, even should their disability be such as to totally diminish theis earning capacity. Again, a large percentage of the 202,621 pensionerr who receive less than $12 a month are pensioned for injuries so slight that do not diminish their earning capacity in any perceptible degree, then certainly they can not be beneficiaries under the vetoed bill. In short, none can be placed on the pension-roll under the provisions of the bill under consideration who are not dependent upon their daily labor for support and who are disabled by reason of any of the causes named to such an extent as to constitute a total inability to procure a subsistence by daily labor. "A friendly eye could never see such faults" as the President has discovered.

Is not the true reason, Mr. Speaker, for this veto to be found in the fact that the writer shares in the opinions held by many, that enough and more than enough has been done for the ex-soldiers and sailors of the war of the rebellion? He takes occasion to remind them of this in language plain:

I can not but remember that the soldiers of our civil war, in their pay and bounty, received such compensation for military service as has never been received by soldiers before since mankind first went to war. * * * I think it may be said that at the close of the war of the rebellion every Northern State and a great majority of Northern counties and cities were burdened with taxation on account of the large bounties paid our soldiers; and the bonded debt thereby created still constitutes a large item in the account of the tax-gatherer against the people.

That it was the citizen soldier of 1861–'65 who, through his mercenary spirit, burdened with taxation Northern States, counties, and cities, is announced for the first time by the Executive of the United States. Yet there were young men who in the darkest days of the war refused to burden their State, county, or city by going to the front. Neither the extravagant pay or the princely bounties such as were never known before since "mankind first went to war," nor the love of country could tempt them to the tented field. What Northern State, county, or city, Mr. Speaker, has been heard to complain of the bounties paid their citizens whose deeds of valor can never be forgotten? Those services surely this people, North and South, the beneficiaries of the trials, dangers, sufferings, and death of the citizen soldiers, can never forget.

The President has higher grounds for vetoing this bill than the question of cost. He fears its effect upon the morals of the community. Hitherto in his message he has set the simple question dollars against the discharge of a patriotic duty and the recognition of a right.

"If this bill should pass," to use his own language, he fears "the effect of [the] new invitations to apply for pensions" that it would extend to the old, sick, and destitute soldiers. He wishes to avoid the demoralizing effect the opening up of new advantages to causes for pensions already existing will have upon the cupidity of the people. He sees evil, and only evil, to result from the passage of this bill.

I prefer to use his own language in giving his estimate of the people generally and the old soldiers in particular, and the disreputable means to which they will resort either to secure pensions for themselves or to aid others.

Recent personal observation and experience—

Says the President—

constrain me to refer to another result which will inevitably follow the passage of this bill. It is sad, but nevertheless true, that already in the matter of procuring pensions there exists a widespread disregard of truth and good faith, stimulated by those who as agents undertake to establish claims for pensions, heedlessly entered upon by the expectant beneficiary, and encouraged, or at least not condemned, by those unwilling to obstruct a neighbor's plans.

To sustain the charges of widespread disregard of truth and good faith contained in the President's indictment against old soldiers, their neighbors, and friends, the President rests the case on his observation and personal experience.

This widespread moral depravity he plainly intimates is confined to those States and communities where the ex-Union soldiers and sailors and their friends are found. The special pleader's prejudices and associations often color his productions.

It may be that the President has taken counsel of and associated with the enemies and not the friends of the boys in blue. Certain it is if the cruel and unjust charges against them had emanated from a less eminent and respected authority than the Chief Magistrate they would deserve to be characterized as slanderous, if not brutal. He has drawn a dark picture of the moral turpitude of the men whose deeds of valor have been woven into song and story.

The effect of this bill, should it become a law, he assures the nation, would be to "put a further premium on dishonesty and mendacity." In this the President assumes that the pension laws now in force offer premiums upon "dishonesty and mendacity." These degrading traits of character now so "widespread" among the destitute, maimed, and wounded soldiers and sailors must be checked by vetoing all further legislation looking to their relief. Whatever may become of them physically, their morals must be protected—this is the age of reform. The habit of lying, the bearing of false witness, and mendacity now so widespread—if the Executive is not mistaken—in those communities contaminated by our old veterans must be stamped out by the heroic treatment of starvation.

Mr. Speaker, let the President remember that these old veterans, less than three decades of years ago, laid their deeds of bravery and heroism upon the altar of patriotism, and under the guidance of a Thomas, a McPherson, a Blair, a Logan, a Sheridan, a Sherman, a Grant, maintained our flag unsullied and our country undivided. Language more calculated to insult and degrade these veterans could not have been used by their bitterest enemy, nor could the words have emanated from any other source where the sting would be as poignant. Certain it is that in all the years that have intervened since Appomattox, no such language has been used by any of the brave men who so stubbornly contested with these veterans and their comrades dead every inch upon many a well-fought battlefield under the leadership of a Hood, a Bragg, a Shelby, a Johnson, a Jackson, a Lee.

These men thus maligned are they who in the day of the nation's extremity placed their bodies as a living wall between the Union of the States and those who would destroy it. Their deeds will be held in grateful remembrance when the words of their traducers shall, thank God, have been forgotten. Never did soldiers fight in a holier cause then they. When, Mr. Speaker, did the President awake to a full realization of the great evils that must result from legislation granting pensions to persons, however deserving, other than those provided for by existing laws? It must be that since writing his last annual message he has experienced a change of heart. Then he used eloquent words, "words that are the children of the wind," in pleading the cause of the ex-soldiers "who are reduced to destitution and dependence, not as an incident of their service, but with advancing age, or through sickness or misfortune." He did not then warn us of the widespread "disregard of truth and good faith" or of the "dishonesty and mendacity" of those for whom he spoke. Less than four weeks since he approved, without criticism, the Mexican pension bill.

It gives a pension to every officer and enlisted man now sixty-two years of age who served sixty days with the Army or Navy of the United States in Mexico, or on its coast or frontier, or en route thereto, or was actually engaged in a battle in the war with Mexico, regardless of the fact whether the pensioner be rich or poor, whether he was loyal or disloyal during the war of the rebellion. The Mexican soldier who fought on the side of the Union gets the same as he who fought against the Union. The nation's gratitude to the Mexican veterans did not stop there, Mr. Speaker, but it gave a pension to every such officer and enlisted man "who is or may become subject to any disability or dependency equivalent to some cause prescribed or recognized by the pension laws of the United States as a sufficient reason for the allowance of a pension, even though he may not have reached the age of sixty-two years."

If the disability or dependency be ever so slight, if it be equivalent to some slight cause for which under the general pension laws the pensioner gets $1 a month for such disability or dependency, the ex-Mexican soldier gets $8 a month. This, even though his dependency or disability be the result of his own vicious habits; nay, more, he gets a pension for a disability the direct result of continued and habitual dissipation. He gets a pension for a slight disability not an incident of his military service, even though he be not dependent on his daily labor for a support. None of the limitations and restrictions as to the nature or extent of the disability or dependence are contained in this act that are found in the vetoed bill. In fact, its terms clearly brings it within the objections that the President urges as a reason for withholding his approval from the bill under consideration. It did not occur to the President "that the race after pensions offered by this bill would not only stimulate weakness and pretended incapacity for labor, disability, and put a further premium on dishonesty and mendacity." He kindly spared the old Mexican soldier, and reserved this unjust criticism for the Union veteran.

Did the fact that two-thirds of the survivors of the Mexican war live in Southern States induce the President to give his approval to the bill placing them, rich and poor, on the pension-rolls? His veto of this bill, passed on the same day, less liberal in its terms, for the relief of old ex-Union soldiers who are dependent upon charity, private or public, for food and raiment, it has been stated by high authority, gives him a solid South. How far did the hope of gaining such a prize lead him? If this was a "consummation devoutedly to be wished," if language cold, offensive, and degrading toward the veterans of the war of the rebellion could enable him to obtain it, then he has earned the reward.

That a grateful people should have cared for the Mexican veterans who gave us an empire I rejoice; that the President should through the veto power prevent the people from doing as much for the ex-Union soldiers who preserved us a nation I condemn. He has turned his back upon the 70 Democrats who voted for this bill, and by his acts and words shows that his sympathies and prejudices are in full accord with the 76 who voted against it. These 70, if they but remain firm with the other friends of the soldier in the House, can secure the passage of this bill, the President's veto notwithstanding, and thus in part redeem the pledges of the nation even if they should lose the smiles of the Executive.

The message, Mr. Speaker, in recounting what the nation has done in times past for the soldiers of our civil war states "that statutes have been passed giving them preference in all public employment." Mr. Speaker, the President should have added that, "in grateful recognition of their services, sacrifices, and sufferings," the Congress of the United States, by solemn enactment, declared that they "should be preferred for appointment to civil offices," and gave them the nation's recommendation for preference to all remunerative pursuits and employments in civil life; and further, "that in making any reduction of force in any of the Executive Departments of the Government, the head of such Department shall retain those persons who may be equally qualified who have been honorably discharged from the military or naval service of the United States, and the widows and orphans of deceased soldiers and sailors."

Let those in authority give vitality to the promise of a grateful Government when it pledged itself "to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and orphans." Let not this statute be as idle a mockery as was the statue of liberty in whose shadow the patriots of France were guillotined, or as lifeless as the grinning mummy in the catacombs of Egypt. Let this statute, enacted in the days of the nation's extremity, be liberally construed and faithfully enforced in the day of the nation's prosperity toward those who rendered that prosperity possible. Let the performance of the nation be equal to her promise. Let her not be as one "that keeps the word of promise to our ear and breaks it to our hope."

The fact that the soldier of the Republic fought at Shiloh, Stone River, Antietam, Vicksburg, Gettysburg, Chickamauga, Spottsylvania, the Wilderness, "Atlanta to the sea," or Appomattox is no longer regarded as a reason for his appointment to or retention in office. The fact that the citizen at the call of duty, imbued with a love of country, went forth as the American volunteer soldier or sailor, with "a heroism that was patriotic and with a patriotism that was heroic," no longer commends him to the powers that be. If his honorable wounds, broken body, and destitution are urged as a reason for his appointment to or retention in office he is characterized as a beggar, a mendicant.

> Poor naked soldiers, wheresoe'r you are,
> That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
> How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
> Your looped and windowed raggedness, defend you
> From seasons such as these?

Mr. MORRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA].

Mr. O'HARA. In the limited period to which I am confined in the discussion of this measure it will be a matter of impossibility to intelligently present my views in regard to this veto message. There is one feature of it, however, to which I shall attempt to address myself.

There is one portion of the bill about which the President has been silent, and that is the first section, providing for the relief of dependent parents. That class of people who gave their sons to their country at the time of its greatest peril, a class of people that I peculiarly represent, are debarred by an unjust ruling in the Department. The mothers of negro soldiers who gave their sons to their country are met with this ruling when they approach your Pension Office. The mother says: "I gave to a country which looked upon me with scorn my sons as her defenders, and I am to-day without strength to support me because those men gave their blood and their lives that their country might live." There is a decision of this Government, through its Pension Office, saying to them, "You were slaves, and, therefore, although your sons may have died upon the battlefield your country will turn you aside with scorn."

This, sir, is unjust—unjust to that noble band who, though they knew their country spurned them, came forward and gave their lives for its defense.

Sir, it is not as the President would indicate, that these men went for dollars and cents. The Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Massachusetts Regiments, composed entirely of colored men, went out and nobly did their duty; but when the paymaster of the Government met them he said: "You are soldiers of this Government, but your skin is black, and we will give you less than we give your white comrades." They spurned it and said: "No; we are in this contest for liberty, and if you can not pay us the full measure you pay to other soldiers, we will fight for our flag and our country without compensation." [Applause.]

That the colored soldiers in our late civil war were not bummers, camp followers, nor specially provided for with bomb-proof position, but that they discharged their duty faithfully and well, I quote in evidence in their behalf the testimony of General B. F. Butler, given in a speech delivered on the floor of this House on the 6th day of January, 1874. Says General Butler:

> On the 29th day of September, 1864, I was ordered by the commanding general officer of the armies to cross the James River at two points and attack the enemy's line of works, one in the center of their line, Fort Harrison, the other a strong work guarding their left flank at New Market Heights. I went myself with the colored troops to attack the enemy at New Market Heights, which was the key to the enemy's flank on the north side of James River. That work was a redoubt built on the top of a hill of some considerable elevation, then running down into a marsh; in that marsh was a brook, then rising again to a plain which gently rolled away toward the river.
> On that plain, when the flash of dawn was breaking, I placed a column of three thousand colored troops, in close column by divisions, right in front, with guns at "right-shoulder shift." I said "that work must be taken by the weight of your column; no shot must be fired;" and as the sun rose up in the heavens the order was given, "Forward, march;" and they marched forward steadily as if on parade—went down the hill, across the marsh, and as they got into the brook they came within the range of the enemy's fire, which vigorously opened upon them. Oh, it was a moment of intense anxiety; but they formed again as they reached firm ground, marching steadily on with closed ranks under the enemy's fire until the head of the column reached the first line of the abatis, some 150 yards from the enemy's works. Then the axmen ran to the front to cut away the obstructions of defense, while one thousand men of the enemy, with their artillery concentrated, poured from the redoubt a heavy fire upon the head of the column hardly wider than the Clerk's desk.
> The axmen go down under the murderous fire, other strong hands grasp the ax in their stead, and the abatis is cut away. Again at double-quick the column goes forward to within 50 yards of the fort, to meet there another line of abatis. The column halts, and there a very fire of hell is pouring on them. The abatis resists and holds; the head of the column seems literally to melt away under the rain of shot and shell; the flags of the leading regiments go down, but a brave black hand seizes the colors—they are up again, and wave their starry light over the storm of battle. Again the axmen fall, but strong hands and willing hearts seize the heavy, sharpened trees and drag them away, and the column rushes forward and with a shout which now rings in my ear go over that redoubt like a flash, and the enemy never stop running for 4 miles.
> It became my painful duty, sir, to follow the track of that charging column, and there in a space not wider than the Clerk's desk and 300 yards long lay the dead bodies of five hundred and forty-three of my colored comrades, slain in defense of their country, who had laid down their lives to uphold its flag and its honor as a willing sacrifice.

Sir, is it possible to believe that the dependent parents of men like these shall be denied by this act of the President that relief and succor in their old age that a grateful country would willingly accord to them? Sir, enough for this first clause of the bill, which the President of the United States has not even offered to the country a lame excuse for his disapproval.

As to the second clause of this bill, upon which the President of the United States bases his veto, I beg to state that the President can not be sincere in his veto message on this bill when he approved, as far as we know without hesitancy, the "Mexican pension bill," a bill with far larger opportunities for fraud, and pensioning a larger class of persons who may not be in need at all. I regard this veto as a blow aimed at the patriots who at their country's call responded in person and did not send a substitute, and a declaration on the part of the President that he has no sympathy with the men who defended their country in the day of her need.

Sir, willing to stand by the action of the committee, and believing that the country will sustain the committee, I shall vote to pass the bill, the veto of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. MORRILL. I reserve the rest of my time.

Mr. MATSON. I think the gentleman from Kansas ought to exhaust his time, and then let the gentlemen who oppose the bill follow, and after that I will take three-quarters of an hour to close.

Mr. MORRILL. I would prefer to hear from the other side. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. MATSON. I suppose it will be conceded that I should be entitled to close the debate. I apprehend there will be no controversy about that.

Mr. MORRILL. Does the gentleman from Indiana wish me to occupy the rest of my time now?

Mr. MATSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. HAYNES].

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Speaker, a failure to pass this bill over the Executive veto will be accepted as a notice served that there is to be no further general pension legislation under the present dispensation. It will be the culminating triumph of a sentiment which has had rapid development and has ripened under the fostering care of the present national administration. The five minutes of time accorded me will permit only the briefest allusions to matters that are pertinent in the consideration of this bill in its present position. It has come to us stamped with the seal of the President's disapproval.

It would not have been possible for human ingenuity to have formulated a bill more in accord with the recommendations of the President in his annual message to Congress, and yet when his own suggestions are laid before him in a form which requires only a scratch of the pen to make them law, he withholds his signature and advertises his inconsistency. The soft cooing of the executive voice in December bespeaks "a tender consideration for those who, having served their country long and well, are reduced to destitution and dependence, not as an incident of their service, but with advancing age or through sickness or misfortune."

But in less than three months the voice takes on a harsher tone, and the same men are stigmatized as a class among whom "there exists a widespread disregard of truth and good faith." And to doubly mark the President's inconsistency, it has been noted, and will doubtless be again noted, that when the companion bills passed by this House upon the same day are placed before him, he makes haste to sign the one that grants a service pension pure and absolute to every survivor of the Mexican war, and turns his back to the utterly disabled and destitute veterans of the war of the rebellion.

The sun at midday is not plainer than the motives which induced this inconsistent discrimination; and if more need be said on this point I may state, what is known to but few members, that in the files of this House there is to-day a petition praying that a pension of at least $8 per month may be granted to every honorably discharged soldier of the Union armies, and among the signatures appended to that petition appears the name of "Grover Cleveland."

The man who, as governor of New York, as a candidate for the high office of President, as a bidder for soldier votes, petitioned for a pension for every soldier, withholds his signature as President from a bill designed to bring relief only to the few who are totally disabled and dependent upon public or private charity. Now, in regard to the cost. That is the point which is most persistently urged by the opponents of the bill. They have that fine intuition which locates the seat of sensation in the pocket rather than in the heart. It must be noted that the only estimate made in a manner to entitle it to the least consideration is that of the committee. That is based on actual information collected through the medium and by the special efforts of the Pension Office.

There can be no reasonable question that it is approximately correct, and fairly expresses the number who will become beneficiaries under the bill. As against this the President fears that the expenditure will be "appalling," a very indefinite quantity indeed.

I did, however, notice yesterday, in a newspaper which appeared among the other rubbish with which the enemies of the bill have cumbered our desks, a statement that this bill would swell our pension budget to an annual expenditure of $150,000,000. That is something tangible to argue against. Now let us see how that statement will hold water.

It presupposes an annual increase of from seventy to eighty million dollars, which at the rate provided in this bill would extend its provision to five hundred thousand beneficiaries. The National Museum should have the stuffed skin of the man who coined that estimate and spread it to the world. Why, Mr. Speaker, the most generous calculation places the number now living who served in the Union armies a long way inside of a million and a half. So this newspaper wiseacre would have it that more than one-third—probably nearer one-half—of the entire soldiery in every community would come in under this bill as totally unable to procure their subsistence by daily labor.

Run over in your own minds, each of you, gentlemen of the House, the list of soldiers in your own acquaintance, and tell me what you think of such an estimate and such a statement thrown in here to influence your judgment and your action.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it may as well be considered as settled that the soldiers of this country, as a body, are in favor of this bill, and will resent its defeat. Let it be noted that the petitions and resolutions of the Grand Army posts and Grand Army encampments are pouring in upon the Committee on Invalid Pensions by hundreds, asking for the passage of this bill over the President's veto.

The department encampment of New Hampshire unanimously adopted resolutions, which have been transmitted to me by telegraph, indorsing the proposition we are to pass upon to-day. And post after post have forwarded resolutions unanimously adopted requesting me to vote to override the President's veto. I shall take the greatest pleasure in obeying these instructions to the end that no man who served his country faithfully, no man who was comrade of mine, shall ever reproachfully say to me from his refuge in the public alms-house, "you had a hand in keeping me here."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. FRYE, and Mr. MORGAN.

VETO MESSAGE—DEPENDENT PENSION BILL.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE].

Mr. BAYNE. In two minutes I can say very little, but I do want to say that I am heartily in favor of the passage of this bill, and I think it is the duty of Congress to pass it over the veto and thus benefit the persons who come within its provisions.

I have heard it alleged, and seen it in the public press, that there is a lobby of claim agents here endeavoring to press the passage of this bill. I challenge any gentleman on this floor to name one; and I pause for a reply.

I have heard it alleged, and seen it in the public press, that there are those among us who will vote for this bill who are not really in favor of it. I ask if there be any man on the floor of this House who occupies that position to rise and manfully say so; and I pause for a reply.

I want to say that this bill is being opposed by the most insidious and the most hypocritical methods that were ever employed to defeat or promote legislation. [Applause.] I want to say the allegations that the members of this House who will vote for this bill are not heartily and sincerely for it are falsehoods that are published in the press of the country for the purpose of sustaining the Executive in his veto and not because they are facts. I do not believe that there is a man on the floor of this House who will vote for this bill who does not heartily sympathize with its objects. It is derided as a pauper bill. How many dependents are there now on the pension-rolls? Nearly one-third of those on the rolls, I believe, are dependents.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. I would like a minute or two more.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield the gentleman another minute.

Mr. BAYNE. It is said the evidence can not be furnished to the Pension Bureau to sustain these claims under existing law, and that therefore no law should be enacted which would allow them. True enough; but the President's position is that those who went into the hospitals, who lay there half of their term of service, perhaps, and have a hospital record shall have pensions because they contracted disease or disability in the service, while those who went through the war from beginning to end and never went into a hospital and can not prove their claims by hospital records shall have no pensions.

Why, sir, if either class should have pensions, it would seem to be that the class provided for in this bill should be preferred.

Total disability, utter incapacity to earn a livelihood, dependence upon their own labor for support, yet unable to support themselves; honorably discharged from the military service of the United States—what more should be asked?

It is unjust beyond measure to deny pensions to the beneficiaries of this bill, and I sincerely hope it will become a law.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BAYNE. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] has the floor.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR].

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I regret that it should appear that the President of the United States, after having sent to this House a message which amazes the intelligent people of the whole country, should be personally represented by a gentleman upon this floor, who, for the first time in the history of this Congress, denies, by his objection to members of the House, the ordinary courtesy of being heard through the RECORD for the want of time to speak upon a question like this. It may be that this representative of the President of the United States supposes that in this way the people of the country can be deterred from having a full and fair discussion of this great question. It may be, however, that inside of the next two and a half years the President of the United States will wish that it had been permitted to members of Congress to be heard more fully and completely in this discussion.

Mr. Speaker, the error, in my judgment, into which the Executive has fallen in considering this bill is this: it is a mistake to call this measure a bill for a service pension. This is not in any true sense a service pension. It is a proposition to assist by a pension the needy, disabled soldiers of the Grand Army, and incidentally to take out of the poor-houses and alms-houses of the country fifteen thousand of the brave men who fought to save the Union. This is a bill which simply changes the rule of evidence in regard to the questions which arise upon the application for pension in the Bureau of Pensions. It simply provides that the disabled soldier, one who served in the Army and was honorably discharged and who is now suffering under disability, shall have applied to him a new rule of evidence, differing from the current orders and rules of the Pension Department.

It provides that when it is made to appear that a soldier of the Army served the length of time required, and was honorably discharged, and is suffering under a disability which disables him from laboring to support himself, that when these facts appear, when these facts are not debated or contradicted, it shall be conclusively presumed for the purpose of the honor of the Government, and for the purpose of saving the disgrace and stigma which rests upon the Government which permits its defenders to lie in the poor-houses of the country, that his disability was caused by the service he did in the army. That is all there is of it, and that affixes to this bill a character, not that of a service pension, but as a pension for honorable service, suffering, and inability to work.

It is not all that I should ask had I the right to dictate, but it is better than nothing, and, coupled with the provisions of the first section, to pension dependent parents by a new rule also, the bill ought to pass.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BRAGG. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The representative of the author of the veto measure objects.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, when the House Committee on Invalid Pensions presented its masterly reply to the message of the President vetoing the dependent-pension bill the argument was concluded. Whatever of reason that message contains and whatever of sophistry finds in that report its complete answer and its exposure. The bill, therefore, comes back to us not only with all its original merit, but strengthened by the approving judgment of both Houses of Congress, the earnest reindorsement of the committee representing the majority of this House, its chosen organ, and the commendation of a just public sentiment.

In this connection I desire to present a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan indorsing this bill, and I will ask the Clerk to read it; but before he reads I desire simply to say that our only duty, it seems to me, is to pass this measure at once, and lift the shadow from the breaking hearts of the men and women who sacrificed all and suffered all that the Republic might live. [Applause.]

The Clerk proceeded to read the resolution.

Mr. BRAGG. I understand that is to be read in the time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS]?

The SPEAKER. In the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the Congress of the United States did pass a bill known as the dependent-pension bill, granting a pension of $12 a month to all soldiers of the late war who, from any cause, had become unable to properly furnish themselves with the necessaries of life; and

Whereas President Cleveland did, in his wisdom, see fit to veto the said bill, returning it to the House where it originated without his signature or approval: Now, therefore,

Resolved (the senate concurring), That we hereby call upon our delegation in Congress to use all honorable means to secure the passage of the said dependent-pension bill over the said Presidential veto.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. BURROWS. Will my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] allow the remaining resolution to be read?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; it can be read in the time of some other gentleman on that side.

Mr. BURROWS. Will the gentleman permit it to be printed? It is very brief.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; some gentleman can have it read in his time.

Mr. MORRILL. How much time have I left, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has ten minutes left.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] has yielded me seven and a half minutes more. I now yield sufficient time to complete the reading of the resolution presented by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS].

The reading was completed, as follows:

Resolved further, That the governor be requested to forward to each of our Representatives in Congress a copy of these resolutions.

JAMES H. MACDONALD,
DANIEL P. MARKEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved February 21, 1887.

C. G. LUCE, Governor.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I desire to use ten minutes of my time, reserving the other seven and a half.

Mr. Speaker, the veto of the President of the bill now before the House has, fairly considered, a deeper significance, and threatens more far-reaching consequences than would attach to the mere failure of this measure to become a law. The veto has been construed by the country into a declaration on the part of this administration that the Executive approval will be hereafter withheld from all measures of a general character involving a charge upon the Treasury which may be passed in response to the claims of those who answered to the call of their country in its hour of peril. In effect it stigmatizes such claims as unjust and unreasonable, and places questions of taxation and fiscal policy above the demands of national justice and gratitude and the promptings of common humanity.

If the expenditures of our pension system be vast beyond precedent it must be remembered also that the circumstances which rendered them necessary were also without precedent. In point of numbers engaged in the late struggle, in respect of the bloody and desperate character of its conflicts, the expenditure of money and the sacrifice of precious lives, as well as in respect of the wicked and unjustifiable causes which precipitated it, it is without parallel in the world's history.

Measured by what was accomplished at all this cost and sacrifice, our expenditures for pensions, colossal as they are, seem insignificant. The weight of the Government's obligations to its soldiers is not to be estimated by any known standard of computation. The terms of its contract and the exact scope of the measures adopted for its fulfillment are clearly definable, but who can estimate the value of the equivalent rendered?

The salvation of an imperiled nationality, the re-establishment of the Union upon a secure and imperishable foundation, the overthrow of a system obnoxious to free government and repugnant to civilization, the recovered prosperity of the nation in all its parts, the planting of the seeds of good will and harmony between the different sections, the gradual but sure growth of which gives promise of full fruitage in the near future; these are some of the achievements blazoned upon the banners of the victors in our great struggle. Who so skilled in mathematics as to be able to tell us the value of all this in dollars and cents?

In the provisions made for our diseased and disabled soldiers, and for the support and solace of the survivors of the dead, this Government has illustrated in the highest degree the beneficence of free institutions, and has signally proved that this Republic, at least, is not ungrateful.

In the generations to come history will present no nobler spectacle than that of a great nation just emerging from a gigantic conflict which had seriously threatened its overthrow, taxed its resources to an extreme, drained its best blood, and made mourning well-nigh universal, taking upon itself fresh burdens beyond the reach of precise estimate, and voluntarily, cheerfully, and loyally addressing itself to the binding up of the wounds received in its service.

No public burden could be more cheerfully borne than that which this pension system imposes. The sporadic and feeble mutterings of discontent are lost in the general chorus of approbation with which every just and humane proposition in the interest of the Union soldier is greeted.

The masses of the people are quite ready to provide, not only for the discharge of every specific and well-defined obligation by the Government, but also in the interest of national justice, to extend its shelter to those wornout veterans incapable of self support, who would otherwise be left to the precarious provisions of private charity or the humiliating conditions of organized local support. Neither the cold abstractions of professed economists nor the plaints of political pessimists are to be weighed against the loftier and more patriotic impulses of the great body of the people. Let me beg the indulgence of the House while I present somewhat in detail the considerations which induced the committee to present this bill, as well as to point out some of the fallacies, false assumptions, and inconsistencies with which the President's veto message abounds.

No other bill which has been before the Committee on Invalid Pensions during the past four years has received the careful consideration that has been given to this. It has been fully and thoughtfully discussed, the principle involved has been carefully considered, and the fullest possible investigation has been given to the whole subject. Their attention has been frequently called to it by the earnest and almost piteous appeals for the passage of special bills for the relief of old soldiers who were in the alms-houses or other charitable institutions of the country. While many pension measures of importance, involving the payment of considerable sums, have been presented and have received their favorable consideration, they have, without a dissenting voice, uniformly held that this was the most pressing and of the most importance, as it would afford relief to a class utterly dependent, and which could not be reached under any existing law.

The Senate has twice before passed bills for this class far more liberal and requiring a much larger expenditure of money. In passing this measure the committee believed that they had so restricted it in its application that it would meet the hearty approval of the patriotic, liberty-loving people of the country. Their purpose was to provide for those, and those only, who were unable, through sickness, old age, or misfortune, to procure a subsistence without aid from public charities or those charitably disposed towards the poor and unfortunate defenders of their country.

The first section of the bill provides for no new pensions, but only changes the rule of evidence in the case of dependent parents. Under existing laws they are required to prove that at the time of the death of the son they were without adequate means of support, and were actually receiving contributions from him to aid them in obtaining a livelihood. Thousands of parents entirely independent of their children for support sent out their young sons to battle for their country, and are now, in their old age, unable to provide for themselves.

This section simply declares that present dependence shall be the only condition required. It is a declaration that the nation will kindly care for the old mother and father who offered up a son on their country's altar. Again and again by special acts both Houses of Congress without a dissenting voice have recognized this principle, by the passage of special acts affording relief in individial cases. Again and again has the President approved those bills, nor does he now offer any objection to this section or intimate in any way that a bill recognizing this principle would not receive his approval. He would provide for the father or the mother who gave the son to the country, but would let the other son who survived the vicissitudes of the battlefield and the prison, go to the poor-house. The language of the bill has been severely criticised by the President, who declares it to be "so uncertain and liable to such conflicting construction, and to be liable to such unjust and mischievous application as to alone furnish sufficient ground for disapproving the same."

The section of this bill to which this criticism is especially directed reads:

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States in any war in which the United States has been engaged and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now or who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them from the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide in pursuance of this act, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor $12 per month; and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, upon proof that the disability then existed, and continue during the existence of the same in the degree herein provided, &c.

I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that before any person can receive any of the benefits proposed to be conferred under the provisions of this section he must prove:

First. That he served at least three months in the military or naval service of the United States in some war in which the United States has been engaged.

Second. That he has received an honorable discharge from such service.

Third. That he is suffering from mental or physical disability not the result of his own vicious habits or gross carelessness.

Fourth. Such disability must incapacitate him from the performance of labor in such a degree as to render him unable to earn a support.

Fifth. He must be dependent upon his daily labor for support.

Sixth. He must make due proof of the existence of all these conditions under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

Having complied with all these requirements he would be entitled to receive "for such total inability to procure his subsistence by daily labor $12 a month."

It will be noticed that the section quoted is all one sentence. It must therefore be construed as a whole. To say that any person unable to labor can receive the benefits of the act would be as absurd as to say that any person who has served three months or more or who had been honorably discharged would be entitled to be placed on the pension-roll under its provisions. It seems to me but one construction can be placed upon this section by any unprejudiced and fair-minded person. To make it still more conclusive, the further condition is imposed that the pension shall only continue during the existence of the disability in the degree provided for.

In other words, if at any time by the removal of the mental or physical disability or the improvement of his health he shall become able "to procure his subsistence by his daily labor," or his pecuniary condition shall become so improved that he shall not be dependent upon his daily labor for subsistence, then the pension shall cease.

The construction put upon the expression "daily labor" by the President in his veto message when he says "that it is not required that he should be without property, but only that labor should be necessary for his support in some degree," is so strained and unfair that it could only have been suggested by the desire to find some excuse for withholding his approval, and is utterly unworthy of the source from which it emanates, beneath the dignity of the exalted position which its author occupies, and while it might naturally be expected from an advocate it would not be from an able, dignified, and impartial judge.

It would not be possible to so frame a bill that it would exactly fit each case that might be presented under it. Of necessity, the terms must be general and apply to classes and not to individual cases. It would be a very difficult task to frame a statute conferring a pension on any class (and I might add, or for any other purpose) in such language that different interpretations might not be given it by different persons, but the question is not what possible construction can be given a law, but what was the obvious intention of Congress in enacting it. And in this connection I wish to impress upon the House the fact that the construction to be given this act, and all the rules and regulations under which it would be administered, would rest absolutely and entirely with the President and his own chosen officials, who could safely be relied upon to so construe it as to carry into effect the evident purpose of Congress without imposing unnecessary or extraordinary burdens upon the people.

A careful comparison of this act with others upon the statute books would compel any reasonable person to admit that it is as free from ambiguity and as little "liable to such conflicting constructions" as any pension legislation, with the possible exception of those acts which provide fixed rates for permanent and specific disabilities.

A careful comparison of this measure with the Mexican pension bill, which the President had before him at the same time and which he unhesitatingly approved, make his labored arguments to prove this bill indefinite, ambiguous, and "so uncertain and liable to such conflicting constructions and to be subject to such unjust and mischievous application," almost convince one that the veto message was intended for the Mexican pension bill, and that he inadvertently approved the one he intended to veto.

No one after carefully reading the two bills will assert that the dependent bill is not much more carefully worded and much less liable to misconstruction and abuse than the Mexican act.

The first two sections of the latter act are as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the names of the surviving officers and enlisted men, including marines, militia, and volunteers, of the military and naval service of the United States, who being duly enlisted, actually served sixty days with the Army or Navy of the United States in Mexico, or on the coasts or frontier thereof, or en route thereto, in the war with that nation, or were actually engaged in a battle in said war, and were honorably discharged, and to such other officers and soldiers and sailors as may have been personally named in any resolution of Congress for any specific service in said war, and the surviving widow of such officers and enlisted men: Provided, That such widows have not remarried: Provided, That every such officer, enlisted man, or widow who is or may become sixty-two years of age, or who is or may become subject to any disability or dependency equivalent to some cause prescribed or recognized by the pension laws of the United States as a sufficient reason for the allowance of a pension, shall be entitled to the benefits of this act; but it shall not be held to include any person not within the rule of age or disability or dependence herein defined, or who incurred such disability while in any manner voluntarily engaged in or aiding or abetting the late rebellion against the authority of the United States.

SEC. 2. That pensions under section 1 of this act shall be at the rate of $8 per month, and payable only from and after the passage of this act for and during the natural lives of the persons entitled thereto, or during the continuance of the disability for which the same shall be granted: Provided, That section 1 of this act shall not apply to any person who is receiving a pension at the rate of $8 a month or more, nor to any person receiving a pension of less than $8 per month, except for the difference between the pension now received (if less than $8 per month) and $8 per month.

It will be noticed that it requires only sixty days' service in Mexico, or on the coast or frontier thereof, or en route thereto. Under this provision thousands are embraced who never experienced any of the hardships and privations of war; who never crossed the Rio Grande or saw an armed enemy. It is estimated that one-third of the army enlisted to serve in that war never stepped foot on Mexican soil.

It provides further that the surviving widows shall receive a pension "provided that such widows have not remarried," but it contains no provision that they shall forfeit their pension if they remarry hereafter, but it does provide that "such pensions shall continue during the natural life of the persons entitled thereto."

The same construction given by the President to the dependent bill applied to this act would give the widows under sixty a pension for a disability, if one existed—a principle never before recognized. It requires no disability and no dependency if the person has arrived at the age of sixty-two. The millionaire and the pauper receive the same pension and stand upon the same footing. The soldier who has not arrived at the age of sixty-two, but who is suffering from some disability, no matter how slight, if it is "equivalent" to a disability recognized by the pension laws of the United States, is put on the roll and allowed the full rate of pension.

To illustrate how "uncertain and liable to conflicting misconstruction" and "unjust and mischievous application" this act is, let me suppose two cases which might arise under it. A soldier of the Mexican war who enlisted at the first call for troops and who served faithfully until its close, engaging perhaps in many of its brilliant and desperate battles, if now in sound health and under the required age, can receive no benefit from this act, though he may be penniless and compelled to earn his support at hard manual labor; but his comrade of the same age, who enlisted near the close of the war, and who when peace was declared was at New Orleans, en route to the seat of war, can, if suffering from a disability for which $1 per month is allowed in the Pension Office, receive the full pension, though he may have received that disability in committing a burglary or attempting to murder his neighbor, and even though he may have an income of a hundred thousand dollars a year. There is absolutely nothing in the act to prohibit the paying of a pension for a disability caused by the debauchery and licentiousness of the soldier himself. The widow receives the full pension without regard to the cause or manner of her husband's death. The widow of the soldier who fell fighting in the confederate army at Antietam or Gettysburg receives the same pension as the widow of the hero who fell mortally wounded at Buena Vista or Cherobusco.

The amount required to pay the pensions allowed under the Mexican pension bill will be as large as would have been needed under the dependent bill. Yet the one class must be cared for though many of them are in affluent circumstances, while the other is denied all relief, though they are spending the few remaining years of their lives in sickness and in poverty, supported by public charity, not through any misconduct or vicious habits, but by reason of sickness and misfortunes against which the bravest and the best are not always able to protect themselves.

I can not comprehend, Mr. Speaker, how the hand that approved the Mexican pension bill could ever have penned the veto message of the bill which provided relief for the brave disabled veterans who saved their country from dissolution and anarchy by their heroic services in the war of the rebellion.

It is very persistently urged by those who oppose pension legislation that many undeserving soldiers are recipients of the nation's bounty. It is doubtless true that some unworthy ones have received and are now receiving pensions which they are not entitled to, and for which they have rendered no service; but this number is doubtless small, for under the rigid rules of the Pension Office and the efficient service of the special examination division, which has experienced officials in every State and in almost every county, it is almost impossible for the criminal to escape detection. During the year ended June 30, 1886, only two hundred and seventy-eight cases were certified to the Department of Justice, and these were for all of the offenses against the pension laws, including the defrauding of pensioners by the charging of illegal fees by attorneys, the false impersonation of dead pensioners, embezzlements in office, &c., and in a large majority of these cases the criminals had never been in the military service of the United States.

Did it ever occur to those anxious souls who are so troubled lest some poor soldier should receive a pittance from the Government to which he is not entitled that for every dollar thus wrongfully paid the Government has deprived brave men who are justly entitled to compensation for their services twenty times as much through the neglect and inefficiency of its chosen agents in keeping proper records of the military service of these men and of the disabilities they received?

In many cases the hospital records were imperfectly kept. In many others no records were made, or at any rate none were preserved. In thousands of cases, many of them serious disabilities, there is an utter absence of any company or hospital record. Through this means alone thousands of worthy claimants have been denied the relief to which their patriotic services justly entitle them.

In the successful prosecution of a war two things are essential: First, that there should be brave men to fight the battles; and secondly, that there should be money to supply the munitions of war and to support the armies. The patriotic, liberty-loving men of the North who responded promptly to every call for troops supplied the one. The treasuries were freely opened, and the other was furnished with an unstinted hand.

Those who from their hard-earned savings supplied the necessary means have been fully repaid. The war of the rebellion entailed upon the country a debt of nearly $3,000,000,000 and a destruction of property to a still greater amount, and yet amid all the depressions of business that necessarily followed as a result of that war the Government never failed for a single hour to meet interest as it became due upon this vast indebtedness, and one-half of the principal has already been paid. The men who supplied the Government with money to carry on the war made no sacrifices. They received it back with full compensation for its use.

During the twenty-two years that have elapsed since the close of the war more than $3,000,000,000 have been paid for interest alone to those who furnished the sinews of war, while less than $800,000,000 have been paid for the lives and the limbs, the sufferings and the sacrifices, the desolated homes, the widows and the fatherless children of the brave men who gave their services to their country in its hour of imminent peril; who offered their all on their country's altar; who in their ripe young manhood left their stores, their workshops, and their farms; left all the profitable pursuits of peace; who left father, mother, sister, brother, wife, and child, and exposed themselves cheerfully to all the hardships and privations of the march, the camp, and the perils of battle and disease, to prevent the disruption of the country upon a principle that would have divided it into as many petty nations as there were diverse and conflicting interests, always exposed to conflicts with each other, each of necessity maintaining a large standing army, impoverished by most offensive taxation, and none of sufficient importance to command the respect of even the weaker governments of the Old World.

By the sacrifices and the sufferings of the heroic men who served their country in its military service during the late war all these direful results were avoided. With the return of peace came unbounded prosperity. The world never witnessed such rapid strides in wealth and population before. With a population in 1860 of 31,000,000, we now have 60,000,000. The wealth at that time, $16,000,000,000, has now increased to $56,000,000,000, and yet we are told that the old broken-down, poverty-stricken soldier, who helped to make all this vast increase possible, must go to the poor-house, for this great, rich, and powerful nation is not able to support him at an expense of $12 per month.

The ability of the country to pay the amount required by this act, or ten times as much, is beyond question. With a population twice as large as it was at the close of the war, with nearly four times the wealth, the entire amount now required to pay the interest on our public debt and the pension-list combined is less than the interest account was at the close of the war.

I do not hold for a moment that the favorable condition of the finances of the country affords any warrant for the payment of ill-considered bounties or questionable claims, but it does warrant the nation in being just to the extent of paying every honest obligation.

You may give to the relief this bill provides whatever name you will—call it a gratuity, a charity, a donation—down deep in the heart of the American people will abide the conviction that it is but simple justice—certainly nothing more, perhaps something less. This stable, rugged quality of justice can not be warped or turned from its purpose by any consideration of the cost of its exercise. This justice may sleep for a time, while policy and expediency guide debates and control decisions, but sooner or later an aroused public sentiment, even now beginning to make itself felt and heard, will compel the fullest recognition of all those proper and reasonable claims which are being urged in behalf of the soldiers of the Union.

I have an abiding faith in that intelligence and love of justice which characterizes the people of this country.

The verdict they will render when the case is submitted to them will not only be a righteous one, but it will be final. With perfect confidence as to what that decision will be, I leave the subject with that power that makes and unmakes Presidents and Congresses, the American people.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] to say that he intended to speak only ten minutes.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has consumed two minutes more than that.

Mr. MORRILL. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire how much time has been consumed by the gentleman from Kansas?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] had forty-five minutes yielded to him by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] and also seven and a half minutes more, and he has consumed forty-seven minutes.

Mr. MATSON. Then he has five and a half minutes left.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BRAGG. The time has arrived, sir, when it is necessary to the interests of the country that the pension question should receive more than a casual consideration. The time has been reached when it behooves us to get out from the roseate bubble in which we live in Washington, prepared for us by claim agents to order, and to look somewhat after the interests of the real soldier and the business interests of the country in common with his. We have drifted along, impelled by a species of sympathetic impulse, regardless of reason or judgment, until our course has culminated in the presentation to and the passage by this House and by both Houses of Congress of one of the most scandalous bills, in my judgment, ever presented to a President for his signature. And I say, sir, that the people of this country have—as they are manifesting already, both by private communications and through the public press irrespective of party—the people of this country, I say, have every reason to be thankful that this bill was presented to an Executive who had backbone enough to meet the situation.

I desire to say, sir, in this my last opportunity to address the House upon this question of pensions that we are now reaching a position when it becomes necessary for us to look at it in a business point of view. In a very few years the soldiers of the country—not the "bummers"—will have arrived at a time of life when their needs will give them a right not to ask from us as a charity that provision be made for them, but to demand such provision as a right. And we must consider that situation as we look down toward it, and must take care that before they make their claim we do not bankrupt the country in order to obey the behests of claim agents and of coffee-coolers, laggards, deserters, bounty-jumpers, and substitutes.

Mr. Speaker, I listened a moment since to a gentleman "who paused for a reply." If he will read the National Tribune, published in the city of Washington—published by men who receive from $25,000 to $45,000 a month as fees from pensioners, blood taken from the soldiers whom they pretend to love—he will find in every column of that paper some squib, some abuse of the President of the United States and of those who dare to think differently from those men upon the propriety of the passage of this bill. These men talk about us as not being the friends of soldiers.

Why, Mr. Speaker, these newspapers that pretend to be the "friends of soldiers" are the friends of soldiers as vultures are the friends of dead bodies—because they feed and fatten on them. [Applause.] They levy their tax upon every soldier; and then they send to the member of Congress representing the district the work to be done in looking after the case. They file the application; they draw their $10; they give notice then that the papers are complete and that the applicant need only send to his member of Congress and his case will be attended to promptly. Those are the men who are the professed "friends of soldiers." They have the voice of Jacob, but their hand has the clutch of Esau.

Upon that question, Mr. Speaker, I say, not vauntingly but defensively against charges which have been made that in the position I occupy I am not a friend of the soldier—in reply to that charge I say that the class of soldiers of whom I seek to be a friend are men who served with troops that were four years and five months in the field, who followed the starry flag in fifty or sixty pitched battles, who were not tired when their terms of enlistment expired, but said to their fellows, "The work for which we came is not yet done; we entered for the war, we re-enlist, and we will stay, God willing, if we are not killed, until the war is closed and victory perches upon our banners." It is that class of soldiers whose cause I stand here to-day to defend against the imputation cast upon them by the passage of a pauper pension bill as a charity. [Applause.]

Say that I am not friendly to the soldier! Mr. Speaker, who that ever enjoyed the exquisite delight of riding down upon a line that was wavering and breaking in the presence of the enemy, and heard the cheer of "three times three" go up as he came—a cheer of confidence and joy that a leader had come—could ever forget his comrades in battle? Who that ever saw those men rushing on, thoughtless of themselves and their home and their friends, ready to lay down their lives in battle, can ever forget them or be willing that those men shall be classified as paupers and placed on the pension-roll with the coffee-coolers of the army? No, Mr. Speaker, the men who advocate this bill are not, in its advocacy, the friends of the true soldier. They advocate this bill, many of them, in my judgment—and I desire to be impersonal in my remarks—they advocate this bill, why? Simply because the men whom they expect to buy by the bill can vote.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. For one, I pronounce that false. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I say that that is the substratum upon which all this action is based—that if these men, whom they class as paupers, were to call upon them individually for aid, they would say, "You lazy, good-for-nothing scoundrel, you are as competent to work as I am." [Applause on the Democratic side.] Although gentlemen may deceive themselves into thinking that their motive here in voting for everything that has the word "pension" upon it is purely patriotic, I can say to them—and I speak the voice of the press (for every paper of any prominence in this country has been teeming with the expression of the sentiment)—if you succeed in deceiving yourselves you simply do what the ostrich does when he hides his head and thinks because he can not see anybody nobody can see him. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The men whose claims this bill recognizes do not subscribe for or advertise in the large papers supported by the capital of the country.

Mr. BRAGG. All I have to say on this question I shall direct to the bill and the situation; I shall pay no attention whatever to interruptions.

It is said by the committee that the President is inconsistent; that he should have vetoed the Mexican pension bill. Had he done so I should have esteemed it one of the noble acts of his life. But when that bill went to him with the almost unanimous vote of this House and the almost unanimous vote of the Senate, and without the press of the country calling his attention to the enormities which some members of the Pension Committee have to-day exposed on the floor of the House, and which others have joined in pointing out in their report on this bill—men who voted for the bill—I say those things not having been brought to the President's attention, was he wrong in supposing that once in awhile a pension committee of this House could report a bill which ought to be passed?

We are told there are other bills which he has signed which should have been vetoed on the same principle. I concede it. But, Mr. Speaker, if the President of the United States had time to inquire into the facts of the surrounding circumstances of every bill which comes from the Pension Committee alone he would have no time to give to any other public business.

On the question of consistency there may be two sides, Mr. Speaker. A few days ago there came to this House a veto of a bill for the appropriation of $10,000 to purchase seed for the destituted people of Northwest Texas, and it was vetoed on the ground that it was a charity, and that there was no foundation in the Constitution on which the President could rest himself in signing a bill which was purely a charity.

Upon that veto message the vote was taken by yeas and nays, and we find, sir, recorded when the M's were reached my friend from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] sustaining the President in the veto message, based upon the ground the appropriation was for charity. And I find nearly every member of the Pension Committee voting exactly the same way.

Now, when the bill was introduced into this House it was presented for consideration by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON], who in his closing remarks says this is not a pension bill proper, but it is a bill purely as a charity. Let him reconcile his vote on this bill against the veto with his vote on that sustaining the President as he may.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look at this bill by sections. Let us consider the first section of this bill to which the President gives but little attention in his message. Let us see whether that section alone is not sufficient warrant to any reasonable man to vote against this bill.

What does that provide? By the provisions of that bill the man who abandoned his wife and family before the war, whose sons may have gone into the service and fell at the hands of the enemy, he finding it out in these latter days may go into the Pension Office and file his proof as dependent father relying on the support of that son who fell during the war, and obtain a pension of $12 per month. I remember to have seen one case stated in the press, Mr. Speaker, where a man abandoned his wife, no issue born, and shortly after his abandonment a child was born of the marriage; the mother and father never met afterward; the son grew to manhood and fell in the war, and the father finding it out made application to secure pension by reason of his dependent condition, relying wholly on the support of his poor patriotic boy.

It may be said this is mere surmise; that such cases occur in the newspapers but never happen in point of fact. Why, Mr. Speaker, on the 22d day of February the President vetoed a bill which passed the Committee on Pensions, both of the Senate and House—passed here on a pension night, and passed the Senate without objection—which is exactly that case, only worse.

Their proof can be prepared to meet all exigencies, and when it is reduced to such a science that the vigilant committee over which my friend from Indiana presides can report a bill which perpetrates such an outrage, may we not say it is time we should prevent the passage of laws which can admit such abuses under them.

I call the attention of the House to the veto message on the papers of John Reed, sr., in which it appears that John Reed, sr., abandoned his wife in 1859. It appears that a son living with the mother went into the war and was killed. It appears subsequently that the mother made application as a dependent mother in the Pension Office under the law for a pension which was due her as a dependent mother of her deceased boy. It appears by these papers while that pension case was pending and after it was granted that father made proof, filed affidavits, established his relationship to the boy, established his dependence on the boy, and furnished affidavits of those who stood by the bedside and attended the funeral that the mother was dead, although she was then on the pension-roll of the United States as a pensioner. And after that man has failed in the Pension Bureau he comes into the Congressional pension factory here and his bill is passed [laughter and applause], and it is only checked in its course by the manly veto of the President.

Mr. MCMILLIN. And he would get a pension under this bill?

Mr. BRAGG. Under this bill? Why, it dispenses with everything except the proof of relationship and cause of death. Certainly he would get a pension under this bill, if it should pass, which I do not expect.

Now, Mr. Speaker, passing from that section, and I say that section alone is amply sufficient to justify any man in casting his vote against making this bill a law, we proceed to the next section, and we find first a dispute as to what the section itself means. The President construes it one way, the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions another way, and the members of the Senate construe it substantially in conformity with the views of the President.

The grant of the pension to a person is made on account of a certain qualified disability. That qualification in the grant is that the person is disabled in such a degree as to render him unable to earn a support. Not an entire support, not a whole support, but if he fail in any degree to earn a support he comes within the class specified in the clause whereby the pension is granted. Then follows that which fixes the rate of pension, providing that persons who shall suffer from "such total disability" shall receive $12 a month. What "total disability?" There is where the Committee on Pensions shows that it has not carefully considered the provisions of the bill. "Such total disability"—taking you back to the clause which preceded it, which is to give a definition to the terms which follows—"such total disability" as has already been specified in the clause granting the pension, which makes the meaning, such total disability in the proviso of not being able to earn an entire livelihood as specified in the granting clause which precedes it. That is the construction which the President puts upon it; that is the construction I put upon it; that is the construction which the Senators in the debate who voted for it afterward put upon it, and that is the construction I verily believe the Pension Bureau will put upon it.

Again, Mr. Speaker, passing on, who will this bill affect? Let us see how much care has been taken to determine the class of men and the number of that class that are to be affected by this bill. And right there let me say in reply to my friend from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], who discovered me as a Presidential agent this morning, that the Grand Army of the Republic, of which both he and I are members, at its last grand annual encampment, passed resolutions condemning a service pension of $8 a month, and my friend is a member of the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And I voted for the resolution.

Mr. BRAGG. That may be.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask a question right there.

Mr. BRAGG. Not now.

The Grand Army voted against an allowance of $8 pension; and still Grand Army men come here, claim agents send dispatches from Grand Army posts, nobody knows who was present who voted or directed or dictated the dispatch, and then see the Grand Army at $8 a month, and go them $4 better for the vagabonds, leaving the soldiers out. [Applause and laughter.] And still they say, sir, they are here in the interests of the soldiers, and defending themselves as members of the Grand Army. There is consistency for you!

But who is to be affected by the provisions of the bill? We are told by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the number will be 9,000, reduced, if I remember his figures correctly, by about 1,800, provided for elsewhere, making the number of beneficiaries under the bill about 7,000. Is that correct?

Mr. MATSON. No, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Very well, then, what are the figures?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The gentleman is only about 23,000 out.

Mr. BRAGG. In the statement accompanying the bill when presented to the House the gentleman presented the figures which I was going on to specify; and by a process of correction, multiplication, and otherwise, he arrived at certain results showing the number of the supposed pensioners.

Mr. MATSON. The original statement I made to the House was that there were 10,000 of these men in the poor-houses of the country; but the Commissioner of Pensions in his later report states that there can be but about 9,000 of that class.

Mr. BRAGG. That was exactly what I was referring to. That is what I said was the figure fixed by the gentleman, 9,000; and then by a process of multiplication his 9,000 is run up to about 26,000. That, then, Mr. Speaker, is the datum upon which we are to proceed here. Now, let us look at the facts.

There were organized seven regiments of infantry, composed of colored troops, that were made up of men who were not fit to do military duty. There is 7,000 to start with. There were three other regiments of colored troops that were organized after the war had substantially closed, and that is 3,000 more.

Mr. O'HARA. Let me interrupt the gentleman right there.

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; not now. There were one hundred and forty regiments, and a number of battalions in all, of colored troops raised during the war. A large portion of these troops were engaged in guarding railway stations in the rear; and a few regiments, three or four, were regiments of heavy artillery. This pension clause opens the door for a pension to every one of the soldiers of the seven regiments that were organized into battalions for the purpose of caring for them, men picked out as being physically unable to do soldier's duty. It opens the opportunity to place upon the roll, out of the whole one hundred and thirty regiments, every single man and regiment that was not engaged in active service in the presence of the enemy. It permits a pension for every hundred-day man who came out to have a pleasant and jaunty excursion when he thought that if the "rebs" only heard that he was coming they would run away from Bull Run.

It places or gives an opportunity to place upon the pension-roll the hundred-day men who closed the war with a blaze of glory in April, May, and June, 1865. It permits an opportunity to go upon the roll 202,000 men, 11,000 of whom afterwards were deserters—202,000 men that were organized under the call of the President in December, 1864. Only three months before the war was terminated in fact a call came, and under that call during the months of January and February there were organized, in response to it, troops consisting of 202,000. Some 13,000 of these were discharged, even at the original camp of rendezvous, because there was no occasion to demand the assignment of them to any regiment. Now, who were these men?

I say to gentlemen who talk about soldiers, who were these men? Do not stand here in your place and talk about the devotion of the country to its defenders, to the men who heard the shriek of the bullet and shot and shell and battle, and covered with blood and carnage carried the flag to victory. Who were the majority of those men that found themselves in the service of the United States from December, 1864, to February, 1865, that Congress should sit up nights to pass pensions to provide for them? They were the scum of the earth. They were men who would not enlist and were not drafted. They were men who staid until those who did not want to go to the front raised money by vote and taxation upon the property in the municipalities and counties had funds placed in their hands to hire and buy things to go that could fill the quota and enable them to escape the draft. They were, I said, the scum; yes, and the dregs. They stood in their holes until they were bought—bought by substitute brokers, bought by men who were speculating in blood, paid from $100 to $800 apiece, feeling assured that they were physically so defective that all they had to do was to go to a hospital and there was no danger to their precious carcasses, so that they could pocket their $100 and go without fear of any injury befalling them.

There are gentlemen on the other side of the House who I trust are with me on this question, and who know just as well as I do that the prisons were emptied, that the poor-houses were emptied, that the slums were all emptied by the proffer of $200 at the door to bring out the inmates that they might be put as a paper credit on the army roll of the United States, and the men who brought this about pocketed the difference made in the trade. I have seen them coming down with ambulances in the rear by scores trying to get people of that class, called soldiers, to march from the shores of the Potomac to the banks of the Rappahannock, and the attempt to get them to the front was a failure.

There is another class. And I might say in that connection when you talk about poor-houses the men you find there as a rule are the men who came from the poor-houses to go to the army, and when they came back they lapsed into their natural condition. No genuine soldier in any patriotic community that I have ever seen ever needed to go to the poor-house to be provided with all that was necessary to care for him. We know, Mr. Speaker, that it is not in that way that the patriotic people of the North treat their soldiers. These men that go to the poor-house go because they are native there; they are drones; they have lived from hand to mouth. They have got no enterprise; they have got no self-respect; they have got no character. They lie down and open their mouths for a teat to suck, and it does not make much matter what animal has the teat so long as they can suck anything from it.

Mr. STEELE. I call attention to the fact that the gentleman from Wisconsin is being allowed to proceed in the line of remark he is pursuing for the reason that it is a fitting testimonial to the cause he is advocating, and not because what he is saying is true.

Mr. BRAGG. I know that the gentleman who has interrupted me if he dared vote his convictions would vote as I do.

Mr. STEELE. I do not think I have ever been accused of not voting according to my convictions.

Mr. BRAGG. And there are other men here who have committed themselves day after day against the principles of this bill and are thankful for the veto who will still vote for the bill. I know what I am talking about. I have heard them.

Mr. BAYNE. Name one of them.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker—— [Cries of "Name!" and "He can not do it!"] I can not? The Republican Congressmen, all of them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am taking up too much time. I will move forward a little. Who asked to have this pension bill passed? Who petitioned this Congress to pass any such bill? Nobody. And the committee say themselves in their report that this report is the free-will offering of the Pensions Committee of this House. They say also that they have never been consulted by any pension agent, or that any influences have been brought to bear to bring about the production of this child. It was conceived, passed its period of gestation, and was born in the room of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. Speaker, how comes it that the Pension Committee, who are struggling so carefully to care for the interests of the soldier in this same bill, took such special pains to take care of the funds of the claim agents? No claim agent there! No suggestion made about any pending bills! No suggestion made about any vested rights of contracts! But still we find some little indication of the feline under this meal. The bill provides a five-dollar fee except in cases heretofore prosecuted before the Pension Office, when, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Pensions, a fee of $10 may be allowed.

Who told them these fellows had three or four hundred thousand cases? Where did they learn it? As I said before, they have cared nominally for the soldier, and have made a provision by which these gentlemen put ducats in their pockets. The hundreds of thousands of rejected cases where the proof could not be brought up to the requirements of the present liberal pension laws will come in under the dependent pension bill; and the $10 already earned by the pension agent under his contract is secured to him by a mortgage on the pension to be granted, and $5 given him—for what? To run his newspaper and boom this bill. One would think so to read the papers.

But I know I shall be told, Mr. Speaker, that I am extravagant. Let us see how extravagant I am. In 1879, in February, we repealed the arrears-of-pension act. The whole number of applications of invalid claims the year preceding was 18,000. After we repealed the arrears act, between that time and June 30 the pension-factory business was stimulated. We had "protected American industry," and the mills all went to work, the hand-bills were sent out, and in the short period between the last part of February and the 30th of June they swelled the 18,000 of the year before to 36,000, and the number of widows was very greatly increased, though I do not now remember the exact number. They had got the machine in good working order, and the next year, before the statute could run again, they increased the 18,000 of the year previous to the repeal of the arrears act to 110,000 males, and had also made an addition of 25,000 females, making 135,000 applications under the act. The next year after the statute ran the number dropped back to the normal standard of 18,000.

What did all that? This species of legislation by which we invite pension agents and claim agents of every kind to send out their circulars and to procure, wherever they can, soldiers' names for the purpose of making applications for pensions by saying to them: "Congress has made large appropriations for you; all you need do is to send on your papers, and send them quick so as to be first on the list, and your pension will follow." Then, sir, commences a system of fraud and perjury the like of which I think no country ever before experienced, and which I hope will be brought to an end ere long. I mean by that, sir, not that the soldiers of this country are addicted to perjury, but I mean that there are sent out blank skeleton forms of what is necessary to be proven, and I mean to say that at every Grand Army post and every Grand Army encampment that meets you will see from one to five hundred men poking through the crowd to get men to make affidavits such as are needed to procure a pension.

Mr. BRUMM. That is not true, and you know it.

Mr. BRAGG. And those affidavits, Mr. Speaker, are sworn to, how? The form of the oath is "to the best of your knowledge." What is that? Nothing. "To the best of your information?" "Yes; my comrade told me." "To the best of your belief?" "Yes; I believe him; and, whether I believe him or not, Uncle Sam has plenty of money, and we may just as well put our hands into the Treasury as have some other scoundrel and thief do it." That is the process of their reasoning, and when they see members of Congress stand up here and vote away the public money for purposes for which they would not spend a dollar of their own money, when they see that species of bad faith and prevarication, they naturally say to themselves: "It is no more wrong for us to dodge to get our little share of the plunder than it is for you five-thousand-dollar-a-year men to violate the strict letter of your oaths in order to give little donations to the people in your districts by way of appropriations for public buildings or otherwise."

Mr. Speaker, I have said that the country is with us. The leading Republican newspaper in my own State promptly came to the front immediately after the veto message and complimented the President of the United States upon it and asked Congress to sustain him in his noble work. The Chicago Tribune, one of the greatest of the Western journals, came boldly to the front and planted itself side by side with the President. You gentlemen who think you are going to make capital in the West out of this question have got to face your own press, and you will find that these gentlemen who sit up aloft, as the sailors say [pointing to the press gallery], may some time or other, by their pens, turn your big pension boom into a much larger boomerang in your districts.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. We have fared in our districts quite as well as you have fared in yours. [Laughter and cries of "Good!"]

Mr. BRAGG. In Ohio the great Republican newspapers of the State sustain the President. The great papers of the State of Pennsylvania, led by the Republican Senator-elect from that State, himself a soldier, stand side by side with the President of the United States. The papers in the State of New York, almost without distinction of party, save the one paper whose head got addled in attempting to count New York for Blaine in 1884 and has not yet recovered [laughter], all stand by the President. The papers of Massachusetts and the other New England States stand by the President. The gallant soldier, Governor Chamberlain, of the State of Maine, stands by the President.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Yes, and he stands alone in Maine. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. BRAGG. I am exceedingly glad to receive the gentleman's information.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is entitled to proceed without interruption.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, the great soldier Palmer, of Illinois, stands by the President. Governor Cox, of Ohio, stands by the President. Old Dan Sickles, of the Third Army Corps, says to the President that the veto is the most glorious thing he ever did. Brave men of all parties stand by the President. It is only the little minds that come buzzing about him like insects around the lion's mane that are against him.

Mr. BRUMM. Great braggarts like you are all with him.

Mr. BRAGG. It is no use, Mr. Speaker; no staff commissary can ever excite my indignation. [Laughter.] I am speaking for what I consider the interests of the soldiers—the soldiers of whom I for one represent a part. The largest Grand Army post in my State voted yesterday not to ask the members of Congress to go against the President on this question. It is only that class of gentlemen who are hanging around Grand Army posts, who crowd themselves in to get the $5 a week, and to live upon their comrades, that are making this grand hue and cry. The true soldier prefers to stand by his record. He asks not that Congress shall mark him as a beggar. He wants to have it understood that he is, in private life as he was in the army, a soldier fighting for the maintenance of the Union, loving his country, and not asking to be supported by it.

Why, sir, look at the effect. Take the Union and the confederate soldiers side by side—the confederate soldier, without hope of any relief from the Government, toiling day by day and exhibiting a thrift, enterprise, and industry that were never expected of him, while the Northern man, the type of self-reliance, industry, energy, and enterprise, lapses into idleness. Why? Because he is waiting for his stipend to come from the Government. And when his stipend comes he spends it quickly, and if he came from a home in the poor-house he lapses back into his previous condition and waits for the next stipend. Humanity only needs to be enouraged to do nothing. We are all liable to drop into the do-nothing policy if we can support ourselves without labor. It is not good public policy, Mr. Speaker, for us by legislation to encourage vagabondism, whether it be among men who are soldiers or among men who are simply citizens.

Mr. STEELE. How about the Mexican pension bill?

Mr. BRAGG. I said with reference to the Mexican pension bill that I wished the President had vetoed it. It has been intimated, sir, that that bill was passed because it benefited some who had been confederate soldiers. I ask any one of you over there, bigoted as you may be, if you would ever vote for anything for a confederate if you did not get some of the "pork." You all, or nearly all, voted for that bill; and now you have discovered that it is a monstrosity. I am only sorry that your guns were not fired before, so that the President could have seen the bill in its true light, and then you would undoubtedly have had two vetoes instead of one, and I should have your names recorded as mine was, against that bill.

Mr. Speaker, I had intended to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN]; but I do not see him in the House. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] for twenty-five minutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the House concurrent resolution asking the President to return to the House the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a rearrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution providing for printing the usual number of copies of a compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors, including the laws of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress, and 1,000 additional copies for the use of the War Department; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

PENSIONS—VETO MESSAGE.

The House resumed the consideration of the veto message.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, no class of our citizens have more reason to be grateful to the President for the stand he has taken on this bill than the veteran soldiers who went out in 1861 and 1862 and staid, fighting battle after battle, till they finally achieved success, and then returned to their homes independent citizens of the Republic they had saved. In nothing else has legislation in this country been so haphazard, inconsistent, and unequal as in the matter of pensions. This has been the field par excellence for demagogues, and well have they cultivated it in their own interest, to the detriment of the country and with little profit or advantage to that class of soldiers that in every war has most of the fighting to do. More particularly is this true with reference to legislation since the late war. Successive Congresses have legislated in this matter as moved by fits of emotion or by hope of political advantage. We have been governed by no settled principles, but have drifted aimlessly as in a fog, until at last we find ourselves on a rock.

For a time after every war we have adhered to the only safe principle which governs the allowance of pensions in every other country—disability incurred in the service in the line of duty. A pension in such cases is but compensation for loss sustained in the defense of one's country, and is as much a right as pay while in the service. This is a safe principle in any war. It is a just principle, and no other is either safe or strictly just.

Service pensions, if graduated according to length of service, may, under certain circumstances, be justified, as in the case of the Revolutionary war; but carried to the extent they were carried by the acts of 1871 and 1878 they become little less than ridiculous. The grounds on which pensions were claimed and allowed to Revolutionary soldiers by the acts of 1828 and 1832 were that the soldiers of that war were discharged at the end of the war without their pay. They had never been paid; and that is the ground upon which the Revolutionary soldiers came to Congress and asked for pensions.

Mr. STEELE. What has changed the gentleman's opinion? I see that he voted for this bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will come to that after a while, but I will not be interrupted now.

Mr. Webster said in the debate on the act of 1828:

> Nothing is more plain and natural than the course which this application has taken. The applicants themselves have placed it on the ground of equity and law. They advert to the resolve of 1780, to the commutation of 1783, and to the mode of funding the certificates.

If I had time I would read other extracts from the debates on this subject, but I have not the time. Some went so far as to state the amount justly due at that time to officers and soldiers of the Revolutionary army. Mr. Burges, of Rhode Island, said nobody proposed to grant pensions to the surviving soldiers of the war of 1812, for the reason that they had been paid in full.

Choate and others said, in so many words, that such conditions could never again arise, and that those who fought in the second war of independence could have no such claims for pensions, and that the act then under consideration could not be made a precedent for granting service pensions. The conditions under which the demands were then made, it was urged, differed from any that could ever again arise.

But in 1871, under a fit of emotion, almost without debate in either House of Congress, a bill placing upon the pension-roll the survivors of the war of 1812 was passed; and in 1878 it was carried to the absurd and ridiculous extent of putting upon the pension-roll all who had served for fourteen days! Not only that, but if a soldier married on the brink of the grave his widow was pensioned for life, and all the other widows of the country paid taxes for her support as a public pensioner. What can be conceived more ridiculous than that? How did such a widow earn the right to become a pensioner? How did the Government become her debtor? If we should find such an act among the laws of ancient republics would it not be accepted as evidence of the decay of the spirit of liberty? I have heard of a case where a man, when a boy, drove his father's team a few days in the quartermaster's service, for which he was no doubt well paid at the time, but by the act of 1878 he was put on the pension-roll and his widow after him for life. Do such laws promote a healthy, manly love of country? Do they not rather indicate a decadence of healthy patriotic sentiment? Do they not tend to weaken and destroy that spirit of independence which is essential to the very existence of republics?

The bill before us, Mr. Speaker, is in some respects even worse than the act of 1878, and although it has been gone over by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] I beg the attention of the House to a further analysis of some of the provisions of this bill which the committee say has had such careful consideration.

First, three months' service is all that is required.

Mr. MILLIKEN. If the gentleman will permit me I would like to ask why he voted for the bill—for otherwise he may forget to answer the question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. My friend from Maine need not trouble himself, I will not forget it. I say, if at the very close of the war, after the fighting was all over, a man entered the service, induced by large bounties, and served only three months, under this bill he would be entitled to a life pension the same as if he had served three years, no matter whether disabled in the service or not, if only he is dependent. Three months on the rolls is held to be enough to entitle one to a life pension if he is or becomes dependent from any cause. Soldiers are plied with cheap literature furnished by claim agents, who throng the capital, telling them how neglected and ill-treated they are because all have not been pensioned. They are told that three months' service ought to entitle them to full support forever after by the Government, as though a little military service was everything, and as though there were no hardships and dangers and privations and severe toil in this world's work except in the military service, and as though three months' service ought to count for as much as three years and service in camp for as much as on the battlefield. To claim agents three months are as good as three years if the fees are the same. Length of service or character makes no difference to them. They would favor pensions for every one who could show that he even thought well of his country if there was a fee connected with it.

> Ill fares the land to claim-agent sharks a prey,
> Where those who did least fighting get most pay.

Duty is lost sight of in this sordid scramble for pensions, whether deserving or not.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Why did you vote for the bill?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will take care of that, and do not want to be interrupted now.

It is the duty of young men to defend their country when they are called upon. It is their country, and the rights they defend are their own rights, and it is humiliating to see the noblest of sentiments reduced to a mere commercial standard, as it is by this bill.

Mr. PETTIBONE. But tell us why you voted for the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. You will find out soon enough.

But let us see first what this bill really means. I was proceeding to analyze some of its provisions when I was interrupted. First, three months' service is required. Next:

> Who are now or may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability * * * which incapacitates them for the performance of labor, &c.

To what degree are they to be incapacitated?

> In such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support.

Not a part of a support, but an entire support—food, clothing, shelter, fire. Is not that what these words mean?

They may be able to earn four-fifths of a support; but if they can not from any cause earn the other fifth they may go on the pension-roll, under this part of the bill, at the rate of $12 a month. So far I do not see how any other construction can be given to it.

They must next be dependent on their daily labor for support. If they have been thrifty and saved anything, and thus made themselves in any degree independent, they do not come under the provisions of the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, under that interpretation of the bill how many men would go on the pension-roll? There are 202,621 men now drawing less than $12 a month. These will all be entitled to $12 if they served three months and have not saved up a competency, no matter whether their disability arose in the service or has been incurred since.

All are placed on the same footing; the man who was shot through or otherwise disabled in battle gets no more than the man who never saw the face of the enemy, but who has become dependent from some cause perhaps in no way connected with the service. The pension is not a reward for gallant service, nor for wounds or scars; not a recognition for brave deeds, not for disability of any kind, for no matter how badly one may be disabled unless he is dependent also he gets no pension under this act. No distinction is made between the fighting soldier and the bummer, the hero and the coward, or between three years' service and three months. Disability, no matter how incurred, and dependence are the sole considerations on which pensions are to be granted on this interpretation of the act.

Now, to increase the pensions of these 202,000 men now on the rolls to $12 will take $15,000,000 a year. Next, there are 386,000 unadjusted claims on file in the Pension Office. The rolls of the Union Army contain altogether 2,765,690. Deducting re-enlistments and duplications, and there were probably 2,200,000 different men on the rolls. It is estimated that of these there are still living and not on the pension-roll at least a million. But this bill takes in all wars. How many there are on the rolls of Indian wars and the Mexican war who would become beneficiaries of this act I do not know, but probably not much under a hundred thousand. How many of all these might claim inability to earn a full support it is difficult to tell, but I think it safe to presume that half would sooner or later go there, for it does not matter how the disability has been or may be incurred.

If 450,000 of the whole number go upon the rolls it would increase the cost of the pension-roll by $65,000,000. This added to the $15,000,000 resulting from the increase of the present roll, and we have $80,000,000 a year increase. It certainly would not be less than fifty or sixty millions, and adding the seventy-five millions now being paid out annually for pensions and we would have a larger outlay for pensions in this country than is required to support the largest standing army in Europe.

Somebody has said that every laborer in Europe has to carry a soldier on his back; if this bill passes it may as truly be said in this country that every laborer has to carry a pensioner on his back; for in the end labor has it all to pay.

The army of France, with 550,000 men, costs but about one hundred and twenty millions of dollars a year, including pensions resulting from all her great wars; the Russian army of nearly a million of men costs less than a hundred millions of dollars; the German army of 450,000, with its pension-roll included, costs less than our present pension-roll; and the British army of 150,000 men costs less than has been appropriated for pensions this session of Congress. Pass this bill, and you can well-nigh put two of the armies of Europe together and it will not cost more to maintain them than it will cost to keep up the pension-roll of this country on the interpretation put upon this bill in the Senate and by the President, and which, I fear, if it becomes a law would now be given to it. The surplus, at this rate, would last but a year, and then additional taxes would have to be levied.

Now, let us look at the second clause, for my time is rapidly passing. If the interpretation which the committee puts upon the bill be correct—and I say there is no middle ground—it either gives a pension to everybody who is in any way disabled and who was three months on the Army roll and is dependent, $12, or it gives it to nobody unless he is totally disabled for the performance of any work at all and is entirely dependent.

Now, which is the true interpretation? The language of the second part of the section is:

> For such total disability to procure their subsistence by daily labor.

Does that mean their total subsistence or only a part of it? To what does "such" refer if not to the preceding clause? But if it means, as the committee affirms, that only those who are unable to do any work at all and have no means of support are included—that is, total inability to work and entire dependence—very well. If that be the true interpretation, then I say it is simply a poor law and nothing else, and a very poor one at that. Under this interpretation the pauper is put before the soldier. What is the pension for under this interpretation? It is not for service; it is not for disability, for a man may have been shot through and he would get nothing on that account. Only he who has saved nothing—the camp-follower, perhaps, or vagabond, as the gentleman from Wisconsin says—gets a pension under this interpretation.

I know a soldier who was shot through the lung and still carries a ball in his body. He gets $6. Would he be helped by this bill? No. But the man who did no service, who never saw the enemy, who was, perhaps, good for nothing in the Army or out of it, who has never tried to do anything for himself, gets the pension. What a miserable excuse for a pension bill! I say it degrades the pension-roll. Away with it! Not a soldier to a regiment of the Army of 1861 will be benefited by it.

Let us apply it practically. Suppose two men go before the Commissioner as applicants for pensions under this bill as the committee interpret it. He says to one of them, "Have you saved anything? Are you entirely dependent?" "I have nothing at all; not a cent." "Are you able to do any work?" "I have not tried in a long time, but I don't think I can." "Lucky man," says the Commissioner; "you have won a pension."

The Commissioner asks the other man, "Are you entirely dependent? Have you saved anything?" The man says, "I have saved something; I have had to struggle hard, but I have saved a little." "Can you do any work at all?" "I try to do all the work I can. I do not think it is a disgrace to work or to avow poverty, but I have always thought it a disgrace not to try to prevent becoming dependent, and I have done my best to get along and help myself." Says the Commissioner, "Poor fool, if you had never tried to do anything and had never saved anything you would now get $12 a month; but as it is you have lost it." Not only that, but if the man who gets a pension under this interpretation of the act, afterward does anything at all to help himself, he loses it.

It is a premium, therefore, on improvidence and laziness. It is a bill to promote pauperism. The pension is for dependence and not for service or disability incurred in the service. The pauper is placed above the soldier who fought your battles. He gets $12 while the soldier, disabled on the battlefield, shot through, gets, perhaps, $4 or $6; and unless he will say he is not able to do a stroke of work and has never saved a cent he gets none of the benefits of this bill.

Further, if that interpretation be the true one, and what is meant is total inability to labor and entire dependence, your $12 a month will not keep the man out of the poor-house. He will be there all the same, but draw his $12 a month from the Government. In what city or town in this country will $12 a month furnish a man with food, clothing, fuel, and shelter? Nowhere. So you do not keep him out of the poor-house, but you have offered a premium for pauperism and call it a pension bill. Soldiers' homes are for soldiers who are entirely dependent, and if there are not enough of them let us build more. But this bill would give $12 a month to every soldier now at the homes and allow him to remain there and be taken care of besides.

Better far go at once to a service pension graduated to the term of service and give it as a further reward for service, as honor for valor, recognition for bravery, rather than as alms for mendicancy. This bill is not reward for service; it is not recognition of heroism; it is not honor for valor; it is nothing but a gratuity to paupers and a premium for unthrift and laziness. And yet it is honored in this House as a pension bill.

I have been asked why I voted for it when first brought in the House. The bill came up under suspension of the rules, with no chance to amend it. I tried to amend it. I wanted the first section to become a law. I do not put upon that section the interpretation placed upon it by the gentleman from Wisconsin. The pauper feature of the bill I opposed when first on its passage in the House. I thought I had reason to believe that it would be amended at the other end of the Capitol. That was not wise, perhaps. It was a case of misplaced confidence. Nevertheless, after opposing this feature of the bill, that was what induced me to vote for it. It turned out a mistake. I ought to have voted against it then, as I shall now.

Now, as to the Mexican pension bill——

Mr. MILLIKEN. Let me ask the gentleman if he is accustomed to vote for bills of which he does not approve, expecting them to be amended at the other end of the Capitol?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I have not time to yield. I admit it was a mistake; nevertheless such considerations often influence members. It was, as I have said, a case of misplaced confidence.

The Mexican pension bill has been referred to. I regret that the Mexican pension bill has become a law. The mistake the President made, in my judgment, was not in vetoing this bill but it was in not vetoing that bill also. But I can not blame the President for not taking all the responsibility in regard to pension bills. The bill ought never to have been sent to him. The best thing that could be done now would be to repeal that measure and go back to the only safe, sound, and just principle of pensions as compensation for disability sustained in fighting the battles of the country; pensions as a right, not as a charity or a gratuity, not as alms, but as a right accruing to the defenders of the country, honor for valor, reward for honorable service, and recognition of brave deeds by one animated by the noble sentiment of patriotism. This bill will not reach, I say, one man in a regiment of those who went out in 1861 and 1862 and fought the battles of the country. No; those men will not be the beneficiaries of this bill.

If my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] had not referred at some length to the opinions of the press upon this subject, and I had the time I would read some of the opinions of leading Republican journals of my State. The Cincinnati Commercial and the Times-Star sustain the President. It has the approval of many distinguished soldiers. General J. D. Cox, of Ohio, General Chamberlain, of Maine, and many others have approved the veto in no uncertain terms. I have received a number of letters from veteran soldiers against the bill.

It is true that some of the Grand Army posts have petitioned members to vote for this bill, but I think in some of them at least I can detect the origin of their movements. It is to be found in this paper, a copy of which I hold in my hand, printed in Washington, which is the organ of the claim agents, and is edited by that scoundrel who in the last Congress admitted, on oath, that he had paid thousands of dollars to attorneys to lobby through a conference committee a bill which increased his fees from $10 to $25, and gave him, it has been estimated, a million and a half of dollars—taking it out of the pensions of the soldiers and their widows. Where the soldier gets $1 a month pension that act gave two years' pension to this scoundrel, and he is one of the men that claim to be the special "friends of the soldier."

When my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] asked awhile ago for the name of some claim agent who was here urging the passage of this bill, I think if he had looked around he would have seen this same lemon-squeezer and blood-sucker of soldiers in the gallery looking down and listening with approval to the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there were no claim agents here in the interest of this bill, and that it was not a claim agents' bill. Does not the gentleman know that the claim agents here in Washington dominate the Grand Army posts in a great measure? [Cries of "No! No!" on the Republican side.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. They do. They dictate the appointment of its chief officers. Army posts, too, it is said—I do not know how true it is—have come too often to be "run" by claim agents as "mouthmen," who did mighty little fighting in the war, and who try to make up for it with mouth service long after the war is over. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish I had time to have read some letters which I have received from veteran soldiers denouncing this bill.

Mr. BRAGG. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I yield, then, to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] to have read a communication addressed to him, and if there is any time left after that I shall read some communications which I have received myself.

TOWN OF UNION, HUDSON COUNTY, NEW JERSEY, February 23, 1887.

SIR: At an encampment of this post held the 22d instant, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

"The commander of Ellsworth Post, No. 14, Department of New Jersey, Grand Army of the Republic, is hereby authorized to inform Hon. WILLIAM MCADOO, member of Congress from this Congressional district, that the comrades of this post unite in condemning the dependent pension bill recently vetoed by the President of the United States, deeming the bill detrimental to the soldiers, sailors, and marines of the United States who served in the war of the rebellion."

I have the honor to request that you will kindly show this letter to Hon. JOHN R. MCPHERSON, United States Senator from New Jersey.

I am, sir, respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN T. LUCK,
Commander of Ellsworth Post, No. 14,
Department of New Jersey, Grand Army of the Republic.

Hon. WILLIAM MCADOO,
Washington, D. C.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRUMM. For every one like that which you can furnish we will show you a hundred on the other side.

Mr. BRAGG. Now, Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE].

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Mr. Speaker, upon the passage of this bill I voted in favor of it. I shall to-day reverse that action, and I deem it proper upon this occasion to state what are to me sufficient reasons for my course. I might say that the reasons which have been given by the President of the United States are in themselves sufficient to justify any lover of his country in voting to-day against this bill. But, in addition to those reasons, I propose to point out in this bill a proposition which, if enacted into law, would work gross injustice to many of the men who were the defenders of our country in the time of its peril.

This bill, as has already been shown, makes no distinction whatever between deserving poverty and undeserving poverty. It does require that these pensioners shall be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them for labor; but it makes no distinction between the economical poor and those who are dependent because of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness.

But there is a more serious objection to the bill. I find in the veto message of the President this statement:

On the 30th day of June, 1886, there were on the pension-rolls 202,621 persons who were receiving fifty-eight different rates of pension, from $1 to $11.75 per month.

Then comes a statement of the numbers receiving these different pensions. According to the construction placed upon this bill by the Committee on Invalid Pensions in their report to this House, those 202,000 men can not receive the benefits of this bill, because they are not totally disabled. None of them are to be entitled to the benefits of this measure, although every one of them before being placed upon the pension-roll must have proved that the injury received or disability contracted by him was incurred in the service of the Army and in the line of duty. I say the provisions of the bill make a distinction against those 200,000 honorable soldiers drawing pensions as rewards for their valor, and not as charity.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman agree with the President touching that matter, or with the committee?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I accept the construction of the committee, and I say upon that construction these two hundred thousand men are excluded from the benefits of this measure.

Mr. CANNON. But the President vetoed it because he says they are not excluded.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] yield?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not for any further interruption. Mr. Speaker, I have received many communications from Grand Army men and from Grand Army posts. One, in particular, is headed "United States war claim agent," and is signed by the "war claim agent" as adjutant of the post.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to ask my colleague [Mr. OUTHWAITE] a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Can I not be allowed a minute to ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I would be glad to hear and answer it if I had the time.

Mr. BRAGG. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON].

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Speaker, in my term of Congressional service I have voted for every general pension bill passed by Congress. In that time the pension-roll has grown from twenty-nine millions to what will be in the coming year, as shown by appropriations already made, $80,000,000. Concurring in the general purposes and objects of the pending hill and always ready to vote relief to all who have suffered from services rendered to their country, I voted to pass it. I am now satisfied that its provisions are in many particulars—that its general results will be—different from what its friends claimed for it, and that it is fairly subject to many of the objections urged against it in the veto. Besides, Mr. Speaker, the veto is so far above the ordinary high-water mark of executive independence and official manhood that I feel like sharing or taking my small part of responsibility for it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The laws heretofore passed and now in force provide pensions for the widows, children, and dependent parents of all the dead soldiers of the late war and to all the living who were disabled or suffered any loss in body, mind, or health as a result of their soldier life and military services. The bill under consideration, with the President's veto, provides pensions to the soldiers of all our wars for disabilities, losses, and hindrances to their ability to gain a living, which disabilities, losses, or hindrances are not the result of, traceable to, nor have they any relation to the army service of the men to be pensioned in consequence of such misfortunes. This is not without precedent, except as to the comparatively short time elapsed since the late war. When such pensions were provided for heretofore it was so long after the war that the survivors might well be supposed to need their country's aid by reason of their advanced age, as in the bill just passed for the relief of the soldiers of the Mexican war, whose average age must be fast approaching three-score and ten.

But the President has not vetoed this bill because it grants relief to too many or too few of the survivors of the several wars; nor so much because of the length of time elapsed. It is because of the uncertainty as to who is to be included and who excluded. Who is to share in the relief to be granted? What disability or degree of disability is to be provided for? The discussion here discloses the fact that the friends of this bill are not agreed among themselves as to who will or who will not be benefited by it.

It was decided substantially by one Secretary of the Interior (Mr. Secretary Zach. Chandler) that the word "helplessness" in pension laws did not imply physical prostration, but inability to get subsistence by one's own exertions; by another (Mr. Secretary Schurz) that a man was entitled to a pension who could do the full work of an able-bodied man if laboring under disadvantage while doing it; by another (Mr. Secretary Delano) that a woman seventy-two years of age with two daughters unmarried and an income of $540 was a pensionable dependent parent; and by another (Mr. Secretary Teller) that adequate support was not the same with different persons, but always had reference to the manner in which each had been accustomed to live.

In this state of the law and with this liberal rule of construction it is plain that this bill which provides pensions for ex-soldiers or their widows for disability "which incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support" with all the qualifying terms which follow, will mean different things to different men. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] were Secretary of the Interior he would, under the terms of this bill, deny pensions to large classes of ex-soldiers who might obtain them if Mr. Senator TELLER were again at the head of the Interior Department. Or it might be that the chairman of the Pension Committee [Mr. MATSON] might grant pensions where Mr. ex-Secretary Teller would deny them. The decision of the Secretary of the Interior is final, and the President might well object to this bill because of its uncertainty and because of the injustice which may be done even with the best purpose to administer it fairly and honestly.

There is, it seems to me, another and most serious objection to this bill, apparently overlooked by both the committee and the President. It was stated by the committee, or some member of it, when the bill was passed that the sole purpose of its first section was to so change the law that present dependency entitled parents to a pension, and that in all other respects the law in relation to this meritorious class of pensioners remained unchanged. This first section says:

That in considering the pension claims of dependent parents, the fact and cause of death, and the fact that the soldier left no widow or minor children, having been shown as required by law, it shall be necessary only to show by competent and sufficient evidence that such parent or parents are without other present means of support than their own manual labor or the contributions of others not legally bound for their support.

It will be seen by the reading of this section that any parent who has to work for a living, as nearly all parents do, need only prove the fact and cause of the death of the soldier son, and that he left no widow or minor children, to entitle the parent to a pension. No matter if the son died in the war or at any time in the twenty-two years since the war. No matter if he fell in battle or died of his own unfortunate habits or by his own hand at any time since the war, a fair interpretation of this section will, I think, entitle the parent to a pension. True, such a construction will make the Government insure the life of a man once a soldier so long as he may have living parents, but such is the effect of the wording of this section.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman will allow me to ask whether the bill does not say "as required by law?"

Mr. MORRISON. The phrase "as required by law" applies to the manner of proof—such as the number of witnesses, the person who is to administer the oaths, &c.—and does not apply in the way the gentleman supposes, to require the facts heretofore required to obtain a pension. "Required by law" is put in the wrong place to mean that. It is so placed, probably, by clerical error. To have the meaning which was no doubt intended, "required by law" would need to have been placed before the words "having been shown" in the section.

Mr. BRAGG. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN].

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Speaker, like the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON], who has just taken his seat, I am one of those who, when this bill was originally considered before the House, voted for it on its final passage. Like him and some others who voted the same way, I now propose to change front. Upon a more careful examination of the bill, together with the report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and aided by the veto message, I am convinced of my mistake in voting for this measure, and shall now vote with the President and against the passage of the bill over his veto.

I shall do this the more cheerfully because of the base distinction which this legislation proposes to make in favor of a class of soldiers who, admittedly, never contracted any disease or sickness while in the service of the United States. We now have on the pension-rolls of this Government 50,274 brave and honorable soldiers whose disability has been rated as total, and who have been and are receiving but $8 per month.

You propose by this bill to elevate the pauper soldiers of the country above and beyond these 50,274 patriotic men, who bore the brunt of the war, who fought the battles of their country and contracted their disability in the field through exposure while in actual service and in the line of duty. You propose that the beneficiaries of this bill shall receive $12 per month, while you are paying 50,274 of the most worthy patriots of the country only $8. This is an infamous wrong. Why this unjust distinction and unfair discrimination?

I have not yet heard this objection urged against this measure. The President is silent on the subject, nor has a single member who has thus far spoken on either side of this important question said one word against the iniquitous distinction pointed out. Why is it that more generous legislation is sought to be provided for the beneficiaries in this bill than has been provided for those who loyally and faithfully served their country until they were honorably discharged on account of disability or disease contracted in the service?

Why shall these soldiers receive only $8 a month while those provided for in this bill are to receive $12? Is it right? I say, most emphatically, no, and so will every brave and honorable soldier in the country. The men covered by this bill may never have seen a battle, nor have left the confines of their own State for the seat of war, and yet receive $12 per month, while the class of soldiers whom we have described may have served throughout the entire war, and contracted their disability in the service, can get no more under our pension laws than $8 a month even under a rating of total disability.

This proposition is so palpably unjust that it does not even admit of an argument. If for no other reason than the one I have just stated, I shall reverse my course and vote against the passage of this bill over the veto of the President. Where are you, my friends on the other side? You talk about your love and friendship for the soldiers, and yet seem to be prepared to vote for this gross injustice to the bravest and most deserving class of them. [Laughter and applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BRAGG. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois for ten minutes.

Mr. SPRINGER Mr. Speaker, on the 17th day of January of this year the House, under a suspension of the rules, passed the bill (H. R. 10457) for there lief of dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support. The bill passed the Senate on the 27th day of January, and was returned to the House with the objections of the President to itspassage on the 11th day of February. The message and bill were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which reported them back on the 15th instant with a recommendation that the bill pass, the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding.

The committee take issue with the President upon the construction of the second section of the bill, which is as follows:

SEC. 2. That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service of the United States in any war in which the United States has been engaged, and who have been honorably discharged therefrom, and who are now and who may hereafter be suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them for the peformance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support, and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support, shall, upon making due proof of the fact according to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may provide in pursuance of this act, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States, and be entitled to receive, for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor, $12 per month; and such pension shall commence from the date of the filing of the application in the Pension Office, upon proof that the disability then existed, and continue during the existence of the same in the degree herein provided: Provided, That persons who are now receiving pensions under existing laws, or whose claims are pending in the Pension Office, may, by application to the Commissioner of Pensions, in such forms as he may prescribe, receive the benefits of this act; but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to allow more than one pension at the same time to the same person, or pension to commence prior to the passage of this act: And provided further, That rank in the service shall not be considered in applications filed thereunder.

The President in his veto message puts the following construction on the foregoing section:

Upon a careful consideration of the language of the section of this bill, above given, it seems to me to be so uncertain, and liable to such conflicting constructions, and to be subject to such unjust and mischievous application, as to alone furnish sufficient ground for disapproving the proposed legislation. Persons seeking to obtain the pension provided by this section must be now or hereafter—

1. "Suffering from mental or physical disability."
2. Such disability must not be "the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness."
3. Such disability must be such as "incapacitates them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support."
4. They must be "dependent upon their daily labor for support."
5. Upon proof of these conditions they shall be "placed on the list of invalid pensioners of the United States and be entitled to receive for such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor $12 per month."

It is not probable that the words last quoted, "such total inability to procure their subsistence by daily labor," at all qualify the conditions prescribed in the preceding language of the section The "total inability" spoken of must be "such" inability; that is, the inability already described and constituted by the conditions already detailed in the previous parts of the section. It thus becomes important to consider the meaning and the scope of these last-mentioned conditions.

The mental and physical disability spoken of has a distinct meaning in the practice of the Pension Bureau, and includes every impairment of bodily or mental strength and vigor. For such disabilities there are now paid one hundred and thirty-one different rates of pensions, ranging from $1 to $100 per month. This disability must not be the result of the applicant's "vicious habits or gross carelessness."

The disability of applicants must be such as to "incapacitate them for the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support." It will be observed that there is no limitation or definition of the incapacitating injury or ailment itself. It need only be such a degree of disability from any cause as renders the claimant unable to earn a support by labor. It seems to me that the "support" here mentioned as one which can not be earned, is a complete and entire support, with no diminution on account of the least impairment of physical or mental condition. If it had been intended to embrace only those who by disease or injury were totally unable to labor, it would have been very easy to express that idea instead of recognizing, as it has done, a "degree" of such inability.

It must be borne in mind that in no case is there any grading of this proposed pension. Under the operation of the rule first suggested, if there is a lack in any degree, great or small, of the ability to earn such a support as the Government determines the claimant should have, and by the application of the rule secondly suggested, if there is a reduction in any degree of the support which he might earn if sound, he is entitled to a pension of $12.

In the latter case, and under the provision of the proposed bill permitting persons now receiving pensions to be admitted to the benefits of the act, I do not see how those now on the pension-roll for disabilities incurred in the service, and which diminish their earning capacity, can be denied the pension provided in this bill.

More briefly stated the President's construction is this: If the applicant's ailment interferes in the least degree with his earning a complete support, and he comes within the other provisions, he is entitled to the pension provided in the bill.

The construction placed on the bill in the Senate, when it was under consideration in that body, is of interest in this connection.

Senator MITCHELL, of Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Senate Pension Committee, said:

I desire to say a word as to the construction that is to be applied to this act. It was held when this bill was up in another place that the second section would only cover cases of total inability to perform manual labor. To my mind that ought not to be the construction of this bill, if it become a law, and I come to that conclusion from its letter and the analogies of the practice under the old pension law. The old total disability rate was $8 in all cases not involving a question of rank. By the practice of the Pension Office that total disability was divided into different degrees; in some cases one-fourth, in others one-half, three-fourths, &c., and that without any express provision of law. Then subsequently an act was passed raising the rate which might be divisible to $18 per month; so that there is a well-settled practice of the Government in that respect, and it appears to me that this bill ought to be construed to cover the case of any Union soldier, or any other soldier included within its provisions, who is now disabled to any considerable extent. Any disability which disables a person from gaining a livelihood by manual labor, I think, is provided for by that section.

Senator BLAIR, of New Hampshire, said:

It can not extend in any event to any but those who are totally disabled, and that number must be very few.

Those who are absolutely totally disabled, as the House of Representatives certainly have construed this bill in passing it, must be but a very small number of those who served in the Mexican war. As construed there, the bill applies to but a very small proportion of the soldiers of the country who are in actual need, no matter whether their disability or incapacity to labor was contracted in one war or in another, or in time of peace, as the case may be. It is not likely to reach far enough in the direction suggested by the Senator from Maine to do any substantial harm; and it seems to me that it will be no stretch of the magnanimity of the Government to let the provisions of this bill, which only apply to total disability as I understand, reach as far as they may.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to ask the Senator from New Hampshire where he gets his idea that it is total disability.

Mr. BLAIR. The terms of the bill itself say so. The phrase which gives a pension says there shall be paid "for such total inability * * * $12 per month." There is nothing in the bill itself about a grading of the $12 according to the disability as it may actually exist.

Mr. FRYE. I do not find that in the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. If it can be construed the other way, I shall be glad of it.

Mr. FRYE. I find it now "total inability to procure their subsistence." Would partial disability, which prevents a man from working all the time, be a total inability to obtain his subsistence by labor?

Mr. BLAIR. Whether it be mental or physical labor.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from New Hampshire is right, because I am going to vote for the bill, and if he is right so much the better; but the bill is not worth much, if anything, anyway.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not suppose it was meant to be worth much, if anything, anyway.

Senator PLATT, of Connecticut, said:

So that I believe that the House sends to us just this and nothing more, that the soldier, now disabled, who can not trace his disability to his army service, or if he traces it there can not prove to the satisfaction of the Pension Office that it orginated there, may, upon proof of total inability to do anything, get the paltry sum of $12 per month, and that nobody else is to be relieved at all by this bill.

* * * * * * *

I want to call the attention of the Senate to the terms of this bill and see how carefully—if I may be permitted to use the language, and I think I may here—how carefully the House of Representatives has contrived not to do anything for the relief of the soldier in this bill of any consequence. Section 2 at first speaks of the soldier applicants being disabled from the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support. If that were all the language there were in the bill it might possibly be held that the House intended at least to leave it open to have this pension graded. That language of itself might possibly form the foundation for an argument that the House really did intend to leave this pension open to being graded according to the degree of disability which the soldier should be under. But when they come to fixing the sum they use another phrase, that the soldier shall be entitled to receive for "such total inability to procure his subsistence by daily labor" $12 per month; not "disability," but "total inability." I apprehend that no soldier will be able at the Pension Office under this law, if it is correctly and properly administered and construed, to receive a dollar until he has proved that he is totally unable to earn a subsistence by daily labor; not that he is partially unable, but totally unable.

Senator TELLER, of Colorado, said:

Mr. President, if I believed the bill was capable of the construction that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] thinks it is, I certainly should not vote for it. I should not vote for it because it would be an imposition upon the soldiers of the country to profess to give them some relief when, in fact, we give them none at all, or practically none at all. I myself do not believe, however, that a fair construction of this bill will support the Senator from Connecticut in his view. I do not understand the bill, I am free to say; and I do not understand why the House of Representatives should, ex industria, have left out words which have become so well settled and determined in the pension practice as the term "total disability." As stated by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Connecticut, "total disability" does not mean in the Pension Office that the soldier is incapable of any manual labor. It means a degree of disability that is either established by a provision of the statute direct or established by the practice in the office. A total disability entitles the soldier to the highest pension; and by the very first section in the chapter on pensions in the Revised Statutes a less disability than total entitles him to a proportionate sum corresponding to the disability.

* * * * * * *

The words "in such a degree" must certainly mean something; and so I take it that this bill, if fairly construed, is a bill to render to every soldier who is totally disabled, who has a total disability under the law—for that is what it will amount to—a $12 pension.

Mr. PLATT. Now, will it trouble the Senator to allow me to ask a question?

Mr. TELLER. Not a bit.

Mr. PLATT. Then the effect of it is, if it be so construed, that the soldier who can not trace his disability to his Army service will get $12 a month for total disability, and the soldier who can trace his disability to his Army service will get $8.

Mr. TELLER. That is exactly where the logic of this bill brings it, and that is exactly where I was coming.

I am willing to vote for the bill because I am ready myself to increase the pension of every soldier in the United States who has a total disability to $12 a month, and if I was not I would not vote for the bill, for it is putting, in my judgment, the soldier who can not trace his disability on a plane a little higher than the other. In other words, where he gets $8 a month the soldier under this will get $12. I do not know but that the soldier who can prove his disability as the result of his service may possibly take advantage of this bill. It is certainly evident that the bill has been crudely drawn and illy considered.

The provision in the nineteenth line of section 2 would probably allow the soldier to elect; but I do not believe it will ever be possible for the Pension Office to divide this pension into eight and four dollars for half inability. It must be either $12 or not anything at all in my judgment.

If I thought that it would be confined, as suggested by the Senator from Connecticut, to people who are totally disabled from manual labor, unable to do anything, then I would not vote for the bill, not because that class of soldiers should not be taken care of, but because there is a very limited number of that class of soldiers, and that is not what the public sentiment has demanded.

Senator VAN WYCK, of Nebraska, said:

Just as I read from my remarks of May 19, 1886, that if a person was unable to earn a complete livelihood it was total disability; it was complete no matter whether, as I said, it was from asthma or from consumption, or one leg off or both legs off. No matter whether he could earn a little day by day or one or two days in a week, if he was disabled, no matter what the cause, from obtaining a complete livelihood, then it was total inability.

Mr. BLAIR. Then it would be a total inability?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Then it would be total inability; no other construction can be put upon it.

Mr. BLAIR. Then the Senator's idea is that wherever there is a partial inability to earn a livelihood, this $12 a month pension would apply under the terms of the bill. Suppose, for instance—to be sure that I understand the Senator, and he desires to be understood—a man is able to earn $1 a week toward his livelihood, would the Senator then give him the pension of $12 a month?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. BLAIR. Suppose he may earn $2 a week, would he give him the $12 a month still?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Yes, sir; I would.

Mr. BLAIR. Suppose that it costs $7 a week to maintain him, to give him a livelihood, and he can earn $6 a week, would the Senator then give him a pension of $12 a month?

Mr. VAN WYCK. That probably is coming a little close.

Mr. BLAIR. But this is a mathematical process; I wish to know whether the Senator adheres to his own proposition?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will explain that.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator says if the man can earn $1 a week, he would give him a pension of $12; if he could earn $2 a week he would give him $12 and no more. Now, if he can earn $6 a week, and $7 a week are necessary to maintain him, would he still give him the pension of $12 a month?

Mr. VAN WYCK. If a man can earn $6 a week, and it requires $7 to support him, the chances are that he has sufficient ability to earn the $7.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator is changing the terms of the supposition and not answering the question.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If the Senator is through with his question, I will answer him. I thought the matter was plain; I tried to make it so then, and I will try now. If the man is so disabled as not to be able to earn his livelihood, without any mathematical comparison, which everybody would know would be in aid of the Pension Office, if he were practically disabled from earning a complete livelihood, then he is under the terms of this bill entitled to $12 a month.

Such were the views of Senators in reference to the second section of this bill when it was pending in that body.

As before stated, the bill passed the House January 17 on suspension of the rules. The vote was 180 in the affirmative and 76 in the negative. Under the rules only thirty minutes' debate was allowed, fifteen minutes in favor and the same time against the bill.

The chairman of the House Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON], who introduced the bill, reported it from the committee and made the motion to suspend the rules and pass it, construed the second section as follows:

The gist of the proposition, Mr. Speaker, is to take from the poor-houses of the country the soldiers who have honorably served their country during any war. The proposition contained in this section of the bill is simply that every man who is totally unable to labor and is in a dependent condition shall be pensioned at the rate of $12 per month. There is no provision for pensioning any one who has a less disability than a total inability to labor; and in addition to that he must show that he is dependent upon his daily labor for his support, and has no property from which to derive an income. It is a charity measure.

The report of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, which was submitted in support of the bill, contained statistics showing the number of ex-soldiers and ex-sailors who are now supported by public charity in the several counties in the Union; also, the number in soldiers' homes, the number in receipt of private charity, the number now pensioned for total disability, and estimates that there are a total of thirty-three thousand one hundred and five persons who will come within all the provisions of the bill, and that the expense would average $144 in each case, and make an annual charge upon the Treasury to the amount of $4,767,120.

The statement of the chairman [Mr. MATSON] and the report of the committee leave no room for doubt as to the construction they placed upon the bill.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] gave his construction of the second section of the bill, as follows:

Under this bill if a man is able to do any work at all he gets nothing; or, if able to do no work, he still has anything saved up, he gets nothing. Only where he can show that he is able to do no work and has nothing is he affected by this bill. The bill, therefore, offers the temptation to men receiving small pensions, but who work as they can to help along, to stop work in order to get the better offer to those who do not work at all of $12 a month.

The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] spoke as follows:

The second section of this bill provides that all soldiers who are now dependent upon charity, who are unable to earn a livelihood by manual labor, shall receive a pension. This is a declaration on the part of the Government that no old soldier who followed the flag for three months, who offered his life in defense of the country, shall ever end his days in the poor-house.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] and the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] spoke in like manner:

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. This is not a proposition of charity, for although we had no written contract with these men we gave a pledge that they and their fathers and mothers should not live or die in the poor-houses. That is the pledge given by this nation, and this bill seeks in a humble manner to fulfill that pledge. This bill gives but a little, but let us give that little in obedience to the very kindest and best dictates of our natures.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] whether this bill would not pension any soldier but one totally disabled?

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I so understand it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let that be understood, that only those who are totally disabled are the ones who are to receive the benefit under this bill, and they form but a small part of the whole mass of the disabled soldiers.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. It is but a small amount, a few millions annually, but where we can not get an ell for our deserving ones let us get an inch.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions of the House, in the report recommending the passage of the bill over the President's veto, reiterate their former statements as to the proper construction to be placed on the second section of the bill.

The question presented to this House at this time is purely one of statutory construction. If the President and the Senators mentioned are correct in their conclusions as to the second section, and such construction is to prevail should the bill pass, there is no limit to the amount which would be required to carry into effect the provisions of the bill. But if the House Committee on Invalid Pensions and the members of the House mentioned are correct as to the construction which the section should have, their estimates as to cost may be relied upon as reasonably accurate.

To state the different constructions put upon the bill more clearly, I will quote again from the President's message and the committee's report.

The President says:

Under the operation of the rule first suggested, if there is a lack in any degree, great or small, of the ability to earn such support as the Government determines the claimant should have, and by the application of the rule secondly suggested, if there is a reduction in any degree of the support which he might earn if sound, he is entitled to a pension of $12.

And further the President is of the opinion that those now on the pension-roll for disabilities which diminish to any pensionable extent their earning capacity will be entitled to a pension of $12 a month.

The construction placed upon the bill by the House Committee on Invalid Pensions is that the disability which will entitle the claimant to the $12 pension must be total inability to earn any support.

These constructions are wide apart. The President contends that the least pensionable disability, other conceded requisites being had, will entitle the claimant to the full pension.

The committee contends that there must be a total inability to labor in order to secure the pension.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Accepting that as the true construction, wherein is this worse than the Mexican pension bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. It is to be regretted that a measure, carrying such vast expenditure as does the pending bill, should be subject to any doubt as to its meaning. The President, entertaining the views he has expressed in regard to the second section of this bill, could not do otherwise than return it to the House in which it originated with his objections. All fair-minded men must honor him for the courage and fearless independence which he exhibits in vetoing a measure upon which the public mind is so sensitive.

Every lawyer in the country will recognize the fact that the President has analyzed the provisions of the bill with a clearness and ability which have rarely, if ever, been excelled in a state paper, and which would reflect credit upon the highest courts in the land. Construing the second section of the bill as he does, he would have been false to his sacred trust had he failed to call the attention of Congress to its provisions. If, after reconsideration, Congress adheres to its position, it can pass the bill, notwithstanding the President's objections.

The question for this House to determine now is not whether its construction is correct, but which construction is to prevail in case the bill becomes a law. If the President's construction is to govern hereafter and the provisions of the bill had been so interpreted at the time, it would not have passed this House when it did, and it could not pass again over the President's veto. The Committee on Invalid Pensions did not intend to report a bill of such sweeping and unequal provisions, and the House had not the slightest idea that it was passing such a bill.

I voted for this bill when it passed the House on the 17th of January. I placed the construction on it then which was given it by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON] and the committee in their report. I am still of the opinion that that construction is the proper one, and that the bill, if so construed by those who are to administer the law hereafter, would not cost a sum exceeding the estimates of the committee, and that it would furnish a greater amount of relief in proportion to the amount involved than any measure in the interest of pensioners that Congress has heretofore enacted. Yet it must be conceded that the bill may bear the President's construction. Many of the best lawyers in Congress contend that his construction is correct. The bill is at best bad for uncertainty.

But should this bill become a law it will not devolve on me or on the Committee on Invalid Pensions to enforce it or to interpret its scope and meaning. That duty will devolve upon the Commissioner of Pensions and upon the Secretary of the Interior, and possibly upon the courts. If the Secretary of the Interior should be in doubt he would submit the law to the Attorney-General and ask what construction should be placed upon it. Section 356 of the Revised Statutes provides that the head of any executive department may require the opinion of the Attorney-General on any question of law arising in the administration of his department. The President doubtless took the opinion of the Attorney-General as to the construction to be put on the second section of the vetoed bill, and we may reasonably conclude that the Attorney-General will adhere to his opinion already officially given to the President. Therefore, if Congress should now pass the bill, with a full knowledge of the construction which the administration puts upon it, will not that construction virtually become as much a part of the bill as if incorporated in its text?

If this construction is to prevail, in case the bill becomes a law, the cost to the country would be much greater than the condition of the Treasury would permit. Instead of being required to reduce the surplus we would be obliged to levy new tax burdens upon the people. If those now on the rolls who have slight pensionable disability are to have their pensions increased to $12 per month, the increased cost on this account would, according to a table I have prepared, amount to $15,000,000 per annum. The amount estimated by the House committee for those totally disabled is five millions. I am of opinion, and this opinion is below the estimate I have received from the Pension Office, that 150,000 persons would be added to the rolls whose claims have been rejected or whose disabilities have been incurred since the war. These would require $20,000,000 a year. Hence, I estimate the cost of carrying the pending bill into effect, according to the construction put upon it by the administration, would be at least $40,000,000 per annum.

Mr. Speaker, I have voted for every general law increasing pensions since I have been a member of Congress——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask leave to print a table I have prepared with my remarks.

Objection was made.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States, was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and a joint resolution of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 9232) to amend an act to prohibit the importation and immigration of foreigners and aliens under contract or agreement to perform labor in the United States, its Territories, and the District of Columbia.

An act (H. R. 8893) directing the commissioners of the District of Columbia to execute a deed of quitclaim and release to a certain alley in Washington to Cornelia P. Randolph and others;

An act (H. R. 7083) to incorporate the trustees of the Young Woman's Christian Home in Washington, D. C.;

An act (H. R. 1993) for the relief of St. Mark's Protestant Episcopal church in the District of Columbia;]

Joint resolution (H. Res. 72) to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company;

An act (H. R. 4806) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east;

An act (H. R. 9918) to provide for grading and paving the approaches to the national cemetery near Danville, Va.;

An act (H. R. 1336) to authorize the construction of a bridge over Bayou Barnard, in the State of Mississippi;

An act (H. R. 633) for the relief of Maj. G. W. Candee;

An act (H. R. 1261) for the relief of Henry A. Paus;

An act (H. R. 2173) for the relief of George W. Cousins;

An act (H. R. 5775) for the relief of James M. McKamey;

An act (H. R. 898) for the relief of the estate of Joel C. Frazier, deceased;

An act (H. R. 4839) for the relief of the personal representatives of E. P. McNeal, deceased;

An act (H. R. 2053) for the relief of Rachael J. Floyd;

An act (H. R. 3289) to amend section 5 of the act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880;

An act (H. R. 7860) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, 1880;

An act (H. R. 9653) to amend section 3058 of the Revised Statutes;

An act (H. R. 1622) to prohibit any officer, agent, or servant of the Government of the United States of America to hire or contract out the labor of prisoners incarcerated for violating the laws of the Government of the United States of America;

An act (H. R. 8297) for the relief of Frank Shutt;

An act (H. R. 6046) for the relief of H. C. Wilkey;

An act (H. R. 5651) for the relief of David W. Low;

An act (H. R. 5326) for the relief of E. B. Dawson;

An act (H. R. 2086) for the relief of Francis M. Bell;

An act (H. R. 1455) for the relief of Lysander H. Carroll; and

An act (H. R. 707) for the relief of J. R. Martin.

DEPENDENT PENSIONS.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I see that gentlemen have prepared long written speeches and then speak for a few moments. Now, on the opposite side permission was refused to extend the remarks of gentlemen on this side who have not taken such precautions.

I therefore rise to insist that no matter shall be put into the RECORD except that delivered on the floor of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that no gentleman has the right to insert matter in the RECORD without the leave of the House.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent to print some statistics——

Mr. BRUMM. I object; I object to everything, unless the same privilege be accorded to gentlemen upon this side.

Mr. BRAGG. I now yield the remainder of my time to the old war governor of Pennsylvania.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Speaker, in the few moments allowed to me I can not explain my position on this bill. I regard the first section of the bill as the most seriously objectionable, as it would pension a class not heretofore regarded as proper beneficiaries of the Government, as it is obscure and indefinite, and must await legal construction. When I reflect that the committee of the House places one construction on their production and the President another construction, widely different, and that the liberal construction of the House is not in accord with the deliberate and fully-considered views of the President, as he construes this bill, it is not favorable to the true soldiers of the country. And it must be remembered, that while the committee of this House will die on the 4th of March, the President will live two years, and has the advice of his Attorney-General, and if he is correct this bill is not favorable to the living soldiers of the Republic or the reputations of the dead, who are, and of right should be, the beneficiaries of the Government.

He must administer the law as he understands it, and he has expressed that opinion in his veto message now under consideration, which is well considered and to which, if I have learned to know the man, he will adhere. Mr. Speaker, we should look at this subject practically and not be governed by sentiment, but to act in the fullest measure with regard to the just rights of the soldier and deal with him generously, and in our enactments use language that is plain and not subject to question on account of its indefiniteness.

But whether right or wrong, I stand here, as I have ever stood, for the rights of the soldier. But now, Mr. Speaker, it is estimated in reports made to the confederate government that anywhere from twenty to twenty-five thousand deserters and prisoners enlisted in the armies of the North near the close of the war, and this bill would give them pensions.

Gentlemen upon the other side, are you in favor of that? If they turned their allegiance from the confederate government to the Government of the United States and served faithfully and became disabled, I would give them pensions, provided the change was in good faith, a fact that this bill does not question. I would give any man a pension who served in the Mexican war, any man who served in any war of the Union, although he may have served in the late war on the confederate side; because when he served his country that contract was fulfilled and he had a right to the bounty, and the beneficence of this great country.

Now, Mr. Speaker what construction is right? If the President is right, and I believe he is, this bill, as he will administer it, will not benefit the true living soldiers or the reputations of the heroic dead, and in my fidelity to both classes I give his veto my vote.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CURTIN. I understand there is no right to ask to print. [Cries of "Regular order" on the Republican side.]

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made to the request.

Mr. CURTIN. In all the years of my service I have never asked the privilege to print. [Cries of "Regular order" on the Republican side.] Will you allow me to print?

Mr. STRUBLE. Not while you are speaking in the time of the man who would not allow any man on this side that privilege.

Mr. CURTIN. I never claim any benefit from an American citizen, least of all from an American Congress, that I would not concede to others; and therefore I will not print. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MATSON. I now yield three minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCKINLEY].

Mr. MCKINLEY. Mr. Speaker, if I believed as the gentleman from Wisconsin believes, that the beneficiaries under this bill were "good-for-nothing shirks," "scoundrels," and "vagabonds," I should not vote for the passage of the bill against the veto of the President, nor should I have voted for it when it first came to the House; but I do not believe with the gentleman from Wisconsin that the beneficiaries of this bill are either shirks or vagabonds or good-for-nothing scoundrels. I do believe that there are thousands scattered all over this country who fought as bravely as the gentleman from Wisconsin fought, although they are not here to tell of their heroic deeds, their lofty courage and glory. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] And although they never rode down the line amid the huzzas of their comrades, as the gentleman tells us it was his wont to do, for these brave men were generally afoot and without horses, and foot-sore and weary marched to the command of duty, they were the soldiers of the country, the rank and file, fighting for the maintenance of the Union. These are the men that the bill applies to.

Now, there are two questions involved in this bill. First, is it right in principle—an act of justice to these proposed beneficiaries—and does the financial situation of the country and the present condition of the Treasury justify it? That is the first question, and the second question is, does this bill fairly represent the legislative purpose of Congress; and is that legislative purpose as expressed in this bill susceptible of practical execution by the administrative officers of this Government? That is all there is in it.

Let us in the briefest manner consider these questions.

The first section of the bill, which provides for dependent parents, seems not to be objected to by the President, so I assume that he finds no serious defects in its provisions.

The second section alone receives his attention. What is it?

That all persons who served three months or more in the military or naval service in any of the wars in which the United States has been engaged, who are suffering from mental or physical disability, not the result of their own vicious habits or gross carelessness, which incapacitates them from the performance of labor in such a degree as to render them unable to earn a support and who are dependent upon their daily labor for support, and who have been honorably discharged from the service, shall, upon due proof, &c., under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior shall prescribe, be placed on the list of invalid pensioners and be entitled to receive for such total inability $12 per month.

It gives to every honorably discharged soldier or sailor unable to earn a living, and who is dependent upon his daily toil for bread and shelter, whose inability is not self-inflicted, to draw a pension of $12 per month. Between private charity or the poor-house this bill says neither, but in lieu of both the generous bounty of the Government. Is that not right; is it not a simple act of justice; is it not humane; is it not the instinct of a decent humanity and our Christian civilization? Where is the wrong? Wherein is the robbery of the Treasury? These soldiers are cared for now by private or municipal bounty. They are cared for by the communities and the counties in which they reside, in some instances by taxation, in others at the hand of charity.

What course so fitting as the way pointed out by this bill, by the nation they served, from its own Treasury, and upon whom or what does the obligation rest so strongly and urgently as upon the nation itself? It is but discharging an honorable obligation upon the part of the Government and expresses its gratitude to its volunteer defenders upon land and sea. It seems to me that the bill is in every way warranted by duty and our situation. That it takes much or little money does not affect its righteousness or justice; that consideration can only apply to our condition and our ability to meet the contemplated expenditure. The larger the class thus dependent and totally disabled only appeals the stronger to our patriotic feeling and duty and makes greater and more commanding the necessity for this measure, and the greater the disgrace and inhumanity to withhold it.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. MATSON. I yield one minute more to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. MCKINLEY. I want to say this bill is justified by precedents over and over again in 1818, in 1820, in 1832, and in acts passed by both Houses of Congress that received the approval of General Jackson, of John Quincy Adams, and of James Madison. And I want now to set off as against my colleague, ANDREW JACKSON WARNER, who speaks for the new Democracy on this bill, what the first Andrew Jackson, the soldier statesman, representing the old Democracy, said on December 8, 1829.

I would also suggest a review of the pension law for the purpose of extending its benefits to every Revolutionary soldier who aided in establishing our liberties and who is unable to maintain himself in comfort. These relics of the war of independence have strong claims upon their country's gratitude and bounty.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is what we want now, a review of the law.

Mr. MCKINLEY. That is what was advocated by the leader of the Democracy of the past. Not so with the Democracy of the present; they have wandered away, arraying themselves in opposition to generous treatment to the saviors of the Union.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That was a pension law; this is a pauper law.

Mr. MORRILL. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from California [Mr. LOUTTIT].

Mr. LOUTTIT. I yield a minute to my colleague [Mr. MORROW.]

Mr. MORROW. The question whether or not this bill is asked for by the soldiers of this country has, I think, been best answered by their petitions and applications to this Congress. The representatives from California have placed in the petition box numerous petitions from the soldiers of the Pacific coast in favor of this measure. I now send another to the Clerk's desk adopted by the Department Encampment of California, Grand Army of the Republic, and I ask that it may be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

LOS ANGELES, CAL., February 23, 1887.

The Department Encampment of California, Grand Army Republic, has unanimously adopted the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas the President of the United States has deemed it his duty to veto the bill known as the dependent relative pension bill; and

Whereas it is the sense of the Department of California, Grand Army Republic, in encampment assembled, that the reasons assigned by the President for his action upon said bill are not, in our opinion, sufficient to justify him in setting aside the wishes of the people of the United States as expressed by the passage of said bill by Congress: Therefore

Be it resolved, That we earnestly request and urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to use their best endeavors to secure the adoption of said bill over the Presidential veto.

Resolved, That the department commander is instructed to telegraph copy of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

W. R. SMEDBERG,
Department Commander.

Hon. W. W. MORROW, Washington, D. C.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUTTIT. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Mr. HEPBURN. Of all the gentlemen that have spoken in opposition to the passage of this bill every one save one voted for it. There is some reason for change of front, Mr. Speaker. A number of those gentlemen like myself terminate their official life on the 4th of next March. And a large number of them, unlike myself, are now mendicants about the White House—

Crooking the pregnant hinges of the knee
That thrift may follow fawning.

[Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I deny the right of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] or the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] to speak for the Grand Army of the Republic of this country. I tell you, sir, that while those gentlemen did occupy honored places in the great army, and were everywhere esteemed, yet they are looked upon by the Grand Army to-day, when they rise in their places here to denounce their old comrades as vagabonds and scamps and perjurers and the scum of humanity, as Benedict Arnold was after his treason by his old comrades in arms.

Mr. Speaker, there was a time when Benedict Arnold rode along the lines with flashing eye and gleaming saber, and when he met with the acclaims of a brave soldiery, who welcomed him with long huzzas as a leader without blemish or reproach.

Yet there was another period in his life when he held an interview with an American on English soil, he not daring to come on American soil. He asked that old comrade what he thought those who had worn the uniforms of the Continentals in the days of the Revolution thought of him—what would they do with him should they meet him. The reply was: "They would cut off your leg that was wounded at Saratoga and bury it with the honors of war, and the rest of your carcass they would hang upon a gibbet." It would be with such an answer as this that the old soldiers, the membership of the Grand Army of the Republic, would repudiate the claim of the gentleman to speak for them in support of the President's cruel veto.

Mr. Speaker, your table is now weighed down with petitions from the old soldiers calling for the passage of this bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. I have had five minutes in addition yielded to me by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON].

Look at those petitions. Post after post of one, two, three, four, five, and six hundred men by a unanimous vote demand that this bill shall be passed, notwithstanding the objections of the President. Attention also has been called to the action of the last grand encampment. In reply I demand attention to the telegram from the grand commander of the United States, General Fairchild, addressed to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which he could not read because he had not time. He tells us in this telegram that this is the bill in its substance that the Grand Army for years has been demanding, and which should now be passed. [Applause.]

So the charge which the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] made that the Grand Army had repudiated this bill is as untrue in word and essence as the greater portion of all of his diatribe of abuse against his old comrades.

Mr. Speaker, it is not an uncommon thing for a skilled huntsman to use decoys. So it is that that solid South that opposed this bill with rare unanimity and that stimulated this veto has put forward all these Northern gentlemen to represent them. Not one of our Southern brethren, for political reasons, has had the courage of his convictions and dared to speak here as he will vote. Why? Because it would challenge the attention of the Northern Democratic soldier to this united opposition of those that once were opposed to us and the wealth of this country and the metropolitan press of this country against the old soldiers. There is this peculiar union, as all have noticed. I deny that the great dailies of the cities speak the sentiment of the country. They do not do it. They are the mouthpieces of the wealth aggregated in the communities where they are published.

I am sorry to say, and I confess it with shame, that that same wealth is in opposition to the old soldiers. The rich men assume that they pay the taxes. And yet, Mr. Speaker, it may not be untimely to sound a note of warning here. Who is it that is in most peril from disturbance in this land? Where is it that there is unrest and disquiet because of communism, socialism, anarchism, and the many kindred political vices that are now current in this country? Where is it that men and women lie down at night uneasy because they recognize the presence of a growing enemy in their midst? It is in those same centers of wealth; and the people there, of all others, need to keep perfect faith with the soldiers and with the material from which the best soldiers are made. The safety of society is in the conservatism of the country and the village life of America. Five millions of the real estate proprietors in this land are farm-owners and live upon their farms.

There are four millions of other landed proprietors, of whom two and a half millions are scattered through the villages and small towns. Therefore, whenever, if ever, the trial comes between the new ideas of confiscation and the old ideas of law and order, those who own the wealth will have to appeal to the conservatism of the farm-owners and village-owners of this country, and there is where the old soldiers are to be found. Mr. Speaker, before I take my seat I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] whether it is true that the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions has in his possession a petition to this body, a public document, asking Congress to pass a service pension bill and put all the old soldiers upon the pension-roll at $8 a month—a petition signed by "Grover Cleveland," in July, 1884.

A MEMBER. When he was a candidate for President.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Regular order.

Mr. MATSON. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WOLFORD].

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Speaker, the bill under consideration is right in principle, correct in policy, and our Government is abundantly able to pay the expense of it. I shall not stop, sir, to inquire who is for this bill or who is against it; my honest conviction is that it ought to pass. I have nothing to say to the discredit of the President of the United States. I voted for him and did all I could for his election. As a Democrat, I still honor him; but I do not agree with him that the poor, starving soldier who served his country should be left to die without recognition or relief from his Government. The President had a right to veto this bill, if he thought it was wrong, and I agree with gentlemen who have said here in eloquent terms that the veto message is an able document; but, sir, in the hearts and in the souls of the lovers of liberty, of the lovers of right, of the lovers of country the report presented by the Committee on Invalid Pensions to this House upon this bill after the veto message of the President was received will live forever. [Applause.]

The President in his annual message expressed the opinion that soldiers suffering from disability, and who could trace their disability to injuries incurred in the service, ought to be pensioned, and he said further, and I honor him for it, that the pension ought to be granted to them not as a matter of charity, but as a matter of law and of right. This bill gives to the soldier who suffered for his country a pension as a matter of right—just what the President said ought to be done; and for my part, sir, I thought I was voting the President's sentiments when I voted for this bill. I thought I was voting with the President of my party, and I confess that his arguments, strong and powerful as they are, have not convinced me or changed my mind, and therefore I expect to vote for it again, the President's veto to the contrary notwithstanding. Who does the President say should receive pensions? Why, those who have served their country long and well. What does he mean by long service?

This bill provides that a man must have served three months before he can be entitled to a pension, and, Mr. Speaker, that is a long time for a man to tramp through the swamps and rivers in an Indian war; it is a long time for a man to have served in the Mexican war; it was a long time for a man to brave the hardships and the perils of that unfortunate war in which brother met brother. I found it so, sir, and I rather think that the President would have found it a long time if he had been there. [Laughter.]

Sir, I contend that every man who would be entitled to receive a pension under this bill must have served long, for he must have served not less than three months. The President's requirement is that a man must have served long and well. Well, sir, these soldiers must have served well. The bill requires that a man must have been honorably discharged in order to obtain a pension, and will any gentleman here say that the officers of our Army would give honorable discharges to men who did not deserve them? This bill providing that a man who served his country long and well in the time of its necessity shall now, if disabled by sickness or misfortune, receive a pension at the hands of the Government he saved, I insist that it is our duty to pass it over the President's veto.

Mr. MATSON. I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LOVERING].

Mr. LOVERING. I yield two minutes to my colleague [Mr. ROCKWELL].

Mr. ROCKWELL. I thank the gentleman, and I but voice the appreciation of the Massachusetts delegation when I say that in the conduct of his useful, successful, and arduous work as a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions he has shown a kindness and courtesy that will be remembered with gratitude.

Mr. Speaker, as a legal and patriotic document the report of the committee far outstrips the veto message.

The aim of the proposed legislation is right. Dependent parents and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors who are now disabled and dependent upon their own labor for support are entitled to aid. The loyal people of the country wish the solemn pledges to the soldier redeemed. They wish the contracts, express and implied, fully carried out. Why should the burden of the support of needy soldiers or their dependent parents be left to the Grand Army posts or to private beneficence?

Towns and municipalities ought not to bear the unevenly distributed burden when the services of the soldiers were rendered for the entire country.

To-day the whole land is reaping the benefit of their sacrifice and heroic action. The Government they saved should make the proper provision. They were willing to sacrifice all in the hour of their country's peril. A great and prosperous nation must not neglect them in their need.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] in the course of his remarks said that no class of our citizens have more cause to feel grateful for the veto than the veteran soldiers who went out in 1861 and 1862. Mr. Speaker, the State of Massachusetts sent out some sixty-odd regiments, only a dozen of which were three and nine months' men. The fifty-odd three years' regiments largely comprise the membership of its Grand Army posts. And to show—in the words of the gentleman from Ohio—how "grateful they feel for the veto" I send to the desk, to be read by the Clerk in my time, a letter and telegram from the adjutant-general of the Department of Massachucetts, himself a one-armed soldier.

The Clerk read as follows:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF MASSACHUSETTS,
GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Boston, February 22, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I send you to-day fifty-two indorsed resolutions received from posts. If I had ten days more I could send them from most, if not all, the posts in this department. Will telegraph you the number I receive between now and Wednesday night.

I have the honor to be yours, respectfully,

A. C. MONROE,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Hon. HENRY B. LOVERING,
House of Representatives, Forty-ninth Congress.

BOSTON, MASS. (11.36 p. m.), February 23, 1887.

I have received indorsed resolutions from Post 5 and thirty-nine other posts to-day, making with those sent to you ninety-one.

A. C. MONROE,
Assistant Adjutant General.

Hon. HENRY B. LOVERING,
House of Representatives, Forty-ninth Congress, Washington.

Mr. LOVERING. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the fact that these ninety-one posts whose voice has been declared within the few days which have elapsed since the veto, represent a majority of the one hundred and seventy-two posts in the State of Massachusetts.

Mr. MATSON. Mr. Speaker, the question is, Shall this bill pass notwithstanding the objections of the President? And in discussing that question, I wish to confine myself as strictly as it is possible for me to do to the precise point in issue, and not to travel out of the record in the least degree more than I may be compelled to do by the scope of the question itself.

One of the most distinguished ex-Senators of the United States, and perhaps the most distinguished and eloquent of them, is reported to have said upon one occasion that "plain words are sometimes best." And in respect of those things which require candor and sincerity between men and a dealing with rugged facts, I think that even his flaming tongue might well have been confined within so narrow a limit. And when I come to be circumscribed, as I am, within that boundary, I shall certainly not attempt to indulge in the least my imagination, if I have any, nor to display in any way any oratorical ability. I desire to speak plainly; and I speak for myself, for the committee, for the bill; and for no one and nothing else. Further than this I do not assume to have the right to go.

Mr. Speaker, many constitutional writers and many lawyers have always held, ever since the foundation of our Government, that the veto power ought to be limited to objections confined to questions growing out of the Constitution. I do not believe in that view. I believe that under the Constitution the President has the right to exercise the veto power upon questions of mere expediency, as he has done in this case; and I believe that the Chief Executive has, within the less than two years of his administration, illustrated frequently the value of this construction of the constitutional power vested in him.

It has been my pleasure, as well as my duty, on more than one occasion to stand here and defend him when he has vetoed bills, basing his objections not upon constitutional grounds, but upon mere questions of the expediency of the legislation. I do not say it to boast, but I might add that perhaps I have said more in his defense in this regard than has ever been said by any other member of this House. I would be glad to stand with him and support his veto; I would be glad to see presented to the country on this question a united Democratic party, if my conscience and my heart would permit it. I am driven and impelled to take the course I have taken because, and only because, I believe it my duty as a legislator to ask the House to pass this bill over the objections of the President.

My friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] asks me to reconcile with my opposition to the President's veto in this case my support of his veto of the bill providing for a distribution of seed in some portions of the State of Texas, which he says was a mere charity measure. If he can discover any parallel between the two cases, or between the two vetoes presented by the President, then I must confess that he has more acumen than I have. In the one case the veto was based upon constitutional reasons—was expressly put upon the ground that there was no warrant in the Constitution for any such legislation as that under consideration. Here no man denies, and no man will deny—of all the champions of this veto, numbering among them some of the strongest men in this House, none have undertaken to deny—the constitutional right of Congress to enact this bill. There is not presented here any question of that kind.

Mr. Speaker, let us read what this bill is; and before I read it to the House—and it has not been read yet to this House in argument—before I read it to the House, I say no measure has been considered in Congress which has been subject to such willful and gross misrepresentation on the part of the press of the country as this bill now under consideration. None, sir.

They say it is a pauper bill. It is not a pauper bill. The President has one objection to the bill and states it, that it does not provide a man should be without property. That is one of the grounds upon which he bases his objection to it. The bill relates, as all pension bills do, except service pension bills, to the question of a man's physical disability. The point of difference between this bill and those heretofore enacted is simply as to when the disability was incurred, this providing pension for disability incurred since the service and the other providing pension for disability during service.

Let us see. I think there are two pivotal points upon which this whole question turns, made by the veto message of the President; one is the question of construction to be placed on this bill, and the other the question of the cost of it. And if I can satisfy the House the committee I have the honor to represent is correct in the interpretation put upon the bill and its estimates are probably true, I apprehend votes which perhaps would be given against the bill will be changed in favor of it.

The President has seen fit to analyze the bill with very great care, except that he fails to call attention in the analysis which he makes firstly, secondly, thirdly, fourthly, and fifthly to this provision in this section, which I insist absolutely controls and puts beyond the power of any one to place the construction upon it given by the President and those who stand arrayed with him.

That provision is this: The bill provides for such total disability to procure subsistence by daily labor at $12 a month, and that said pension shall commence from the date of filing application in the Pension Office, upon proof of the disability then existing, and continue during the existence of the same in the degree herein provided.

Mr. MATSON. I defy any man, I care not who he is, to put a construction on that language, taken in connection with the whole bill, as a law ought to be construed, and give it any other construction than that no pension is provided for unless there is a total inability to secure subsistence by manual labor.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What does "such" mean?

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman has had his time, and I decline to yield to him.

Mr. Speaker, different constructions have been given to this bill. The President calls attention to the fact in his message. I might pause here and say as these three gentlemen—the President and those two cited by him—are doctors of the law, the untitled and undecorated scion of the law might well approach the discussion of this question with reluctance, and he would not undertake it at all if he had not the conviction that the truth was upon his side of the controversy. And I undertake to say here, now, if any lawyer will read this bill, and can see his way to put any other construction upon it than that placed upon it by the committee when the bill originally passed, he ought to vote against it.

But I defy any lawyer to do it when he considers the whole bill, and particularly that provision which provides the pension "shall only continue during the existence of the disability in the degree herein provided." It can not be done. It is entirely impossible when the whole language of the bill is considered together.

These three gentlemen alluded to (the President and the two he arrays with him) by some means or other have each arrived at a different interpretation of the bill. The President says it not only includes one class, but he says it may be fairly contended that it includes all those who are in any way impaired by some physical or mental disability. Another he alludes to says it only includes those who are disabled to a considerable degree; and the third gentleman he brings in support of his proposition in the discussion said elsewhere it is to be construed in view of the technical language coming out of the practice of the Pension Office. I undertake to say every lawyer will recognize the rule that in the construction of a law, or indeed any legal instrument, the words used are to be construed according to their ordinary meaning and acceptation. Is not that the rule?

And yet these three doctors of the law disagree, and when doctors disagree disciples are left free. But I insist, sir, that but one construction can be placed upon it, and that is the interpretation I have given.

Now, as to the cost. No man here or elsewhere, I care not where you go, has undertaken to give any estimate of the cost based upon any actual figures ascertained from any official source. Except the Committee on Invalid Pensions, no one has done so. It has been assumed that it would cost one hundred millions, fifty millions, forty millions, seventy millions per annum, but no figures or facts are given upon which the estimates are based, while the figures of the Committee on Invalid Pensions are figures taken from official sources; taken from facts collected by the Pension Office. They can be relied upon as accurate.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the President brings as against our estimate the fact that a great mistake was made in the year 1818, because Mr. Bloomfield, of New Jersey, said on the floor of the House that but three hundred and seventy-four persons would be benefited by a certain bill for the benefit of soldiers of the Revolutionary war, whereas it turned out that some twenty thousand applied. But there can be no comparison between the two cases.

In the first place the laws were entirely different. That law, under which his estimate was made, provided that a soldier in reduced circumstances, and who was in need of aid from his country, should be allowed a pension. But how was it allowed? Not in the Pension Office. It was not adjudicated as pension claims are now adjudicated, but it was determined in the local courts where the applicants lived. Of course under such a condition of affairs there was favoritism. Of course the law was abused. It could not have been otherwise. There was no uniformity about its execution, but it was administered according to the temper and opinion of the people surrounding the court, and necessarily there were abuses under it. More than that, the estimate he made to the House, when you come to look at it, and what transpired at the time, was made upon his own individual knowledge of the existence of some need of that kind of legislation, and no more.

Then, again, the President says a great mistake was made in the estimate of the cost of the arrears of pensions. Of course there was; but how? It is true that a statement was made here upon the floor of the House that the bill would cost from fifteen millions to twenty-five millions of dollars, but that was done in the face of a statement from the Secretary of the Treasury that it would cost some $100,000,000. It was made in the face of it.

A MEMBER. Was not that estimate made after the bill passed?

Mr. MATSON. As I understand, it was made before; but nevertheless it was made by an officer of the Government, while we here to-day first prepare from official sources the basis of our estimate; and then, with all the means best known at this day for the purpose of acquiring statistical information, together with our own estimates, present a well-prepared bill showing what the cost may be, and upon which estimate you may well rely; and we unhesitatingly ask you to pass the bill upon that. There is no comparison, therefore, between the cases. But I must hurry on.

This bill ought to pass, because it is a companion piece of legislation with the Mexican pension bill. How? Not because it was passed by the same Congress; not because it was passed on the same day and in the same way that the Mexican pension bill was passed. Not that; but because it contains a provision for the payment of the same kind of pension for the same kind of disability that the Mexican pension bill provides, only the rate is more, and wherever the Mexican soldier shows that he comes within the provisions of the bill we are now discussing he can get the benefit of the increase. But let us see what the Mexican pension bill does. The Mexican pension bill provided, in regard to the matter of disability, a pension of $8 a month for every soldier that had any disability. It made no difference how it was incurred, whether it resulted from his own vicious habits, gross carelessness, or otherwise; any disability he incurred, at any time, entitled him to get a pension of $8 a month. The Union soldier who incurred the same kind of disability during the war, in the line of duty, for that disability was to be left to receive a pension of perhaps but $2 a month.

There was legislation at that very hour, on that very day, on that very subject, in this House. And so I repeat to you that the two bills were companion pieces of legislation. Here there were, upon the part of those who favored the Mexican pension bill, men who were ready to provide the same kind of relief to soldiers of other wars. Here there were those who were opposed to the Mexican pension bill, who, for the sake of this legislation, were conceding the right of the survivors of the Mexican war to get such relief.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let me ask the gentleman from Indiana to give an answer to my question before he closes his remarks.

Mr. MATSON. I will try to reach it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I hope the gentleman will not forget it.

Mr. MATSON. I shall not forget it.

Mr. PETERS. You have but about three minutes remaining of the time.

Mr. MATSON. I am asked by the gentleman am I ready to state whether or not the President has ever signed a petition asking that pensions shall be granted to all of the soldiers of the late war for the Union of $8 a month. It is impossible for me to read the whole of the petitions. Here is a petition circulated by one Corydon Millard, late chaplain of the Fourth United States Heavy Artillery, that I will not undertake to read or ask to have read, but the substantial portion of it is contained in these words:

And we ask your honorable body to grant a pension of at least $8 a month to all honorably discharged soldiers of the Union Army.

Mr. STAHLNECKER. What is the date?

Mr. MATSON. This was signed in June, 1884; and at the bottom of the petition among many names, including the governor of the State of Virginia, Mr. Cameron, I find this:

I am sure the subject of this petition is worthy of the prompt and careful consideration of Congress, and that the fullest justice should be done to the parties in whose interest this movement is made. GROVER CLEVELAND.

[Great applause.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That shows he is with the soldier, and there is no inconsistency.

Mr. MATSON. The substantial objection raised in this veto is not as to the construction of the bill, or as to the cost of it. It is that the time has not come when the country can afford to pension the soldiers of the country for its wars except for disabilities incurred in the service. I want to know how the friends of this veto by the President can reconcile with it not only this petition but the language of his last annual message, which points as unerringly as anything can to the very bill we present—how it is they can reconcile these statements together.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 4 o'clock has arrived, at which time it was agreed debate should close. The question is, Will the House, upon reconsideration, pass the bill? Upon this question the Constitution requires that the yeas and nays shall be taken.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 175, nays 125, not voting 18; as follows:

YEAS—175.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the bill was not passed.

During the first roll-call the votes of Mr. HOLMAN and of Mr. RANDALL, in the affirmative, elicited loud applause.

After the first roll-call, Mr. BRAGG asked that the reading of the names be dispensed with.

Mr. WEST. I object.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. HENLEY with Mr. SADLER, on this vote. If present, Mr. HENLEY would vote "ay," and Mr. SADLER would vote "no."

Mr. RUSK with Mr. WINANS, on this bill. If present, Mr. RUSK would vote "no," and Mr. WINANS would vote "ay."

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. WALLACE, on the pending bill. If present, Mr. ANDERSON would vote for the bill, and Mr. WALLACE to sustain the veto.

Mr. BLAND. My colleague, Mr. CLARDY, is unavoidably absent. If he were present, he would vote to sustain the veto.

Mr. DINGLEY. My colleague, Mr. REED, is paired for the day, being absent. If present, he would vote to pass the bill over the veto.

Mr. McADOO. My colleague, Mr. PIDCOCK, is unavoidably detained from the House to-day. He instructs me to say that had he been present he would have voted "ay."

Mr. WISE. I desire to state that if my colleague, Mr. CROXTON, were present he would vote to sustain the veto.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the yeas are 175; the nays 125. Two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the House refuses to pass the bill.

The announcement was received with applause on the Democratic side, followed by hisses on the Republican side.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 10395) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888;

A bill (H. R. 10804) to effect a rearrangement of grades of office in the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army; and

A bill (S. 2992) to make Tampa, Fla., a port of entry.

MRS. M. E. WOODS.

Mr. LOVERING. I present a privileged report, the report of a committee of conference.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

H. B. LOVERING,
J. S. PINDAR,
E. H. CONGER,
Managers on the part of the House.
PHILETUS SAWYER,
H. W. BLAIR,
JAMES F. WILSON,

The report was accepted.

Mr. LOVERING. I move that the House further insist on its amendment, and request a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. NEECE, Mr. SWOPE, and Mr. CONGER.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union to consider general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first general appropriation bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HERBERT. I shall occupy but a very few minutes in explaining the provisions of this bill, and before I begin I wish to ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. BOUTELLE] how much time he desires for general debate?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not ask any time for general debate if we can have an understanding that there will be no attempt to cut off fair debate when the bill comes to be considered by sections.

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly, sir; I have no other disposition about the matter.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the gentleman's statement, I now ask unanimous consent that general debate on this bill be limited to fifteen minutes.

Mr. STEELE. Make it ten minutes.

Mr. GOFF. What does the chairman of the committee propose?

Mr. HERBERT. I understood that gentlemen on the other side did not want any time for general debate. I desire to occupy only about ten minutes in explaining the bill, and I do not propose to address myself at this time to any of the disputed points, but will leave them for discussion hereafter.

Mr. GOFF. Then why not dispense with general debate altogether?

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to make a brief statement in explanation of the bill.

Mr. GOFF. You can do that under the five-minute rule.

Mr. HERBERT. Oh, yes, I can, if gentlemen object to my having ten minutes——

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is not a question of objection; you made the suggestion yourself that you wished to get along without talk.

Mr. HERBERT. That is what I want to do.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama that general debate upon this bill be limited to ten minutes will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that while this bill is larger in the aggregate than last year's bill, yet the appropriations for the support of the Navy proper are smaller. Comparing, briefly, the present with the two last preceding bills, the appropriations for the support of the Navy proper——

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] whether he proposes to take any votes upon this bill by paragraphs this afternoon?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Oh, no.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the question because some gentlemen are absenting themselves.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the House will stay here until 6 o'clock. I think we may get half through the bill by that time.

Several MEMBERS. That is too late.

Mr. HERBERT. I will print in the RECORD a comparison of the present bill with preceding bills. That statement will show that this one appropriates $12,655,000 for the ordinary expenses of the Navy, not including items imported into the bill from the sundry civil bill, and also not including the appropriations for the increase of the Navy. Making similar exclusions, our last bill appropriated for the same purpose $12,989,000, and the bill preceding that appropriated $13,235,000. Therefore, in this bill as reported there is a saving of $324,000 compared with the bill of last year, while in the bill of last year there was a saving of $246,000 compared with the bill of the preceding year. When we add all together we have $1,732,000 for public works heretofore included in the sundry civil bill estimated for under that bill, and for the increase of the Navy $8,653,000 for the ordnance and for building the ships already authorized. The whole amount of this bill is $23,040,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read in sections.

The Clerk, reading the bill by paragraphs, read as follows:

Publication of surveys of Mexican coast: For preparing and engraving on copper-plates the surveys of Mexican coast, $5,000.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire of the chairman whether he thinks that appropriation is sufficient. It is only one-half the estimate.

Mr. HERBERT. It is one-half the estimate, but it is an increase of $1,000 over the amount appropriated last year. That amount was sufficient to keep them at work, and we believe that the amount in this bill will be found sufficient for the present year.

Mr. GOFF. How do you know that?

Mr. HERBERT. By having examined into the work to be done, and by having inquired of the officers themselves.

Mr. GOFF. The items furnished us by the Department aggregate $10,000.

Mr. SAYERS. I will state to the gentleman that the Department has been able to employ only one vessel, instead of two.

Mr. GOFF. That is no argument as to what will be done in the future. But upon the statement of the chairman of the committee, I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Publication of surveys of Mexican coast: For preparing and engraving on copper-plates the surveys of Mexican coast, $5,000.

Mr. BUCK. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 85 insert the following:

"For repairs and improvements on naval war college building; heating, lighting, and furniture for same; books and stationery; freight and other contingent expenses, including facing college buildings with Portland cement, $12,000."

Mr. HERBERT. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane at this place in the bill. Further on I shall be willing to meet the question.

Mr. BUCK. In reply to the gentleman's point of order, I will say that this is the place where the estimate for the naval war college is inserted in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. HERBERT. I think the gentleman is right as to that.

Mr. BUCK. And it is the precise point at which last year a corresponding amendment was offered, which was ruled to be in order. I understand, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] concedes now that this is the proper place for the amendment and withdraws the point of order.

Mr. HERBERT. Upon the suggestion made by the gentleman that this is the place where the item is inserted in the estimates—and according to my own recollection the gentleman is correct—I withdraw the point of order, and am ready to meet the question on its merits.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I understood the chairman of the committee to reserve a point of order. If he withdraws it I renew it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the point of order?

Mr. BUCK. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] claims that this amendment is not germane; that this is not the appropriate place to insert a provision for the naval war college. Now, as I have said, this is the precise point at which this provision was offered to the bill of last year. Whether any objection was made at that time I do not remember, but certainly the amendment was considered. In addition to that this is the precise point where the provision for the preservation of the buildings at Coaster's Harbor Island occurs in the Book of Estimates.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. The point of order which I desire to make is not clearly stated by the gentleman from Connecticut. I do not base the point upon the ground which he suggests at all. My point of order is that this appropriation can not be made under the rules of the House.

Mr. BUCK. I supposed the gentleman from Illinois renewed the point of order which the gentleman from Alabama made.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. A reservation of the point of order covers all grounds upon which that point can be sustained. The ground on which I base the point is that this war college has never been authorized by law and that on a general appropriation bill an appropriation can not be made for the support of an institution which has not been authorized by law.

Mr. BUCK. This same point was made last year, and, according to my recollection, was overruled by the Chair; but whether it was or not, there is a perfect answer to the gentleman's point. My amendment proposes simply to preserve the buildings on Coaster's Harbor Island, which are now the property of the Government and have been ever since 1884. So far as the establishment of the college is concerned, it was established in 1884 by an order of the Secretary of the Navy, based upon a statutory provision authorizing him to provide for the instruction of young naval officers. But this amendment as drawn provides only for the preservation of the buildings. It is perfectly in order to offer on a general appropriation bill an amendment of this character for preserving buildings belonging to the United States. This is an existing work; and propositions of this kind have been held over and over again to be in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish to inquire of the Chair whether the gentleman from Illinois makes the point that this proposed amendment is new legislation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to make that point.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why, Mr. Chairman, this war college has been carried on for years under provisions of existing law. That point can not be well taken.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. There is no general law authorizing this establishment. The only law relative to it has been in the making of appropriations for it.

Mr. BUCK. Is not there a statute upon the subject accepting this from the State of Rhode Island on the part of the United States, and having so accepted it, is it not our duty now to take care of it?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. If I understand the point of order it is that there is no general statute authorizing this college as an institution of the Government. But I think my colleague overlooks the fact it is not necessary in order to justify an appropriation that it should be authorized by existing law. I have noticed in almost all the discussions which have taken place over the new rules confusion has always been made between that part of the rules prohibiting legislation and that part which contains the phrase "authorized by existing law." That part of the rules containing the phrase "authorized by existing law" does not prohibit all appropriations not authorized by existing law. It simply prohibits a certain class of such legislation. And this appropriation, though there be no existing law for it, still may be in order under the rule of the House, as the Chairman will see by critical examination of the rule. The crucial point is whether it is in continuance of some object or purpose for which appropriations have been made, and if it is, the fact there is no existing statute provided for it cuts no figure at all.

Mr. BUCK. I have found the act to which I have referred. It is the act of August 7, 1882, and is as follows:

For repairing and extending wharf and the erection of boat-houses on Coaster's Harbor Island, $5,000; and the cession by the State of Rhode Island to the United States of said island for use as a naval training station is hereby accepted (7th august, 1882, sundry civil act, printed edition of laws, page 324).

For continuation of the wharf, and for a rigging and sail loft and drill hall on Coasters' Harbor Island, $45,000.—(3d March, 1883, Printed Edition of Laws, page 620; Sundry Civil Act.)

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. The building referred to in this act is a very different institution. It is the one used by the training squadron——

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman is mistaken, as he will find by reading the last clause.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. It is a building used by the training squadron as a training station. It does not refer to the building on the top of the hill.

Mr. BUCK. The Government has acquired it, and it ought to take care of it.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. It is used as a training station for young men who are being trained as sailors.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. TOWNSHEND having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate was received, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announcing that that body insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL as managers of said conference on its part.

The message further announced the Senate insisted on its amendments to the bill H. R. 10802 (District of Columbia appropriation bill), disagreed to by the House, and requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK as managers of said conference on its part.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say simply on the point of order that the building for the repair of which the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK] is offered is located on Coaster's Harbor Island, which was ceded by the State of Rhode Island to the General Government and accepted by the General Government by the statute which has been read. Upon that island there were buildings standing at the time the State of Rhode Island presented it to the General Government, because it was a gift from the State of Rhode Island to the United States. Since that time there have been appropriations made for some repairs, including repairs on another building on that island.

Now, I think if the Chair would simply refer to the third clause of Rule XXI, under which this point of order is raised, if it can be raised at all, the Chair will see that any amendment is entirely in order which provides for the "continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress." And I quote the exact language of the rule.

Therefore, the only point of order which would lie against the proposition would be in the event that the proposed amendment was to change existing law; for the next paragraph of the clause from which I have just read is in these words:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut does not propose any change in the existing law. It simply proposes to provide for the proper repair of a building already upon this Coaster's Harbor Island, the property of the United States Government, and is certainly quite as much in order as an amendment here as any proposition in a general appropriation bill providing for the protection or repair of any other Government building which was properly included in any appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Before deciding the question I want to call the attention of the Chair just one moment to one thing which has been presented to the Chair in an erroneous light. The act by which this Coaster's Island was ceded or accepted by the Government was an act authorizing its acceptance, not as a war college or for war college purposes for the training of officers and educating them in the duties of their profession but as a training-station for men; and the proposition is for a building for the use of the men who are being trained there as common sailors. It does not refer to a building which happened to be on the ground, an old almshouse, but in such a dilapidated condition——

Mr. SPOONER. Not very dilapidated.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Which is so dilapidated that it was necessary to whitewash it before the men were allowed to go in and repair it.

Mr. SPOONER. I have been there myself and know its condition.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I speak from a personal inspection of the property myself. This is an attempt to organize a college there for the education of officers by an amendment on an appropriation bill and without authority of existing law. It is clearly in violation of the rules of the House, and I think the point of order ought to be sustained against it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman from Illinois answer me this question: I would like to ask my colleague if the United States Government has not accepted the property?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. For a training school for men.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will you be kind enough to answer my question, whether the United States has not accepted the buildings that have not been used for a training school for seamen, but accepted buildings there and become the owner of them which have been used for a war college for officers and has appropriated money for the repair of these buildings? And is this amendment not simply for the continuation of these repairs, or making other repairs, upon buildings already in possession of the United States Government, and the jurisdiction over which it has maintained for years?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

The Chair will direct the Clerk to read clause 3 of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read a decision by a former chairman of the committee upon a similar point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. Clause 3, Rule XXI, provides that—

"No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress."

Unquestionably the general rule is that no appropriation is in order on a general appropriation bill unless the appropriation be authorized by previously existing law. That is the general rule. But to that general rule there is an express exception:

"Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress."

That is to say, if the work be a public work and it is already in progress, then there need not be any previous legislative authority for the work.

Now, the Chair must believe that the construction of this ship is a public work. The Chair also believes that it is in progress. The mere fact that this vessel begun in 1865 is confessedly still incompleted, the Chair thinks, so far as this rule is concerned, does not show that that work is not now in progress. The fact that the actual construction is temporarily interrupted for want of appropriation or some other reason does not interfere with the idea that the work is in progress. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has had the subsection of Rule XXI, and also the decision of a former chairman of the Committee of the Whole, read, because the decision in that case is in point, and bears upon this case.

The Chair is of opinion that as the land on which this college is situated is owned by the United States, and under the control of the United States, that this subsection 3, of Rule XXI, does not apply because that subsection states that—

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such works as are already in progress.

The Chair thinks that this amendment seeks to appropriate money for repairs on a public building situated on land owned by the United States. Therefore the point of order is overruled.

Mr. HERBERT. I see the House is impatient. I move that the committee rise.

Mr. BUCK. I desire to be recognized on my amendment when the House again goes into committee.

Mr. HERBERT. There will be no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. I ask unanimous consent that we take a recess until half past 7, the evening session to be devoted to bills reported from the Committee on Commerce excepting one bridge bill, that for the construction of the Memphis bridge.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

Mr. RANDALL. If the business is to be confined to bills for the construction of bridges I have no objection.

Mr. BURROWS. I have no objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia if he will limit the session, say, to 11 o'clock.

Mr. CRISP. I agree to that.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I wish the gentleman from Georgia to state what class of bills he desires to bring up. Are they bridge bills solely?

Mr. CRISP. There are a number of bridge bills; but I will say frankly they are not the measures most earnestly pressed. There are other measures to be presented by the Committee on Commerce. I desire that we shall be permitted to call up any measures to which there is no objection. If the committee call up any bill and objection is made, we would withdraw it at once.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to bridge bills being considered, but I object to other business being presented.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania objects unless the business is limited to bridge bills.

Mr. CRISP. I think that is hardly fair. I do not think I can agree to that request. Let the gentleman from Pennsylvania take the responsibility.

Mr. RANDALL. I do so entirely. I do not object without knowing I take some responsibility.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Georgia modify his request?

Mr. CRISP. I do not.

Mr. RANDALL and Mr. MILLS moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. SPRINGER. At this stage of the session I think we should take a recess and have an evening session for general business.

Mr. HATCH. There are bills on the Speaker's table which should be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. They will be laid before the House under the rule to-morrow morning.

Mr. HATCH. We are so near the end of the session that it appears to me they should be laid before the House without any delay.

The SPEAKER. They have gone to the Clerk's office to be entered on the Journal, and will be laid before the House to-morrow morning.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, there were—ayes 62, noes 23.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 25, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. HOAR, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, submitting, in compliance with the river and harbor act of August 5, 1886, a report of engineer officers as to the bridge across the Hudson River at Poughkeepsie and the bridge across the Mississippi River at Saint Paul; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

UNVEILING OF THE GARFIELD STATUE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a letter from Lieutenant-General P. H. Sheridan, president of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland; which was read, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1887.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland, I have the honor to invite the members of the Senate of the United States to attend the ceremonies of unveiling the statue of the late Maj. Gen. James A. Garfield, ex-President of the United States, in this city on the 12th day of May, 1887.

As Congress will probably not be in session on the date named, and inasmuch as it appropriated $30,000 to provide the pedestal for the statue, I would respectfully suggest that it would be very gratifying to the society should the President of the Senate appoint a committee to attend the unveiling ceremonies to officially represent the Senate.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General, and President of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, this communication will be referred to the Committee on the Library, which usually has charge of such matters.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Montana; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

Your memorialists, the council and house of representatives comprising the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Montana, respectfully represent that in the years 1870 and 1871 Harry R. Horr, James C. McCartney, John C. Baronett, John W. Ponsford, and Mathew McGuirk, citizens of the United States, settled upon certain lands now embraced in the Yellowstone National Park, and in every particular complied with the public-land laws; owing to the isolated location of said settlement, the same being 20 miles distant from the nearest trading point or other settlement, they were subject to many privations and hardships; the Yellowstone Valley at that time being infested by hostile Indians, said settlers were often compelled to hide during the daytime, and perform their labor upon their claims at night to escape the Indians, who frequently committed murders; that the act of Congress setting apart the National Park dispossessed these worthy pioneers of their valued claims and improvements; that employés of the Government are at the present time occupying most of the buildings and premises erected by said settlers. Your memorialists respectfully submit that to dispossess citizens of their hard-earned property without adequate reimbursement is adverse to good Government, and therefore earnestly petition your honorable body to adopt such measures as will cause an amicable adjustment of the grievances herein mentioned. And in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

H. ARMSTRONG,
Speaker of the House.
R. O. HICKMAN,
President of the Council.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a letter from George W. Houk and others, attorneys for the National Home for Disabled Volunteers at Dayton, Ohio, remonstrating against including in an appropriation bill the amount of verdicts against the Soldiers' Home; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Richland County, Ohio, praying for authority to organize the heirs-at-law to certain property on or near Manhattan Island; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 237 citizens of Ohio, praying that the citizens of the District of Columbia be allowed to vote on the question of local option; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented resolutions adopted by J. Marion Arthur Post, No. 519, Grand Army of the Republic, Lake View, Ohio; resolutions adopted by G. W. Shuster Post, No. 239, Grand Army of the Republic, Toronto, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Arnold Post, No. 161, Grand Army of the Republic, Bradford, Ohio; and resolutions adopted by the Union Veteran Republican Club, Cincinnati, Ohio, urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present sundry papers to go to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims in connection with the petition of Thomas C. Clark, for relief, namely, the affidavit of Alexander McDonald, the affidavit of Hannah Sanborn, the affidavit of William Henderson, the affidavit of T. C. Clark, and the certificate of the town clerk of Peacham, Vt., concerning a certain marriage of the ancestors of the present claimant. I move that these papers be referred to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented a resolution adopted by the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, favoring the repeal of the tax on tobacco and spirits, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Philadelphia (Pa.) Board of Trade, praying that liberal appropriations be made for coast defenses and the construction and maintenance of a navy; which was referred to the Committee on Coast Defenses.

He also presented a petition of Stephen C. Potts Post, No. 42, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, Altoona, Pa.; a petition of Capt. John Q. Snyder Post, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, Liverpool, Pa.; and a petition of George C. Wilson Post, No. 442, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, Alexandria, Pa.; a petition of citizens of Kanona, Pa.; a petition of Watkins Post, No. 68, Grand Army of the Republic, Towanda, Pa.; a petition of Gower Post, No. 23, Grand Army of the Republic, Pottsville, Pa.; and a petition of Hugh McNeil Post, No. 447, Grand Army of the Republic, Clarendon, Pa., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Annual Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Pennsylvania, favoring the repeal of the limitation in the arrears of pension act; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McPHERSON. I present the petition of a large number of property-owners who own property along the line of the Potomac River, where the proposed improvement of the so-called Kidwell bottoms, or flats, is being conducted, praying that no appropriation of money be made to be expended on a portion of the proposed improvement 900 feet above the Long Bridge, it being an interference with the rights and interests of those who are engaged in commercial transactions upon that dock property. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, who have the matter in charge.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT. I present the petition of Merriam Post, No. 8, Grand Army of the Republic, Meriden, Conn., praying for the passage over the President's veto of the dependent pension bill. I move that the petition lie on the table, as I suppose there is no use to ask that it be referred to a committee, under the circumstances.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHENEY presented resolutions adopted by Penniman Post, No. 42, Grand Army of the Republic, of Plymouth, N. H., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Thomas Post, No. 7, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Colorado; resolutions adopted by Burnside Post, No. 15, Grand Army of the Republic, Loveland, Colo.; resolutions adopted by McPherson Post, No. 6, Grand Army of the Republic, Longmont, Colo.; resolutions adopted by Grand Junction Post, No. 35, Grand Army of the Republic, Grand Junction, Colo., and resolutions adopted by Thornberg Post, No. 2, Georgetown, Colo., urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented a petition of Henry Joquiss Post, No. 325, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa; a petition of McFarland Post, No. 20, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa; a petition of Hyde Clark Post, No. 78, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa; a petition of Wisner Post, No. 127, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa; a petition of J. W. Harden Post, No. 384, Department of Iowa; and a petition of Colonel Goodrich Post, No. 117, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present a petition of the representative meeting of the Society of Friends, acting for and in behalf of the yearly meeting of Friends for New England, praying for the enactment of legislation which will settle national and other disputes by arbitration and courts, and also in favor of the passage of Senate bill No. 2362, to promote the political progress and commercial prosperity of the American nations. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONGER presented resolutions adopted by Ransom Post, No. 238, Grand Army of the Republic, of Coopersville, Mich., in favor of the passage of the dependent pension bill notwithstanding the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Michigan; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONCURRENT RESOLUTION.

Whereas the Congress of the United States did pass a bill known as the dependent pension bill, granting a pension of $12 a month to all soldiers of the late war who from any cause had become unable to properly furnish themselves with the necessaries of life; and

Whereas President Cleveland did in his wisdom see fit to veto the said bill, returning it to the House, where it originated, without his signature or approval: Now, therefore,

Resolved (the senate concurring), That we hereby call upon our delegation in Congress to use all honorable means to secure the passage of the said dependent pension bill over the Presidential veto.

Resolved further, That the governor be requested to forward to each of our Representatives in Congress a copy of these resolutions.

JAMES H. MACDONALD,
DANIEL P. MARKEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Approved February 21, 1887.

C. G. LUCE, Governor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I report back from the Committee on the Judiciary the bill (H. R. 277) for the relief of James M. Lowry, which is a little matter about his old accounts as marshal in taking a census, and ought to have gone to the Committee on the Census. I ask that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the select committee on the subject of the census.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3282) to amend section 4887 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, in relation to patents, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2889) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them adversely, and moved their indefinite postponement; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. 39) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washing Territory; and

A bill (S. 1848) to annex a portion of the Territory of Idaho to Washington Territory and Montana Territory.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10513) to provide for the maintenance of order in the District of Columbia during the national guard competition and parades, to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations as the appropriate committee to consider it.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10562) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the police force of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved January 31, 1883, reported it without amendment.

Mr. GRAY. On the 20th of January the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT], from the Committee on Patents, reported adversely the bill (H. R. 4594) for the relief of John R. Harrington, and it was placed on the Calendar. I now ask leave of the Senate to present the views of the minority from that committee on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be received and printed.

Mr. HAMPTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3255) to construct a road from the city of Staunton to the national cemetery in the County of Augusta, in the State of Virginia, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3241) granting to the Denver and Rio Grande Railway Company the right of way through the United States military reservation at Fort Crawford, in the Uncompahgre Valley, in the State of Colorado, reported it adversely, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, reported a bill (S. 3342) granting the right of way to the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad Company through the Fort Crawford military reservation; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to present the views of the minority, consisting of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], and myself, of the Committee on the Judiciary on the bill (S. 2171) to provide for inquests under national authority, which was reported from that committee on April 19, 1886, by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I ask that the views of the minority be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be received and printed.

Mr. PAYNE. I am directed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] on the 17th of December, 1886, providing for the appointment of a committee of five Senators to visit certain places along the Mexican frontier, to report it adversely. I ask that the resolution be placed on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3183) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Staten Island Sound, known as Arthur Kill, and to establish the same as a post-road," approved June 16, 1886, to report it adversely with a written report. I suppose the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], who introduced the bill, would like to have it go on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3330) for the erection of a national memorial bridge over the Potomac from Washington to Arlington, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CHENEY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10514) regulating the compensation of physicians to the poor in the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1686) to repeal certain provisions of the act approved March 3, 1875, relating to the purchase of arms for the use of the States, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. EVARTS, intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill to pay to George W. Quintard and George E. Weed, assignees of John Roach, in full for the wharfage and care of the monitor Roanoke, &c., reported it favorably, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. SABIN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3283) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to permit improvements on small streams running through Indian reservations, to facilitate log-driving, reported it without amendment.

J. E. PILCHER.

Mr. HOAR. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher, to report it favorably without amendment and to submit a written report thereon.

This is a bill for a very small claim and a very plain case, in behalf of an aged gentleman. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who is obliged to be absent from the Chamber nearly all the rest of the session, upon the Committee on Appropriations, knows all about the matter and takes an interest in it. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage at the present time by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS. In view of the fact stated by the Senator from Massachusetts and known to all of us that the Senator from Kentucky is necessarily absent from the Chamber on committee duty most of the time, and must be perhaps nearly all of it from this on, I shall not object to that single request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be done subject to objection until we hear the bill read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, authorized, out of the Texas indemnity fund, to pay to J. E. Pilcher the sum of $905, being the amount of one bond of $100 and $805 in paper money of the Republic of Texas: Provided, That he shall find that said claims are within the class of claims heretofore paid by the United States out of the said fund: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that said bond and money are genuine.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now let us hear the report of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report submitted by Mr. HOAR, as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher, have considered the same and respectfully report:

The petitioner claims to be the owner of the Texan bond and currency described in the bill. This fact is established only by his own affidavit, but he is certified to be a respectable gentleman by Mr. BECK, Senator from Kentucky, and by Mr. WILLIS and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, members of the House from that State. As he will be required under the bill to make proof to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury of the genuineness of the bond and money, and that they are within the class of claims heretofore paid by the United States out of the Texas indemnity fund, we think this may be accepted as sufficient proof for the purposes of the act. The bill provides that the payment shall be out of the Texas indemnity fund, being a fund of $7,750,000 appropriated by Congress at the time of the admission of Texas to the Union for the payment pro rata of the creditors of that republic. It is probable that all other claimants have been long since paid. Mr. Pilcher will be entitled to receive nothing unless there be a balance still existing of that fund. By joint resolutions of August 18 and December 26, 1856, and by statute, chapter 80, 1859, the time for presenting such claims was repeatedly extended, and we do not think it is a case where the United States should raise any question of laches, if the claimant be a genuine holder for value. We add for the information of the Senate letters from the Hon. ALBERT S. WILLIS and WILLIAM C. BRECKINRIDGE, members of the House from Kentucky, and from Mr. BECK, Senator from that State. Under the peculiar circumstances of the case we think they may be taken as sufficient to satisfy the Senate that Mr. Pilcher acquired the bond and money in question as the lawful representative of a holder for value and not as a speculator.

We therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think ordinarily the statement of a claimant himself is very slender proof, but under the circumstances of this case, I do not care to object. However, I should want it to be taken with the allowance that it is not to be a precedent as to the sufficiency of proof of title and derivative rights in any case that may arise hereafter. As it is a small matter, and the committee seems to be satisfied, I make no objection.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me to say one word, not in the way of debate, I desire to have the letters accompanying the report of the committee, which was read, printed in the RECORD.

The letters referred to are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1887.

DEAR SIR: Referring to the bill for the benefit of J. E. Pilcher, of Louisville, Ky., now in your care as subcommittee, and understanding that you desire to know something of the applicant, I desire to state that Mr. Pilcher is known to me personally as a reputable member of the Louisville bar. He is the son of one of the most eloquent Whig orators of our State—the friend of Henry Clay—and for many years the honored head of our city government in Louisville. When Mr. Pilcher first sent the claim to me in the early part of this Congress he gave me a full statement of his possession. My recollection is that he inherited this money but did not know until recently that a provision had ever existed under our laws for its payment. In other words he was and is a bona fide holder of these securities, and not a purchaser for speculative purposes.

Very respectfully,

ALBERT S. WILLIS.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR,
United States Senate.

---

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., February 24, 1887.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I have known Mr. Pilcher since he was quite a young man, and I knew his father when I was a boy. Mr. Pilcher told me that the bond concerning which he asks legislation belonged to his father and was a part of his estate, and his father has been dead many years. I have no doubt of the exact accuracy of this statement.

Yours, truly,

WM. C. P. BRECKINRIDGE.

Hon. J. B. BECK,
United States Senate.

On the back of the above letter is the following indorsement:

DEAR SIR: I think the statements of my colleagues, WILLIS and BRECKINRIDGE, cover the points you desired to be informed about. I think Mr. Pilcher wrote to me to the same effect, but I can not lay my hand on his letter.

Very respectfully,

J. B. BECK.

Hon. GEORGE F. HOAR.

The affiant, J. E. Pilcher, on oath states he is the owner of one bond which was issued by the Republic of Texas of the face value of one hundred dollars ($100) and issued in the year eighteen hundred and forty (1840), and that he owns some of the paper money issued by the said Republic of Texas in various denominations amounting to the sum of eight hundred and five dollars ($805), and that he now has said bond and said money in his possession, and that he is the legal owner thereof.

J. E. PILCHER.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson.

This day came personally before me, a notary public in and for Jefferson County, Kentucky, J. E. Pilcher, who is personally known to me, and subscribed and made oath in my presence that the statements made in the foregoing affidavit are true.

[SEAL.] J. Y. O'NEAL,
Notary Public, Jefferson County, Kentucky.

Mr. HOAR. This is property which belongs to the holder and passes to the holder, so that if the thing were now going on and it were a United States bank bill, even if it had been stolen in the past, the holder would have it unless he stole it himself. In this case an aged gentleman, whose character is certified by the gentlemen representing Kentucky here, found it among his father's papers. They say, and practically nobody can doubt, it is a genuine claim.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Massachusetts, who reported the bill, if I can get his attention——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is really not before the Senate, if there is any objection to its consideration. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MAXEY. On the answer to the question depends whether there will be objection or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas appeals to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that there was a balance of about $102,000, as I remember, which belonged to the State of Texas, held in trust by the United States for the use and benefit of the creditors of the old Republic of Texas. Out of that Congress appropriated some $40,000 at the last Congress, leaving something yet belonging to the State of Texas.

The Secretary of the Treasury gave notice time and again for applicants to appear and present their claims. I desire to know what reasons have been assigned for failing to present this claim within the statute of limitations.

Mr. HOAR. The reason assigned is that the statute was repeatedly extended up to 1861, and this gentleman found this in his father's papers. It is a very small sum, as the Senator sees. The claimant was not aware, as he states to his neighbor, Mr. Breckinridge, that he had a right to present it and that the property was valuable.

Mr. MAXEY. I will ask that the bill lie over, in order that I may look into it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over.

Mr. HOAR. I do not understand that this belongs to Texas. Texas was entitled to $500,000 for that purpose. Then, subsequently, instead of that we appropriated $75,000 to be applied to the payment of these creditors.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the Senator will let it go through. It is a little trifle of a few hundred dollars.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the bill goes over under the rule.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not ask to have the bill displaced. I only want to read the report; that is all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Reports of committees are still in order.

Mr. MAXEY subsequently said: I interposed an objection a moment ago to the consideration of the bill reported by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] from the Committee on Claims. Since that time I have examined the report, and I desire to recall the objection which I made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WIDOW OF FRANK M. SMITH.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate to report the resolution submitted by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], proposing a payment out of the contingent fund to Mrs. Helen M. Smith, with a substitute, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Helen M. Smith, widow of Frank M. Smith, deceased, late laborer in the employ of the Senate, the sum of $720, the said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute reported by the committee will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the miscellaneous items contingent fund of the Senate, to Mrs. Helen M. Smith, widow of Frank M. Smith, deceased, late laborer in the employ of the Senate, the sum of $360, being an amount equal to six months' compensation at the rate paid said Frank M. Smith as such laborer, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

PRINTING OF EULOGIES ON SENATOR LOGAN.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3296) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John A. Logan, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John A. Logan, a Senator from Illinois, be printed, under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing; and that there be printed 30,500 additional copies, of which 10,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 20,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 500 copies for the use of Mrs. John A. Logan; and the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of the said John A. Logan, to accompany said eulogies; and for engraving and printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MANDERSON subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 3296 was passed this morning, being a bill to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John A. Logan, in order that I may move an amendment to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed will be reconsidered with a view to amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON. The bill being before the Senate, I move, in line 4, after the word "Illinois," to insert:

And also the funeral services held in the Senate Chamber upon the occasion of his burial.

I ask action on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SMITHSONIAN AND NATIONAL MUSEUM REPORTS.

Mr. HAWLEY. By instruction of the Committee on Printing I report favorably and ask present consideration for the following concurrent resolution:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed of the report of the Smithsonian Institution and of the National Museum for the year ending June 30, 1886, in two octavo volumes, 16,000 extra copies of each, of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 copies for the use of the House of Representatives, and 7,000 copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let it be read again.

The resolution was read.

Mr. HAWLEY. This is the usual annual resolution. I have the required estimate as to the printing, &c.

The resolution was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BERRY introduced a bill (S. 3343) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River at or near the city of Fort Smith, Sebastian County, Arkansas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. DAWES introduced a bill (S. 3344) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Marsh; which, with the accompanying papers, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 3345) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph B. Freeman, William H. Long, and David Watford; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WHITTHORNE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 3346) to provide for the payment of a bounty to District of Columbia volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MAHONE introduced a bill (S. 3347) for the relief of the city council of Alexandria, Va.; which, with the accompanying papers, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SABIN introduced a bill (S. 3348) ceding to the State of Minnesota the right of possession and occupancy of a tract of land within the military reservation of Fort Ripley for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a soldiers' home; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO A BILL.

Mr. DAWES and Mr. HARRIS submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further bills or joint resolutions, the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution in the nature of a privileged matter. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. EDMUNDS, as follows:

Resolved, That JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, be, and he hereby is, chosen President pro tempore of the Senate, to take office at 1 o'clock, afternoon, on the 26th instant, at which time the resignation of JOHN SHERMAN, the present President pro tempore of the Senate, will take effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out the words "JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas," and to insert the words "ISHAM G. HARRIS, a Senator from the State of Tennessee."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to strike out the name of Mr. INGALLS and insert the name of Mr. HARRIS. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. CAMDEN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER]. If my colleague were present, and not paired, he would vote "yea."

Mr. MANDERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]; but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. I vote "nay."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], but have agreed to transfer the pair to the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 26, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—26.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Beck, | Eustis, | Maxey, | Vest, |
| Berry, | Fair, | Morgan, | Voorhees, |

|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Chace, | Hampton, | Jones of Florida, |
| Blackburn, | Colquitt, | Harris, | McPherson. |
| Camden, | Gibson, | Ingalls, | |

So the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BELMONT, Mr. CLEMENTS, and Mr. RICE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. HARRISON, it was—

Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the case of F. M. Leeds, and that he have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

REPORT ON EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the Commissioner of Education 1,000 copies of Report on Education in Alaska (Jackson), printed in compliance with a concurrent resolution of August 2, 1886, the distribution of which was not therein directed.

DISTILLED SPIRITS BONDED FOR EXPORT.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to report to the Senate during the present session of Congress by what authority of law distilled spirits which were bonded for export under regulations of the Department were permitted to be withdrawn for consumption without charges for penalty or interest being made or collected thereon, and whether the exportation bonds taken in such cases have been canceled or surrendered. Also to state under what authority distilled spirits sent out of the country for storage in a foreign country are permitted to be returned as reimported goods under section 2500 of the Revised Statutes.

RECIPROCITY TREATY WITH CANADA.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3025, the pleuro-pneumonia bill.

Mr. HOAR. Have resolutions that come over been laid before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from New York will not be in order until 1 o'clock under the rule. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which comes over under objection.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the judgment of the Senate that under present circumstances no negotiation should be undertaken with Great Britain in regard to existing difficulties with her province of Canada which has for its object the reduction, change, or abolition of any of our existing duties on imports.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. BECK. Is it brought in to-day?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It comes over under objection.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BECK. I think it ought to go to the Finance Committee.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection to the reference to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. I hope the resolution will be adopted. I do not believe there is a Senator in the body who would desire to put himself on record against it, and it will allay a great deal of talk in the neighboring country to have this understood.

The resolution does not undertake to deal with any question of general principle as to existing duties, but it simply affirms that in the judgment of the Senate the present conduct of Canada in regard to our fishing vessels ought not to be met by a modification of our duties merely; that we should not submit to being assailed in the way we have been with a view of forcing upon us a change of our duties. It will do more to save our fisheries in the next six months than anything that can be done.

I do not believe there is a Senator who would put himself on record against the resolution, whatever may be his opinion as to rates of duties.

Mr. BECK. I ask the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Finance instead of to the Committee on Foreign Relations, because I think this is a matter that we should consider before we commit ourselves one way or the other. My information is that the fisheries are only one-tenth of our Canadian trade, and there may be many other important questions involved that perhaps no gentleman would put himself on record as opposing a modification of. As all these questions of trade with Canada have to be looked into as well as the fisheries, which, as I have said, are only one-tenth of the whole trade with that country, the subject ought to be investigated by the proper committee. That seems to me the right and proper thing to do. It may be that I shall vote for the resolution, but I should like an investigation to be first made.

Mr. HOAR. This resolution does not affirm that we are opposed to any change of duties; it does not even affirm that in all cases we are opposed to reciprocity treaties, although I think that feeling is growing very much in the Senate. It simply affirms that it is no time at this moment, when we are dealing with the question of the maltreatment of our vessels abroad, to negotiate for a modification of our customs duties with Great Britain. That is all.

Mr. BECK. I have only one remark to make. If this matter goes to the Finance Committee, as now proposed by the Senator from South Carolina, I shall be very willing that the committee shall meet this afternoon or to-morrow and report the resolution back on Monday. In the mean time a consultation may be had with the Treasury Department and the State Department, and then we shall be enabled to act advisedly before we make any committal, in absolute ignorance as I am of the scope of the question. The resolution can be reported back on Monday morning. The Treasury Department and the State Department can be consulted in the mean time, and then the Senate can act intelligently. That is the only object I had in asking the reference of the resolution. If it is a proper thing to do let it be done after we know what we are doing.

Mr. MORGAN. I apprehend that the object of this resolution is to forestall the President and Department of State in negotiations for a treaty with Great Britain. We have no reciprocity treaty with Great Britain now relating to duties between this country and Canada, and I suppose that those in the Senate, particularly the Senator from Vermont, who would deny the constitutional power of the President of the United States to negotiate a treaty of reciprocity with Great Britain, which would involve an arrangement for certain duties to be charged pro and con between these countries upon designated articles, might favor such a resolution. The Senator from Vermont has frequently announced in the Senate his conviction that a treaty arrangement for reciprocity which modified the tariff laws of the United States or which would prevent their modification by an act of Congress was in itself unconstitutional.

I do not fully concur with the Senator in the length and breadth of that proposition; but the subject is very grave and such as must seem to be debatable in a very serious sense when that view of our constitutional powers is brought forward by that Senator, so experienced and eminent, and constantly urged upon the attention of the Senate whenever a reciprocity treaty affecting customs duties comes before this body.

I should regret very much indeed that the Senate should undertake just now in the closing hours of the session to enter upon a debate on a subject that is so very important and so very serious as this one necessarily must be. I am not prepared at this time to vote that a treaty of reciprocity between the United States and Canada would not be a beneficial treaty to both the countries. That would depend, of course, on the terms and conditions of that treaty. There might be a reciprocity treaty between the United States and Canada that would be of very great advantage to both countries. In fact we have now in the treaty of Washington distinct reciprocity by special engagements between Canada and the United States relating to the transportation of goods back and forth in bond across the one country or the other.

We have also engagements by treaty in respect to the navigation of the Welland Canal and other very important matters connected with our traffic and intercourse upon the great lakes of the North and Northwest.

So, then, to denounce in advance any and every sort of reciprocity between Canada and the United States by treaty arrangement is to denounce the existing treaty of Washington between these two countries, and I am not prepared to do that. In fact, the Senate has coming before it within a day or two now on the report of a conference committee, if they shall agree to make a report, the consideration of reciprocity in the treaty of Washington between the United States and Great Britain relating to Canada, and it will be found that the question thus suggested by a bill which the House of Representatives has sent to us, and in whose amendments we have disagreed, will be brought forward in a manner that will be attractive to the most serious consideration of this body. We shall have an opportunity of debating Canada reciprocity upon the amendments of the other House to the Senate bill that is ordinarily termed the retaliation bill.

This resolution proposes to commit the Senate in advance to a broad, firm, unyielding declaration that no reciprocity shall exist between the United States and Canada, which, if run to its logical consequences, will compel us to yield up the just advantage we already have gained under the treaty of Washington. That I am not prepared to do. Neither am I prepared now to consider this question, nor do I think this body, in the limited time assigned to it now by the Constitution before adjournment, can possibly approach this question in a way that will be satisfactory to any member of the body.

More than that, Mr. President, I object that the Senate of the United States has no right either as a legislative body or as a separate body to interfere in advance with negotiations between this country and any other country. The constitutianal right of negotiation in this country belongs to the President of the United States. It does not belong to the Senate. All the preliminary arrangements to the maturing of a treaty or convention between this and any foreign country are confided absolutely to the President of the United States, and are entirely within his discretion. He can negotiate any treaty he pleases with a foreign country. In that respect he has conferred upon him the prerogative of the Crown of Great Britain, and the only limitation upon it is that he must report his negotiations to the Senate of the United States, and they must receive the approval of two-thirds of this body before they become, as is announced in the Constitution, a part of the supreme law of the United States.

I object either to relieving the President from his constitutional duty of conducting such negotiations as may benefit this country or to interfering with the exercise of his constitutional powers so as to anticipate any result, and to compel him either to come to a certain conclusion in his negotiations or to avoid a certain conclusion. This disposition on the part of the Senate to interfere with the power of the President of the United States in the freedom of his authority in the conduct of negotiations with foreign countries is pragmatical and unwarranted. It is something that we have done heretofore, I confess, but in every such instance it has occurred to me that the Senate was usurping to itself a function and a jurisdiction that the Constitution does not even hint at as belonging to the powers of this body. Let the President of the United States enjoy fully the powers which the Constitution confers upon him, and along with those powers let him have the responsibility of his position. I would not interfere with him and indicate by a vote of the Senate in advance what was the opinion of the Senate in respect of any matter that he might see proper to bring into negotiation between this Government and a foreign power. To do a thing of this kind is not merely to usurp jurisdiction that does not belong to us, but it is to abuse an authority of which we have not even the shadow.

This matter ought to go to one of the most sedate committees of this body. In one sense it ought to go to the Committee on Foreign Relations in so far as it affects or may affect the powers of the President and the freedom of the President in respect to negotiations with foreign countries. But inasmuch as the gravamen of the resolution is in relation to the increase or decrease of taxation or the regulations of customs taxation between this country and Canada, I agree with the Senator from Kentucky that the resolution had better go to the Committee on Finance. I desire above all things that the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], the Chairman of the Committee on Finance, should have a full opportunity of passing his judgment in committee upon the questions presented in this resolution. If that side of the Chamber desire to commit themselves upon a proposition of this kind, let it be done after the distinguished leader of the financial committee of the Senate has made up and matured his opinion, and is willing to express it to the world and to stand upon it.

I object, Mr. President, to this hasty way of rushing into a matter as grave as this just in the conclusion of this Congress.

Mr. MORRILL. The Committee on Finance have leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate, and therefore the resolution can be very speedily and properly, I hope, considered.

I want to say a word in relation to the "pragmatical" interference on the part of the Senate with the constitutional power of the executive department in relation to treaties. It seems to me that it is a pragmatical interference on the part of the President with the power of the House of Representatives to originate all revenue bills. I deny the constitutional power of the President, even with the aid of the Senate, to negotiate a reciprocity treaty and make it binding as the supreme law of the land. If he may do it with one nation, he may do it with all, and thereby usurp the entire power of the House of Representatives as to the introduction and consideration of revenue bills.

Again, Mr. President, in relation to making any possible treaty of advantage with the Canadas, it is entirely out of the question. The fact is that the agricultural products and the beef for market purposes of our country are in excess of our own wants, and the only addition we can have from Canadian trade with us would be in competition with the products of agriculturists and those who produce cattle and horses and sheep for sale. Again, I believe that reciprocity treaties are in direct conflict with any treaty which we have with any considerable power of the earth. Under "the most favored nation" clause we agree to accord to every nation whatever every favor that we grant to one, to impose no higher rate of duties than we impose on any other nation; and such treaties exist with between thirty and forty nations. To undertake to have a reciprocity treaty with any nation by which we are to give more favors to one than we do another would be in direct conflict with our existing treaty obligations.

Beyond this, any treaty that we make with the Canadas has to be made with the condition that the same favors that Canada grants to us are to be granted to Great Britain, thereby making the whole stipulation utterly valueless so far as we are concerned, unless we put American labor upon the level of that of Great Britain, and then undersell them in Canada.

While I am now, and at any time, against reciprocity treaties, I think this resolution would acquire a little more force or significance if considered by a committee than it will have if taken up here without such consideration. I hope, therefore, the Senator from Massachusetts will consent to have it referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I am very sorry that the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Vermont have introduced into this debate a topic which does not in the least belong to it. The question of the general policy of reciprocity treaties is not involved in this resolution at all. I suppose that the declaration of the chairman of the Committee on Finance, representing, as he does, the policy of the dominent party in this body, will be accepted everywhere as letting everybody see that it would be utterly hopeless under any circumstances to expect a reciprocity treaty with Great Britain affecting Canada, even if there were no special conditions. But the purpose of this resolution is not to affirm or deny the proposition which has been discussed by the Senator from Vermont.

There are a great many persons who suppose that our existing difficulties with Canada, growing out of their treatment of Massachusetts and Maine fishermen, are occasioned by a desire on our part to intrude ourselves into the waters adjacent to those shores for the purpose of obtaining fish. There is no such desire on the part of any number of American citizens. These difficulties are created for the purpose of compelling us to open our markets to Canadian fishermen; and within a few days there has been an election in Canada which has resulted in the support of the premier, Sir John MacDonald, and he has declared in a speech made since the election that the significance of that election was a confidence in his policy, and that his policy was to compel the United States to open her markets, and that if he persisted in it the Canadian people might confide in him, and that that result should be accomplished.

Now, Mr. President, I say again, and I challenge any contradiction here in the presence of the Senate, that I do not believe there is a single Senator in this body on either side of this Chamber, whether he favor free trade or protection, whether he favor reciprocity treaties or not in general, who will not indignantly spurn the notion that the United States will change, alter, repeal, or in any degree modify by a hair's-breadth her domestic legislation on the subject of duties upon imports as a means of settling a controversy growing out of such a threat, or as a means of buying peace for the American fishermen or respect to the American flag in foreign waters.

If there is any Senator who will contravene that statement I ask him respectfully to do it now and I will pause for that purpose. [A pause.] No Senator undertakes that, and I therefore feel entirely justified in affirming and in asking the authorities of Canada and the authorities of Great Britain, who take heed of the declarations made in the Senate of the United States upon this subject, to take it for granted that it is absolutely impossible to be expected by any sane or sensible man that there is to be any repeal or modification or change in any duty upon American imports as the result of the present difficulties or the result of any negotiation which may compose them; and when that is understood, I have no doubt Canada will treat our fishermen, as it is alike for her interest and theirs that they should be treated, hospitably and courteously and in accordance with the law of nations and the rules of conduct for civilized man.

That is the object of this resolution. It is simply to say that at this time, under the particular circumstances, the Senate of the United States will never give its advice or consent to any change whatever in our domestic relations on the subject of duties on imports.

Now, sir, the Senator from Alabama thinks that an affirmance of this purpose on the part of the Senate is an intrusion by the Senate on the peculiar province of the President of the United States. I deny it. The Constitution declares that the President may make treaties with the advice as well as the consent of the Senate, and declares also that that consent can only be given by a vote of two-thirds of this body. It has been the custom of the Senate from the beginning of the Government in important matters to have its advice taken in advance of a treaty negotiation. We constantly exert our authority by confirming treaties with an amendment which originates here, which has not originated with the Executive. In the case of the treaty of 1871, known as the treaty of Washington, the Senate, as my friend on my right [Mr. MORRILL] will well remember, was kept in session during the whole time those negotiations were going on here with the joint commission in order that Senators might constantly be consulted in regard to the negotiations as they proceeded; and, as the Senator from Alabama himself conceded, there are many precedents to that effect.

As the Senate has given its consent to hear some remarks from the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] upon his resolution in regard to the election of Senators this resolution must, of course, go over under the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will go to the Calendar.

Mr. HOAR. It must, of course, go over unless I shall press it to a vote at this time, which is not my purpose, because to press it to a vote at this time would interfere with the courtesy due to the Senator from Nebraska. Therefore, as the resolution would go over and as we have the assurance of the Finance Committee that it will be dealt with at once, I will move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be so referred unless objection be made.

WAREHOUSE ENTRIES IN BOSTON CUSTOM-HOUSE.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to withdraw the motion to reconsider which I made yesterday on a resolution passed on my own motion in regard to warehouse entries in the Boston custom-house.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the motion that is withdrawn?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his motion to reconsider the resolution in relation to warehouse entries in the Boston custom-house which was entered by him yesterday. The Chair hears no objection, and the motion is withdrawn.

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted yesterday by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] which comes over under objection, and which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, As the judgment of the Senate, that an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election, directly by the voters, of United States Senators should be submitted to the people for their action.

Mr. SABIN. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate bill 3225. This is a bill granting to the Stillwater and Cooke City Railway Company a right of way through the Crow Indian Reservation. There are other bills of this character that have gone through, and I suppose this should go with the bills passed yesterday.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I will not yield for that purpose.

Mr. SABIN. If it provokes discussion I will withdraw the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] is entitled to the floor on his resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Minnesota can call up his bill after the Senator from Nebraska has concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska declines to yield.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, early in the session I introduced and had referred to the proper committee a bill providing an amendment to the Constitution that United States Senators should be elected by the people. As want of time or inclination on the part of the committee prevented action, I have asked the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, As the judgment of the Senate, that an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election, directly by the voters, of United States Senators should be submitted to the people for their action.

Until the hour of final and complete victory radicalism—earnest desire to correct abuses, to carry reforms to the extent of permanent relief—has always been characterized by opprobrious epithets. So with the men who inaugurated the Revolution against English oppression.

After success came and a national government was to be established the same treatment was accorded to those like Jefferson, who had faith in the doctrines on which the war was waged, and believed they should be established in the constitution and laws to be enacted. Even then cold, calculating conservatism chilled the ardor and enthusiasm of the believers in the full fruition of the rights of man and sought to ingraft some of the features of monarchy and a general distrust of the capacity of men for self-government.

Many desired independence from England only to re-establish the English form of Government on American soil, and a monarchy was openly demanded. Failing in that, an attempt to hedge the power and sovereignty of the people, so that a more subtle and dangerous influence—that of an aristocracy—should control.

DEBATES OF 1787.

The debates in the constitutional convention of 1787 show how slowly and timidly many were willing to trust power to the people.

Time and experience have shown their distrust was unwise, and the untimely precautions indulged in by them have been, and others will be, overthrown.

So unwilling that the mass of the people should fully understand, early legislation and even the debates were with shut doors, in secret session; copies of resolutions for the consideration of members denied. The last vestige of that distrust now remaining is the present executive session for considering treaties and confirmation of officers, still held from something of the same spirit that created it, but which the people are sternly demanding shall be abolished.

So the doctrine of State sovereignty as early defined has disappeared in the minds of the people, and by the shock of war almost excluded from our political vocabulary.

One of the great struggles in 1787 was to preserve the political unity and equality of the States as represented in the Senate; also in the mode of the election of such representatives.

The lower House was supposed to represent the people and was elected by them. The Senate was to represent the sovereignty of the States, without any accountability to the voters as such, and were therefore to be elected by the Legislatures on the pretense to have them removed from the passions, prejudices, impulses, and desires of the people.

As some of the errors and mistakes of the framers of the Constitution have been corrected, so the people are demanding this must be. And while the equality of the States is preserved by an equal number from each, the State will be more fitly represented and the rights of the people recognized by amending the Constitution so they shall be elected directly by them.

Referring a moment to the debates of 1787, Luther Martin characterized "one class as the favorers of monarchy." He was also plain on secret sessions:

But, sir, the same spirit which caused our doors to be shut, our proceedings to be kept secret, our journals to be locked up, and every avenue, as far as possible, to be shut to public information prevailed also in this case (which was to be allowed correct copies of certain propositions for consideration by members of committee), and the proposal so reasonable and necessary was rejected by a majority of the convention, thereby precluding even the members themselves from the necessary means of information.

ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.

To return. Four schemes were suggested in election of United States Senators—one by the Legislature, another by the people, third by the House branch of Congress, and fourth by the national Executive. At that time the first was readily adopted as the most remote and free from democratic or popular influences, which seemed to be the great object sought, as fully appears in the distinct reasons of Gouverneur Morris, July 2, 1787:

The two branches so equally poised can not have their due weight. It is confessed on all hands that the second branch ought to be a check on the first, for without its having this effect it is perfectly useless. The first branch, originating from the people, will ever be subject to precipitancy, changeability, and excess. Experience evinces the truth of this remark without having recourse to reading. This can only be checked by ability and virtue in the second branch. On your present system can you suppose that one branch will possess it more than the others? The second branch ought to be composed of men of great and established property—an aristocracy—men who from pride will support consistency and permenancy. * * * Such an aristocratic body will keep down the turbulency of democracy. * * * Thus constituted I hope they will show us the weight of aristocracy.

History proves, I admit, that the men of large property will uniformly endeavor to establish tyranny. How, then, shall we ward off this evil? Give them the second branch and you secure their weight for the public good. They become responsible for their conduct, and this lust of power will ever be checked by the democratic branch, and thus form a stability in your Government.

You intend, also, that the second branch shall be incapable of holding any office in the General Government. It is a dangerous expedient. They ought to have every inducement to be interested in your Government. Deprive them of this right and they will become inattentive to your welfare. The wealthy will ever exist, and you can never be safe unless you gratify them as a body in the pursuit of honor and profit. Prevent them by positive institutions and they will proceed in some left-handed way. It is good policy that men of property be collected in one body to give them one common influence in your Government.

I avow myself the advocate of a strong government. Still I admit that the influence of the rich must be guarded.

At the same convention Mr. Dickinson said "he wished the Senate to consist of the most distinguished characters, distinguished for their rank in life and their weight of property, and bearing as strong likeness to the British House of Lords as possible." General Pinckney said: "As the Senatorial branch was meant to represent the wealth of the country, it ought to be composed of persons of wealth."

The early and faithful portraiture of this body is recognized and acknowledged at the present time. Many will believe that Gouverneur Morris has proved more of a prophet than he supposed in 1787, and that the creation has quite fulfilled the expectations of the creators. He said "It was wanted to keep down the turbulence of democracy." It has succeeded at times in keeping down the turbulence of the people in their demands for redress of grievances and exemption from unjust and oppressive taxation.

THUS THE SENATE WAS STARTED.

Now the people are demanding and experience has demonstrated that it is not only safe but growing every year more necessary they should directly elect those who represent the State, as the State is emphatically the people.

What constitutes a state?
Not high-raised battlements or labored mound,
Thick wall or moated gate;
Not cities proud, with spires and turrets crowned,
Not bays and broad-armed ports,
Where laughing at the storm rich navies ride;
Not starred and spangled courts,
Where low-browed baseness wafts perfume to pride;
No! men, high-minded men,
With powers as far above dull brutes endued,
In forest, brake, or glen,
As beasts excel cold rocks and brambles rude.
Men who their duties know,
But know their rights; and, knowing, dare maintain,
Prevent the long-aimed blow,
And crush the tyrant while they rend the chain—
These constitute a State.

How well it kept faith with the spirit and animus of its creation is evidenced in a letter of Jefferson to Madison, dated Monticello, 1794, referring to the Senate:

WHAT JEFFERSON SAID.

This body was intended as a check on the will of the representatives, when too hasty. They are not only that, but completely on the will of the people also, and in my opinion are heaping coals of fire not only on their persons, but on their body as a branch of the Legislature.

It seems that the opinion is fairly launched into public that they should be placed under the control of a more frequent recurrence to the will of their constituents. This seems requisite to complete the experiment whether they do more harm than good.

Jefferson evidently believed what the people are demanding to-day, that Senators should be elected by the people.

So well have the desires and prophecies of the framers been fulfilled and the warnings of Jefferson been made history, that after the lapse of a century one of its most

DISTINGUISHED AND PRESENT MEMBERS SAID:

We may as well deal candidly with ourselves upon this subject. The Senate of the United States is suspected by the people of this country. I use plain language—the Senate of the United States is suspected by the people of this country with a desire not to do anything with this subject. I do not need to appeal to the consciousness of any Senator—I do not need to appeal to the current strain of observations that are made in the public press—when I say that the Senate of the United States is not an object of public adoration at this time in this country.—RECORD, page 518, January 7, 1885.

So it would appear the Senate had evidently and kept well on the line which Morris and others intended, and been truer and more in consonance with the spirit and prophecies of some of the fathers than many other provisions and theories in the Constitution which have been substantially repealed in the public mind by discarding them and substituting others. As in the case of State sovereignty and the limited and restricted powers of the Government, when neither money nor land could be used for internal and other improvements.

When Madison, Monroe, Jefferson expounded the text and spirit of the Constitution, and Monroe vetoed the Cumberland road bill, and Jackson vetoed the Maysville road bill—mark the insidious repeal—even the political followers of those great names unite in claiming power in the Government, and under the same Constitution, to dredge rivers, to build railroads, to dig canals, to construct school-houses, to employ teachers. So the same Constitution is held to mean just what the makers said it did not mean.

This generation says the fathers erred in what they did and what they intended, and it is no disrespect to attempt another reform where by common consent it has long been needed.

AT OTHER TIMES

the people have been urging this amendment. In 1874 the Legislatures of California and Iowa instructed their Senators to secure such amendment.

The experiment has been fully tried and the people earnestly urging a change. The control of Legislatures by blandishments, promises of money, has been reduced to a system to that extent that one of the most successful of manipulators of that machinery has boldly proclaimed that it is much easier and cheaper to purchase venal legislators than electors at the polls.

The necessity for this change has been made strikingly manifest within the last month in the States of New Jersey, Indiana, and Nebraska. In the first two every scheme and subterfuge has been used to obtain an advantage by stealth and fraud that might secure a victory regardless of what the people may desire.

And in the latter a direct expression of the people on the

as allowed by the constitution and laws of that State, and then superadded the still more emphatic declaration of the voters by making the choice of United States Senator a test in election of members of the Legislatures, and when the people, as voters, had signified their choice by electing

A MAJORITY OF THE LEGISLATURE PLEDGED TO THAT CHOICE.

True they were from both political parties, but a majority—and fully instructed. That was the judgment of the people of a great State. Then the railroad corporations interpose to reverse that judgment and beat the people by their influence and wealth, by their mysterious agencies, so potent, actually controlled representatives against open and declared instructions, on the pretext too thin to cover the brand corporations burned into their chattels, of great party loyalty that in a Republican State a Republican United States Senator should not be elected except by Republican votes. Thus when the votes of those instructed and pledged would secure what the people desired, enough purchased traitors withhold their votes to defeat what they knew the people had demanded.

Unless the Senate is determined to add still more proof in confirmation of the

it will at once cheerfully submit this amendment to the judgment of the nation.

The people are admonished, no matter what may be their desire as to candidates or necessity of establishing great principles, none but can enter here, and the self-constituted autocracy must designate what is straight and reliable, and make the Procrustean bed, and woe betide him who is too short or too long; that party platforms which promise in advance reforms in tariff, protection to the public domain from the grasp of corporations, relief from the exactions of corporate power and organized wealth, seem to be intended only to be "words of promise to the ear to be broken to the hope," "Dead Sea fruits which turn to ashes on the lips," only to modify the demands and quiet the apprehension of the people.

The only dangerous unreliability is to leaders who brand as party treason any attempt to relieve the people from taxation by insisting that the necessaries of life, as lumber, sugar, salt, shall be admitted free of duty; that diamonds and silks shall not be favored with lesser duties as they are, while the coarse blankets and homely woolens used by the masses are charged with higher rates, and thus the burdens are unequally divided and wealth protected. Otherwise, the hod-carrier, the grader, the dweller in dug-out and sod cabin, the toiler in the mines would not be compelled to pay the

as does the millionaire. Unreliable, when an attempt is made to rescue from corporation spoilers millions of acres and save them for homesteads for the landless. Unreliable, when an attempt is made to obtain some relief to the people where $4,000,000,000 is stolen by of railroads made a mortgage on the industry and prosperity of the nation, and then extortionate traffic charges imposed to declare interest and dividends on these stolen thousands of millions.

We are admonished by leaders here that is approaching, when driven from the popular branch, from the executive, the last resting place of a once grand party, which had done more for mankind and made a larger chapter in history than any preceding, can alone be secured on this cold and majestic eyrie only by not allowing Republican Senators to be elected by Democratic votes—a wisdom equal to the ostrich, which thinks its body secure by hiding its head in the sand.

A POLITICAL CRISIS

There is a

approaching, when the people, the toilers, without the form of party, will be arrayed at the ballot-box against their oppressors.

The infliction of injustice and wrong are of greater injury to the Republic than giant-powder or dynamite.

When capital, in defiance of the Constitution and laws, can demand payment of debts in gold coin only; when the upheaval of labor can be repressed by indictments and fine or imprisonment for a conspiracy; when the more dangerous conspiracy of capital, in Black Fridays, in control of the coal fields of the East; when a syndicate or one man can purchase seventy coal mines within a radius of 50 miles of Saint Louis, and no protest is heard, no courts or indictments at this communism of wealth, this anarchism which threatens, not individuals, not a party, but the entire Republic; when throughout the Northwest the virgin soil is being exhausted to raise grain, make pork and beef, the producer receiving barely the cost of production, and when the products reach the seaboard so encumbered with railroad and other charges that meat three times a day, our former boast, is often denied the laborer; when to the relief of the nation comes the president of a powerful railroad, with the exhilarating and comforting assurance that this great unrest, this persistent demand of labor for reward sufficient to furnish subsistence, this clamor of producers that grain shall return in price enough to pay the bare cost of production is only an indication of unusual content and prosperity and a promise of greater beneficence and glory to be spread over the Republic; when the tenant class is yearly increasing; when three-fourths of all the farms in the Republic when the additions of wealth are largely to those who count possessions by thousands and millions, and labor must return thanks for the privilege to toil for reward which barely provides board and clothing,

THERE IS A CRISIS IMPENDING.

Could those leaders who have placed the Republican party in peril, stripped it of its usefulness by denying living principles, compelling the active present to feast only upon the memories and reminiscences of the past, draw nearer to the hearts and hearthstones of the masses, seek to give genuine protection to honest labor, there would soon be "life in the old land yet."

You remember when Sumner charged slavery with being the great crime against nature. Corporations have taken the place of slavery. Unfortunately there is no Sumner to arraign it, while it is being strangled by those entrusted with its care and perishing in the face of the very generation—the actors and theater of its greatest achievements. Corporations and their servants, like slavery and its masters, can learn nothing by experience; blinded by pride, impelled by avarice and greed, will listen to no suggestions, make no concessions in recognition of justice and right until disasters gather about them.

The Democracy carried slavery and fell, although in falling it did not entirely perish. The Republican party has carried monster corporations equally as unrelenting and exacting, and are reeling, stumbling, falling with the terrible load. And the humble warner waiving the signal flag of danger is run down and crushed as an enemy in the path of bloated, unrelenting, and unreasoning power.

Shades of Sumner, Wilson, Lincoln, Seward, Chase, and the great army of martyred heroes, who we trust are not allowed to suffer pangs because of the political debasement which must be endured by the remnant of the grand Union Army at the spectacle that the Republican party has lost the popular branch of the Government, has lost the Executive. And now, reckless, nerveless leaders tell us there is a as they madly beat the waves threatening to submerge the last feeble frail resting place, and in their insane folly talk about straight reliable partisans to be elected in defiance of the express demands of the people to save what is left in the upper branch of Congress.

In the same spirit and with the same hope they talk of the horrors of an overflowing Treasury, and blindly suppose relief will come to the people by draining it out rather than stop unjust and oppressive taxation, which fills it by draining the pockets of the people.

Year by year the party becomes weaker and weaker even here. The desperate remedy is prescribed that the influences and wealth and tools of huge corporations shall be invoked to overthrow the people and secure a temporary victory, while the leaders appear as unconcerned as to the real cause of danger and safety as was Nero when he fiddled at the destruction of Rome.

During this time waning power is departing from the Senate, and in their desire to save they contribute to the certainty of defeat.

And thus it becomes more necessary that those occupying seats in this body should receive their commissions directly from the hands of the people.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MILLER. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3025, being what is known as the pleuro-pneumonia bill.

Mr. HARRIS. I hope the morning hour will be devoted under the rule to the regular order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER] moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

Mr. SABIN. Before that motion is put I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. MILLER. I will withhold the motion until 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York withdraws his motion.

Mr. SABIN. There can be no objection to the bill I wish to take up. It is but fair that it should be sent to the House of Representatives at this time with the other bills which have preceded it within a day or two.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President——

Mr. SABIN. I appeal to the Senator to give me a moment.

Mr. MAHONE. I will yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SABIN. I ask for the present consideration of Order of Business 2272, being the bill (S. 3225) to authorize the Stillwater and Cooke City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian Reserve, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. HARRIS. I can not consent to the consideration of it during the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee objects.

Mr. SABIN. I move to take up the bill. I have sat in the Senate day after day for four years and listened to a great deal of talk, and have asked very little time of the Senate, and I certainly think I am entitled to this courtesy at this time. I move to take up the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves to proceed with the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN]. I make that announcement now for the day.

The roll was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN], but being satisfied that he would vote "yea" on this motion, if present, I vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 9; as follows:

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3225) to authorize the Stillwater and Cooke City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian Reserve, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 8, after the words "determined by the," to insert "Secretary of the Interior," and after the words "Secretary of the Interior" to strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. COCKRELL. What does that mean?

Mr. SABIN. I will say to the Senator from Missouri that the amendment takes out all the paraphernalia as to commissions and leaves the appraisement to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to hear what it is.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the words which the committee reported to strike out, but before concluding was interrupted by

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot and mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

Mr. SABIN. I ask the Senator from New York to yield for a few moments that the bill which has been pending may be finished.

Mr. MILLER. If it can be completed by the simple reading I do not object.

Mr. COCKRELL. I object. The Senator from New York can not farm out the floor in that way. If the Senator from Minnesota will move to lay aside the other bill, very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pleuro-pneumonia bill is before the Senate, and the question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent to be allowed to submit a report at this time.

Mr. MILLER. I have yielded once or twice, and I find that other Senators are taking exception to my yielding for any purpose. Unless the Senator from Missouri objects, I will not stand in the way of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us dispose of this business.

Mr. SABIN. I move that the bill just taken up be laid aside temporarily.

Mr. FRYE. There must be a definite time fixed, say fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be laid aside with the view of taking up the measure to which he refers?

Mr. SABIN. I move that the pleuro-pneumonia bill be laid aside for fifteen minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota moves that the pending bill, which is the pleuro-pneumonia bill, be laid aside for fifteen minutes.

Mr. HARRIS. It is not in order to lay aside a bill. The Senator may move to postpone its consideration.

Mr. FRYE. That is what he means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that to be the effect of the motion, to postpone the consideration of the pleuro-pneumonia bill for fifteen minutes. The question is on that motion [putting the question]. The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. SABIN. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, to report it with amendments. I desire to give notice now that to-morrow morning at the earliest possible moment I shall call up the bill for consideration to the exclusion of all other business.

I ask leave to insert in the RECORD some data in reference to this bill so that they may be before the Senate in the morning in the RECORD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, February 23, 1887.

SIR: Agreeably to your request, I submit herewith, as briefly as possible, my views on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill (H. R. 10396) as the same passed the House of Representatives on the 17th instant.

The estimates prepared by this Department were made in the belief that every item was called for by the just needs of the public service. Some items were therein submitted, others followed the sanction of previous statutes, some having been appropriated for during several years past. It seems proper, therefore, to compare the bill as adopted by the House with the estimates submitted.

1. China.—Minister's salary (line 16). It is earnestly recommended that this important mission be elevated to the first grade, with increase of salary from $12,000 to $17,500. Apart from the political reasons which counsel manifest friendliness and regard in our intercourse with China, the fact remains that the demands upon the minister are greater in China, owing to the exigent conditions of civilized life in an oriental capital, isolated from ordinary channels of supply, than in a European capital.

2. Turkey.—Minister's salary (line 28). This was raised from $7,500 to $10,000 in the consular and diplomatic act of February 25, 1885, and the same appropriation was made in the act of July 1, 1886. Constantinople is now a political center and an expensive place of residence, the minister being obliged to keep up two personal establishments, one for winter, another for summer.

3. Argentine Republic.—Minister's salary (line 27). The present salary is $7,500. Its increase to $10,000 is recommended. Here, as elsewhere, the Department must give due regard to the special conditions of living at foreign capitals. Buenos Ayres is a compactly built city, with no room for expansion, and the recent increase of commercial activity there has augmented the cost of living in a dense metropolitan population. Rentals are high, a modest residence on a flat costs from $2,000 to $3,000, and is difficult to procure at that. The necessaries of life are dear and a dollar has only about three-fifths the purchasing power that it has in the United States. The trade relations of the Argentine Republic are among the most important of South America. Already for the most part in the hands of Europeans, an effort is being made to divert it to our markets, and the recent establishment of a line of mail steamers to the United States, with a large subvention from the Argentine Government, is a promising sign, and marks the friendly relationship of the two countries. The mission is an important one, and may be made much more so.

4. Belgium.—Minister's salary (line 29). The importance of the direct relations of Belgium to the United States, which are constantly expanding, make it most advisable that the mission should be elevated to the plenipotentiary grade, with $10,000 instead of $7,500 for a minister resident, as now. With one or two minor exceptions, all the foreign missions at Brussels are of the plenipotentiary rank. The elevation of the mission should be effected, even without increase of salary—and a secretary of legation provided, as explained further on—but from every point of view the office should be supplied with the moderate salary of $10,000.

5. Corea.—Minister's salary (line 35). Since Corea was first opened to foreign intercourse by the United States, American influence has been exceptionally important at Seoul, the capital; the disinterested counsels of the legation are eagerly sought by the authorities, and every effort is being made by them to spread American ideas and develop direct trade with the Pacific coast. Although I have not recommended it in the estimates, I should be glad to see the mission made plenipotentiary, but at any rate, the isolation of Seoul and the conditions of life there render a fair living salary indispensable, and I trust that $7,500 will be allowed.

6. Liberia—Minister's salary (line 40). The salary of this office was raised from $4,000 to $5,000 by the consular and diplomatic act of August 5, 1882, and has since remained at that figure. The climate is unhealthy. Two ministers have recently died in office. The historical intimacy of Liberia with the United States, and the good will due to that offshoot of our civilization, make recognition of its moral dependence upon us timely.

7. China.—Secretary of legation (line 46).

The House bill omits altogether the usual appropriation for secretary of legation at Peking. This was probably an error, for the debates in the House suggest that the point of order was only taken because the combined salary of secretary of legation and interpreter exceeded $5,000, the amount to which the emoluments of the two offices, when separated, were supposed to be limited by section 1680, Revised Statutes. A glance at that section will show the mistake, for it provides that when the secretaryship and interpreter's post are filled by two officers, the former shall receive $3,000 and the latter $5,000, or $8,000 for the two. The salary of the secretary of legation was reduced from $3,000 to $2,625 some years ago—ostensibly to make it uniform with the salaries at Berlin, London, and Paris. It is simply impossible to conduct the business of the legation without secretaries besides the interpreter.

8. Chili and Peru.—Salaries of secretaries of legation (omitted from House bill).

These secretaryships have been appropriated for during two years past, the first appropriation being in the consular and diplomatic act of July 7, 1884. Their utility has been demonstrated.

9. Belgium, Argentine Republic, Corea, Roumania, &c., Sweden and Norway, Switzerland and Venezuela.—Secretaries of legation (estimated for at $1,500 each, but omitted from House bill).

Every legation of any importance should have a secretary of legation. The absence or death of the minister necessarily closes the office, unless a secretary be present to take charge ad interim. It sometimes happens that, in case of a temporary vacancy, the friendly services of the representative of some other government have to be resorted to, as lately in Persia. At the present time it has been found necessary to send to Corea the secretary of the Peking legation, in order to take charge of affairs there in the total absence of any official substitute.

10. Four secretaries of legation at large (estimated for at $1,800 each, but omitted in the House bill).

The recommended measure finds its warrant in the considerations in the preceding paragraph. Our country should never be left wholly unrepresented at any foreign court, nor should its archives be left to irresponsible care, or open to alien inspection. It is not always practicable to designate a consul to take temporary charge. Many governments refuse to admit a union of consular and diplomatic functions. The proposed secretaries at large could be so distributed as to be available at short notice to fill a vacancy, such as that which happened at Rome recently when the secretary's death quickly followed the minister's resignation. When not so detailed, the secretaries at large could be usefully assigned to legations where no secretary may be allowed by law, or to relieve an overburdened legation from a press of work, or be employed on special investigations for which outside aid must now be sought at considerable expense. I deem this recommendation of great value, as doing for the diplomatic service what the staff of consular clerks has so admirably done for the consular service, and providing a small but efficiently trained force, ready for emergencies, and meanwhile always to be usefully employed.

11. Turkey.—Secretary of legation (estimated for at $1,800, and omitted from the House bill). This office has been regularly appropriated for during many years, and is now omitted probably through oversight. It can not be expected that a secretary's functions can be discharged by an interpreter, who has no diplomatic status. The item should be restored in line 58 of the House bill.

12. China and Japan.—Second secretaries of legation (estimated for at $1,800 each, and omitted from the House bill). These offices were first established by the consular and diplomatic act of July 7, 1884, and have since been regularly appropriated for. The necessity of possessing, within the legation itself, a knowledge of the Chinese or Japanese languages, independently of irresponsible and often interested native aid, is evident, especially in the case of the absence or death of the interpreter provided by law. Every well-organized modern diplomatic service is equipped with student secretaries in oriental countries. The utility of the innovation on our part in China and Japan is demonstrated beyond mere experiment, and certainly should be extended and not cut off altogether to the serious embarrassment of the service, as proposed in the House bill.

13. Siam.—Interpreter's salary (estimated for at $800, and omitted from House bill).

Since the act of July 7, 1884, $500 has been appropriated for an interpreter to the legation and consulate-general at Bangkok. The item occurs under the consular part of the statutes (see Statutes, volume 23, page 330), where, however, it is stricken out in the pending House bill. It is now proposed to make it an item under the diplomatic head, with a salary of $800. I need hardly dwell on the necessity of such a provision, at least until the Siamese language shall be more widely practiced in the United States. At present no person known to me is eligible to appointment as minister to Siam who possesses that difficult tongue. I can not suppose it to be the purpose of Congress to throw upon the slenderly-paid minister the expense and risk of accidental employment of native translators, and I trust the estimated allowance will be made.

14. Contingent expenses, foreign missions (lines 75–80).

The purposes for which the appropriated fund may be expended are limited, by the House bill, to "stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags and signs." These form but a small part of the necessary expenses of public business at the legations, and for many years other indispensable contingent items have been appropriated for. The item as it appears in the estimates is taken from the consular and diplomatic act of the last session. Every enumerated detail is found necessary in the conduct of foreign intercourse, most of them have had the sanction of long-continued legislation, and none of them are proper to come out of the pocket of the ministers or of the Secretary of State. As now emasculated, this provision amounts to a practical prohibition against transacting business. The use of the telegraph and the mails would be barred, and the Department cut off from communication with its agents abroad.

If it be assumed that the agents are to bear the expense of communicating with the Department, it may be a pertinent inquiry, who is to bear the expense of the Department's communications with its agents? Surely not the Secretary of State, for the annual expense of postage and telegrams from the Department, although kept within the narrowest limits, is in excess of the Secretary's salary.

Rent, too, is a necessary allowance, especially at legations like London, Paris, Madrid, and others, where the accumulation of archives, beyond the capacity of any private residence within the envoy's salaried means, demands a separate establishment for offices.

Dispatch agents are necessary for the speedy and safe conveyance of the mails. The transmission of correspondence by open mail, or the conveyance of sealed pouches at mail-rates, would increase the expense of postage considerably beyond the amounts now allowed to dispatch agents.

Printing in the Department of State is another indispensable item. Confidential correspondence, draughts of treaties, précis of negotiations, and the like are continually required for communication to legations and for the needs of the Department. These can only be prepared by hand at great cost of time. Being often needed on short notice, the delay necessary to have the work done at the Public Printing Office would often lose a mail. Convenience and expedition are of more importance even than absolute secrecy in this class of work. Originals of dispatches received are duplicated in an hour or two, without the need of pen copies.

The necessary plant (presses, type, &c.) has been set up in the Department under last year's appropriation. Labor is detailed from the Government Printing Office, chargeable to the Department's general allowance for printing, in the same way that the binding of the Department's confidential archives has been conducted for many years. The current expenses for paper and materials will hereafter be very light. The utility of the present arrangement has been so abundantly demonstrated that it is not easy to see how the work of the Department could be accomplished without it. The mere change of the location where the printing is to be done does not increase its cost, but it does increase its usefulness and efficiency.

15. Clerk to the legation in London (estimated for at $1,200, and omitted from the House bill).

The allowance which the Department has heretofore been able to make from its limited contingent fund for foreign intercourse has been very inadequate for the clerical requirements of the London legation. Moreover, the irregular employment of native aid necessarily admits outsiders to a knowledge of the business of the legation, which is most undesirable and even dangerous. In no legation abroad is secrecy and safety more imperatively demanded. Under the proposed appropriation a competent and responsible citizen of the United States could be permanently attached to the legation at London. I regard this provision as of far more importance than might appear on casual observation. The item should be inserted between lines 73 and 74, House bill.

16. Mexican boundary survey (estimated $100,000 additional, and omitted from House bill).

It is important that this survey, under treaty engagements, should be pushed to completion when once begun. An appropriation of $100,000 is already available under a former act; but it is very necessary that a sufficient sum to complete the work within eighteen months should be assured, and in default of such assurance it is not regarded as expedient to begin it, only to suffer interruption (with considerable additional expense) while awaiting further appropriation; $200,000 in all will probably suffice.

17. Haytian arbitration (estimated for at $4,077.44, and omitted from the House bill).

The arbitration in the cases of Pelletier and Lazare is completed and the expense ascertained. Hayti has paid her half of the cost. In the absence of an appropriation this Government is unable to pay its half to compensate the distinguished arbitrator (Retired Justice Strong) and pay for the clerical work actually performed.

18. Venezuela Claims Commission (estimated for at $13,500, and omitted in the House bill).

The convention signed December 5, 1885, between the United States and Venezuela, requires the constitution within three months after exchange of ratifications of an international commission to rehear the awards of the Caracas commission of 1868. A delay has occurred in the exchange of ratifications (which is the only remaining step to complete the international stipulation), but it is hoped this will soon be overcome. If this be done, the execution of the compact would be arrested pending provision by Congress to organize the commission. An appropriation is imperative to guard the national honor. If, for any cause, the convention of December 5, 1885, should fail of completion, not a dollar of the appropriation could be expended, and it would wholly revert to the public Treasury.

19. Alaska survey (estimated for at $100,000, and omitted from House bill).

This estimate is in accordance with a diplomatic engagement between the United States and Great Britain. The need of a determination of the Alaskan boundary, and the way proposed to accomplish it, are fully set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 143 Forty-ninth Congress, First Session, in the papers accompanying the President's message to Congress of May 17, 1886.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, Senate.

DISEASES OF CATTLE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. MILLER. When the bill was last under consideration, with my consent an amendment of the committee was disagreed to on page 9, section 9, in lines 17 and 18, which I now desire to have reconsidered by unanimous consent, and to have the committee amendment agreed to.

It will be seen by all Senators that the reports in regard to operations of the cattle commission should be made to the Agricultural Department instead of to the President, because by an amendment at the beginning of the bill we have made the cattle commission, when created, a bureau in the Department of Agriculture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRISON in the chair). The Senator from New York asks unanimous consent that the vote of the Senate on the amendment which he has indicated may be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it will be so ordered.

Mr. MILLER. Now I desire to have the amendment of the committee there agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from New York indicate it again, as the Secretary did not catch it?

Mr. MILLER. In section 9, lines 17 and 18.

The SECRETARY. In section 9, line 17, after the words "by the," the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry proposed to strike out the words "President of the United States" and insert "Commissioner of Agriculture."

Mr. MILLER. I desire to have the amendment agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This amendment was disagreed to yesterday, and on the request of the Senator from New York the action of the Senate has been reconsidered. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. It will then be the Commissioner of Agriculture.

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. MILLER. Let the amendment of the Senator from Missouri be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the amendment of the Senator from Missouri has been in some respects modified by him. It will be reported again for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to section 3:

That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State, whenever the plans and methods shall be accepted by any State in which pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, or such State shall have adopted plans and methods for the suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the commission and approved by the President of the United States, and whenever the governor of a State, being thereto authorized by law, or other properly constituted authorities signify their assent to the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized to expend in said State so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigations, disinfection, and quarantine measures, including the slaughter of animals, as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease in said State, or from said State into any other State or Territory.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I wish to ask the Senator from New York, who has charge of this bill, whether he consents to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri. As a friend of the pleuro-pneumonia bill and desirous of some legislation on the question which will enable the Government or some authority to stamp out the disease, as there seems to be an immediate necessity for the passage of some such measure, and for the additional reason that there are many Senators on this side of the Chamber who think the bill as presented by the committee is subject to some constitutional objection, and as the amendment of the Senator from Missouri seems to relieve them of that impression, I hope the amendment will be accepted.

Furthermore, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri would reach every case. It requires the assent of the State, and when that assent is once given by the State the General Government, as I understand, may then go within the jurisdiction of that State and at an expense borne entirely by the Government may stamp out the disease wherever it finds it, even if the State authorities refuse to aid or contribute a dollar for that purpose. The State Legislatures, or most of them, are now in session. It will be very easy indeed for them to confer upon the governor the requisite authority to give this assent, although, perhaps, it would not be so easy to secure an appropriation of money by the several States for the purpose indicated in the bill. Therefore if the Senator from New York will accept on the part of the committee the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri, it will vastly simplify the measure, and all the objects he has in view in my opinion, as I understand the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, can be easily accomplished.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I find it impossible to accept this amendment. As I stated yesterday to the Senate, this bill is asked for in its present condition by substantially the entire western portion of our country, and also by numerous commercial bodies in the East. I know of no objection to it in the East at all, and the sentiment demanding this bill in the western portion of our country, west of the Alleghany Mountains, is almost unanimous.

The bill which we passed in 1884 creating what is known as the bureau of animal industry has been tried for these three years and has been found wanting; and why wanting? Simply because that bill required that the Federal officials before they could proceed to extirpate pleuro-pneumonia in any State of the Union should secure the co-operation of the State. Many States, a majority of them, have taken no action at all, and therefore the bureau of animal industry has found it impossible to go into those States to do anything; and that, I believe, is substantially true of all the Eastern States in which pleuro-pneumonia does now exist.

In some of the Western States the Legislatures did pass acts authorizing the State officials to co-operate; in others they have taken no action at all; and in the West, where they have in some States passed legislative acts authorizing the State authorities to co-operate with the Federal authorities, their co-operation has been found impossible, and that is the case to-day in the State of Illinois and in the city of Chicago. The State of Illinois passed a law indicating that its officials should co-operate with the Federal officials, and by the power of that law a cattle commission was appointed in the State of Illinois. That cattle commission has not co-operated and does not co-operate with the Federal authorities in stamping out pleuro-pneumonia in the State of Illinois to-day, as I understand, and it is because of their failure to thus co-operate that the Federal authorities find themselves utterly powerless to go into the city of Chicago and obliterate this disease, as they could do, I believe, within thirty days, if they had the power.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator yield to me just there?

Mr. MILLER. Let me finish my statements of the reasons for this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York declines to yield.

Mr. MILLER. Finding this condition of affairs, finding that the entire cattle industry, which mounts up into the hundreds of millions of dollars annually, is threatened with great loss and eventually with destruction if this disease is not suppressed, all the people interested in this industry throughout the country substantially have been here petitioning Congress day after day, week after week, and month after month, to pass the legislation found in this bill.

Now we are met with an amendment by the Senator from Missouri that, if it shall prevail, takes out of this bill the great power which was proposed to be given to the Federal Government by the bill. In short, this amendment curtails the power of the commission when it shall be appointed, and leaves it little greater than the power of the present bureau of animal industry. That bureau, as I have stated, before it could act, must secure the co-operation of the State. This amendment proposes that before this commission shall act it shall secure the consent of the State. The consent of a State can only be had through its legislative bodies. All the Legislatures of the thirty-eight States of this Union must be convened if they are not now in session, and must pass laws authorizing the officials of their respective States to give their assent, or they must give the assent by a direct act of the Legislature. Does any one believe that this can be done within the next two years or the next five years? Not at all; it can not be done; it never can be done.

Does anybody believe that the State of South Carolina, with the views of its statesmen upon the question of State rights, will ever call its Legislature together and pass an act consenting that the Federal officials shall go into the territory of the State and enter the premises of every man and there examine his cattle and see if they have pleuro-pneumonia, and, if they find pleuro-pneumonia, to either kill the cattle and pay for them or put them in quarantine?

Mr. President, in my judgment not one-half of the States of this Union will ever give that consent. Then why should the Federal Government go on and expend this million dollars and more millions which must follow it? If a single State shall refuse to give its assent, then the bill amounts to nothing in the final end, for whilst you may crush out pleuro-pneumonia in Kentucky as it has been done, or in Ohio as it has been done, or in Missouri as it is claimed it has been done, yet we find it to-day in the city of Chicago, the great central cattle market of this country, to which nearly all the cattle go, passing either east or west.

So long as it shall remain there, that is a great center of contagion, and it will be impossible long to confine the disease to Chicago. The shipment of blooded cattle from the East to the West for the improvement of the vast herds upon our plains go through that city, and in my judgment it will not be twelve months before from that center of pestilence and plague to the cattle in this country this disease will be found upon our great ranges on the plains and in the Territories, and when that day shall come the millions upon millions of money that are invested in cattle ranging and cattle growing in the West will disappear as the dew before the morning sun.

Why, sir, Great Britain has expended since it first undertook to crush out this plague in its own country over $750,000,000. It has paid it out to its citizens for the cattle which it has killed in attempting to exterminate the disease. The loss to the Kingdom of Great Britain and its colonies in Australia and Africa amounts up to thousands of millions of dollars, and here to-day with this thing threatening this great industry we are asked before we can do anything to save this industry to ask the assent of each individual State!

No, Mr. President, however much I may desire to secure the passage of this bill, I can not accept the amendment of the Senator from Missouri, for if that amendment is adopted this bill is substantially destroyed. Of course, if the Senate by a majority vote shall adopt the amendment, I shall bow to its judgment, but in my belief it will be the great mistake of this session, and we shall have done an act which will cost the people of this country untold millions of dollars.

Mr. President, I beg of the Senator from Missouri, whose own Legislature has petitioned for this bill, a State which is largely interested in this great industry, perhaps more largely than any other State in the Union, certainly if we take into account the capabilities of that State for cattle-growing—I beg of him not to insist on this amendment, but to let the bill pass the Senate as it now stands and let it go to the House of Representatives; and if that body, directly representing the people, shall in any way amend it and shall still leave anything of it, I shall then feel compelled to ask the Senate to concur in such an amendment; but I trust that the Senator from Missouri will not insist upon this amendment, and will not ask for its adoption.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I know much better than the Senator from New York possibly can know the interest the people of Missouri feel in the passage of some bill for the extirpation of pleuro-pneumonia in cattle, and I know that the Legislature of my State has unanimously passed a resolution in favor of this bill; but as a matter of course the bill was not before them and was not subjected to the critical inspection that is demanded at my hands to-day as a Senator in voting for or against it.

As a public man, I have every inducement that is possible placed before me to vote for a measure as stringent as possible for the purposes which this bill has in view, but I have my oath to support the Constitution, which must be paramount with me to everything else. If it was to terminate my public life to-morrow, I could not vote for this bill with my convictions as to the power of Congress on this subject. I do not believe that even the Senator from New York, although he announced the other day that a paternal government was a necessity, and, to use his expression, that we on this side of the Chamber must come to it sooner or later, would deliberately assert the proposition that the Federal Government has the right under the Constitution to go into the territory of any State of this Union and, against the will of the State authorities, slaughter cattle not intended to be transported into any other State. In all the extremity of this paternal-government doctrine as urged here and elsewhere, I hardly think that any Senator on this floor would announce that proposition.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me a moment?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator well understands, of course, that the bill contains a provision that cattle are not to be killed except by the consent of the owners. If an owner objects to the price offered by the commission, then the commission simply puts the cattle in quarantine, and they are not killed at all.

Mr. VEST. As a matter of course; but that does not touch the point I make. I hold that as to inspection, quarantine, and police laws relative to the domestic government of a State, the State authorities have exclusive jurisdiction; but I admit at the same time that with the consent of the State authorities the Federal Government can operate within the territorial limits of a State, and there are various instances which might be cited where the Federal Government and the State authorities have acted in unison. But this bill, aside from the question of paying individuals for their property, which is not the point at all, asserts the proposition that even if the governor and State Legislature should by enactment solemnly made declare that this bill should not be enforced within their limits, still this commission could go in, kill cattle, and pay the owners. I can not agree to that proposition.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. VEST. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator, if I understood him correctly, stated that the police powers, as he terms them, which include quarantine, the extirpation of diseases, and matters of that kind, under the Constitution of the United States, belong exclusively to the States. Now, does the Senator pretend to say that any one of the thirty-eight States of this Union can vacate its constitutional powers by a mere assent that some foreign power may come in and exercise those privileges and rights of it under the Constitution? May a State vacate the rights of its own citizens under the Constitution? Would it make it any more constitutional for the Federal authorities to go into a State and destroy cattle, which the Senator says it can not do under the Federal Constitution, simply because the Legislature of that State by an act of the Legislature said the Federal authority might come in? In other words, can the Federal Government under his construction ever do those acts save by an amendment to the Federal Constitution itself? Does his amendment better it?

Mr. VEST. I have no question at all that the State authorities anywhere in this Union may permit the United States Government to exercise these powers upon their territory if they see proper to do so; and it would be simply the use of one agency, the Federal agency, instead of the agency of the State authorities. The Supreme Court of the United States has recognized that doctrine in regard to the quarantine laws where the Federal authorities had used the quarantine instrumentalities of a sovereign State for the purpose of exercising its national powers.

I do not care to go into a critical analysis of the dual form of our Government and the difference between Federal and State authority. The Federal authority can use State instrumentalities to carry out the powers granted to the General Government in the Constitution, and so can the State authority permit the instrumentality of the General Government to be used in carrying out State power within their respective limits. That proposition is too plain, outside of any adjudication, to admit of any argument.

Mr. President, the framers of this bill recognize that this power which they propose to exercise here comes from the commerce clause of the Constitution, the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the States. The very first section of the bill starts out with the enunciation of this proposition, that under the power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations is found the authority here proposed to be exercised:

Be it enacted, &c., That for the purpose—

Mark this language—

That for the purpose of better promoting the exportation of cattle and the products of live stock from the United States, and for the purpose of increasing, promoting, and facilitating the commerce in cattle and their products among the several States of this Union—

Quoting nearly the exact language of the Constitution—

and for the purpose of removing the obstructions to such commerce with foreign nations and among the States now occasioned by the existence of contagious, infectious, or communicable diseases among cattle and other live stock, and especially contagious pleuro-pneumonia, &c.

And then come the stringent regulations of the law. Here is a man in the State of Missouri who has a herd of cattle that he does not propose to export either to a foreign nation or to another State or Territory, and under this bill, as it comes from the committee, a commission can go into that State, after the governor and Legislature of Missouri have declared by solemn enactment that this bill shall not be carried out within the limits of the State of Missouri, can, notwithstanding that, go in with their agents, break down the doors of his barn or the fences upon his plantation, and quarantine his cattle or slaughter them in defiance of the State and without any regard to the interstate-commerce provision of the Constitution of the General Government.

As I said before, if it terminated my public life to-morrow—and I know how the cattle-owners of the country regard this enactment—I would not, and could not, vote for this bill as it stands.

The result of the amendment which I have proposed is this: It will enable many of us on this side of the Chamber to vote for the bill if the amendment shall be put upon it, because it simply says that the assent of the State authorities must be given before the commissioners who make this quarantine inspection act within the limits of any State. The amendment does not require the co-operation of the States, and that seems to have been the principal objection to the animal-industry bill. It simply requires assent; and it is too plain for argument that if this bill is passed without such an amendment the doctrine of State rights would be a mere memory of the past to be sneered at and laughed at for all time to come, and every one of us who votes for the bill as it comes from the committee is estopped from ever saying hereafter that our construction of the Constitution handed down to us by our fathers is the basis on which our votes are recorded. I would be ashamed to address the people of my State and talk about constitutional limitations if I voted for this bill as it now stands. I want to vote for it, but between my oath to support the Constitution and popular clamor for this or any other measure I should be a disgrace to this body if I hesitated one instant in regard to my duty.

Let the Senator accept this amendment. I have no threats to make, but let him take this amendment, and in my judgment the bill will become a law. If there be a fatal defect in this whole matter, that defect is in the Constitution, but as long as it remains the Constitution it is paramount with me, and I intend to observe it.

Mr. MILLER. I wish to put a question to the Senator before he takes his seat. I have returned thanks here several times that I was not a constitutional lawyer, and I have occasion now to repeat that remark.

If I understand the Senator from Missouri he takes the position that this bill is unconstitutional, and that by putting into it a clause which shall require from a State the assent of the State before the Federal authorities can carry it out, that will make its operation in a State entirely constitutional. Is that the position?

Mr. VEST. I believe so.

Mr. MILLER. Then the Senator brought up the case of a farmer in his own State. Let me ask him a question. Let him suppose this bill has been passed and that the Federal authorities, having obtained the assent of the Legislature of Missouri, go into that State and carry out this law, and shall come to a citizen of the State of Missouri, and shall enter his premises and seize and slaughter his cattle and pay him, or offer to pay him compensation, or shall put them into quarantine, and that citizen should object to the Federal authorities doing that and should refuse to permit it to be done and should resist it, and the Federal authorities should then undertake to punish him under the penal clauses of this bill, and that case should be carried to the Supreme Court of the United States, does he believe that the Federal authorities could set up in their defense that the State authorities of Missouri had given them power to do this thing, and that therefore it was constitutional under the Federal Constitution?

Does he believe that any such defense as that would operate? It seems to me that the sovereign State of Missouri can not assign its powers and prerogatives under the Constitution. If the State of Missouri is sovereign in this question it can not put aside that sovereignty by saying the Federal authority may come in and exercise it; or, in other words, if the private citizen should appeal to the Constitution of the Federal Government, if the Senator is correct, the court would be bound to hold that the Federal authority had no power to touch his cattle, to quarantine them, or to kill them.

Mr. VEST. Then logically and mathematically this bill is absolutely unconstitutional, because if with the assent of the State authorities this thing can not be done and the bill can not be carried out, then how can it be carried out without the assent of the State to it?

Mr. MILLER. I was putting the supposition or the statement of the Senator. I assume that the bill is constitutional and constitutional without his amendment, but I put the question to him, how does his amendment improve its constitutionality or enable the Federal authorities to carry it out if a private citizen sees fit to resist it and appeals to that Constitution which he says forbids the doing of that very thing?

Mr. VEST. Under the provisions of the Senator's bill cattle can not be slaughtered at all without the consent of the individual citizen who owns them.

Mr. MILLER. Ah! But they can be quarantined, and the power to quarantine is equivalent to the power to kill. There can not be any difference between the two things as to the power. It would have been just as constitutional, in my view, to have given the power to kill absolutely and to pay as to give the power to quarantine. That is what we have given, because that means taking property.

Mr. VEST. I should like to ask the Senator from New York if he believes that the Federal authorities have the right to go into a State and even quarantine cattle when the Legislature and governor of the State have absolutely declared that it shall not be done, and those cattle are not to be transported out of the State?

Mr. MILLER. I answer that in the affirmative. I have no possible doubt of it; no question of it, provided we give the Federal authority power to do it by law. That is what I am seeking to do in this bill.

Mr. VEST. If that be so why is it that the entire power to pass this measure is put upon the commerce clause of the Constitution? Why does the Senator recite in his own bill that the purpose of it is to promote the exportation of cattle to foreign countries and the transportation from one State to another of animals among the States? If he believes, as he says he does, that the Federal Government has the power, without regard to whether the cattle are to be used commercially, to go into any State and destroy cattle or to quarantine them against the consent of the State authorities, why did he not say "for the purpose of extirpating pleuro-pneumonia in the United States the following enactments are made?" Why does he put the whole of his measure upon the commerce clauses of the Constitution and those alone?

Mr. MAXEY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri to section 4, which not only authorizes the commissioners to go into a State and destroy property, but makes it a penal offense for any one who resists the execution of that duty, and imposes a fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding one hundred days, or both fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court. In other words, where the property is not in transitu, not coming under the interstate commerce clause of the Constitution at all, where property is within the State, it is proposed that the United States shall invade the State and if the party refuses to abandon the property he is subject to fine and imprisonment.

Mr. VEST. That is all I wish to say, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before the amendment is voted on, as a member of this body I feel it my duty to say that, in my opinion, there never was a more direct attempt to override every provision of the Constitution and to obliterate every right which the States and people of this country have secured to them under the Constitution than is proposed by the bill. I have seen at various times insidious attempts to override the Constitution, but this is a bold, base, naked proposition to check any claim which the States may have to the control of their own police powers, to transfer them to the Federal Government, to enter the States without let or hindrance from the States, and do what the Federal authorities please with the property within the limits of the States. I repeat that it is the boldest attempt I have ever seen or heard of in the Senate to disregard the limitations contained in the Constitution upon the powers of Congress and to override every right which the States enjoy and which the people of the States enjoy under the Constitution.

There was a time when there was some respect paid to the limitations upon Federal authority. There was a time when it was believed that the powers not delegated to the General Government were reserved to the States and to the people; but from the doctrines which I have heard proclaimed by the Senator from New York in advocacy of this bill, that time has passed; the States have no rights which the General Government is bound to respect, but, on the contrary, it may disregard every supposed right of a State and every supposed right of the citizens of a State and enter by the agents of the General Government within the limits of the States to take charge of the property of the citizens of a State without the consent of the State or the people themselves. Against such a proposition I feel called upon as a member of this body to protest.

While I shall not enter into any detailed examination of the provisions of the bill, I here proclaim that in my opinion this whole proposition is predicated upon the idea that the Congress of the United States may enact a law that will set aside every safeguard of the rights of the people and of the States, and do just as they please. The Constitution was regarded in our earliest days as the palladium of our rights, and my opinion is that it will be a sad day for the American people when they adopt the views of the Senator from New York and insist that Congress may, without regard to the States and without regard to the citizens of the States, enter within the limits of the States and take charge of their property and dispose of it at their pleasure.

The provisions of the bill authorize these commissioners or their agents to enter within the limits of a State to take the property, the cattle of the people of the States, if in their judgment they are diseased, to quarantine them, and in certain events to kill them and pay for them only part of their value. Was such a provision ever made before in the Senate of the United States? There was a time when the members of this body stood squarely up to the provisions of the Constitution and maintained the rights of the people and of the States and would not consent that there should be any violation of the provisions of the Constitution which reserved to the States all the powers that are not delegated to the General Government.

I am sorry to hear such doctrines proclaimed to-day. It may be that we are coming to what the Senator from New York said a few days ago, a paternal government, but I shall regret in my time at least to see every characteristic of State rights, every guarantee of State rights and of the rights of the people annulled and this body assume to itself the prerogative and power of overriding every limitation in the Constitution.

I do not believe myself that there is any great popular demand for this bill or for any bill upon the subject. I am fully aware that there are many people largely interested in the cattle business, men making perhaps more money than men engaged in any other business in the country, who for the purposes of promoting their own interests would be willing to see the provisions of the Constitution overridden, but whenever the question is brought to the great masses of the people, I have not lost such faith in them as to believe that they will be willing to see their rights surrendered to promote the interests of the cattle kings of the plains.

I have heard that there has been some trace of this disease in all the Eastern States. I remember that a year or two ago it was alleged that some two or three herds were affected with this disease in my own State. But the people themselves quarantined their own cattle, and I have heard nothing for the last twelve months of any disease whatever within the limits of the State. I understand that there never were more than two or three herds at all affected by it, and the owners of the herds got together and determined to crush it out by quarantining their own cattle. They never thought of looking to the Federal Government for any interposition in their behalf, and they never came here begging, with outstretched hands, remuneration from the Federal Treasury.

Let this bill become a law, and what guarantee have you that the people themselves will feel any interest in this subject? If a man knows his cattle are to be paid for out of the Federal Treasury he will be less careful to guard against disease, and there will be more danger of the disease spreading under the provisions of the bill than without it, in my opinion. The surest way to prevent a disease of this kind is to let the people of the country understand that it is to their interest to crush it out; not to let it spread and then to come here and get a part, at least, of the remuneration for the losses which they may have sustained.

Mr. President, I hope the bill will not pass. The amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri modifies to a very considerable extent the harsh features of the bill, and yet with the provision proposed by that Senator incorporated in it the bill is of such a character that I could not and would not vote for it, even if that amendment should be adopted.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the bill seems to me monstrous, in gross violation of the fundamental theory upon which these governments, State and National, are organized. Of course, I am not going into a minute discussion of the "general welfare" clause or the doctrines of National and State rights in general. This is the general proposition I have laid down for myself: What the States may completely do within their own borders is left for them to do; this work they certainly can do. And whatever is needed for their welfare, to be done only by work without the State is confided to the National Government—that sort of service which can best be done by one common agent of all the States. The State of Connecticut, the State of South Carolina, the State of Massachusetts could not be permitted to make treaties with each of the other governments nor with foreign governments. That is obvious.

The Senator from New York says that the Constitution protects us against a common enemy. If it be external it does protect us against a common enemy, but if the enemy is one internal, in the States, the Federal Government does not come in until the State calls for it, and in many cases has no right to call for it in any event.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator tell us——

Mr. HAWLEY. I think it far better the Senator should wait. With his usual admirable combativeness in favor of the bill he will be sure to reply if I say anything at all.

Mr. MILLER. I simply want to ask a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Which one of the Southern States petitioned to have the General Government go down South about twenty-five years ago and help to put down trouble inside the State?

Mr. HAWLEY. That is a very much broader question. The salvation of the whole Union was at stake then; the life of the Government was at stake. If an enemy external to a State, or to the States as a Union, attack a State or the Union, then the Federal Government is bound to act without waiting for the call of a State. It is created for that purpose.

It has been remarked by the Senator from New York that some of the provisions of the bill are copied, almost verbatim, I think I understood him to say, from English statutes. Obviously that is no argument whatever in favor of the bill. It might be an argument in favor of a bill on the subject under consideration in one of the States. The State having full jurisdiction, as the English Parliament has, one might learn from the action of the other; but the Parliament, as everybody knows, unites all the powers of a State Legislature and of the Federal Government, and much more. What its precise limitations are nobody knows. Just how far it may go in changing what is called the law of the land no lawyer has been able to precisely define. It is Federal and State government all in one, and the Parliament is not called upon to observe any of the nice distinctions we are discussing.

This bill is like many others, born of the spirit abroad in the country that, in my judgment, threatens fatal injuries to our Constitution, a spirit of impatience that demands instant action by the whole country. If it be a good thing people want it done immediately, and they hurry to the Federal Government as combining the power of thirty-eight States expecting it to do all good things instantly. The doctrine is simply stated in this way: Is this thing a good thing? Yes. Then let us have Congress do it for the whole country at once.

That will not answer. There is a body of the people in the country who are not content with the comparatively conservative and, I think, the constitutional law we passed concerning interstate commerce, but are demanding that the Federal Government shall take entire possession of the whole railroad system of the country, worth, say, eight thousand millions of dollars. They demand that it shall buy the whole and attempt to govern it, thus adding seven or eight thousand millions to the national debt and about seven hundred thousand to the number of the nation's employés.

That is not all. They are dissatisfied with the condition of the savings banks, best managed, in our judgment, by the people of the localities where the depositors live, and they want us to organize a national system of savings banks also.

Then, in the matter of common-school education, another body of agitators, dissatisfied with what they consider the inability of people to take care of themselves, at their own doors, in their own school districts within three miles where they reside, come here to have some fellow appointed at Washington who knows more about common school education in my school district than my neighbor, Uncle Jedediah, who has three or four children to educate—some fellow from Washington who will send off a decree instanter, demand and manage the business better that Uncle Jedediah and the neighbors' in the old-fashioned "deestrict" school meetin'.

Some time ago when quarantine laws were under discussion it was found that there were a number of great constitutional lawyers who did not doubt the power of the Federal Government to go into every State and take care of every case of small-pox, chicken-pox, or measles, if it was necessary for the "general welfare," under the famous clause of the Constitution. That does not by any means exhaust the field into which these gentlemen desire us to enter.

Another exhibition of this tendency is in the disposition to grumble about the State Legislatures and to change the constitutions in many States so as to have biennial sessions. The legislative body is adjudged a nuisance; the more quickly it adjourns the better; the less frequently it sits the better; the less frequently our elections are held the better for the whole country. The critics of this class seem not to recognize that there is considerable inconvenience in a free government; that if 11,000,000 voters undertake to govern themselves through one national and thirty-eight State governments, it makes more trouble and costs a little more than it does to have one man do it for the whole people. If you wish to avoid inconvenience and delay, and the necessity of waiting for co-operation between the States and the Federal Government, let us dispense with our system and have a king with fifteen or twenty advisers around him, who, if they make up their minds after dinner that the cattle disease ought to be exterminated before the next night, issue a decree that it shall be done. The subject will be disposed of without bothering sixty millions of people and thirty-eight Legislatures. That is the cheapest and the most direct and practical way of taking care of the evils of the country. Absolute monarchy is the cheapest and simplest government in the world beyond any doubt.

It costs a great deal to run this free Government, with its magnificent organization of thirty-eight States, combined, for certain purposes, in one central State. I think it is the most expensive form of government in the world, but we believe it is worth all it costs, and more. On the whole, in the long run, taking a broad view of it through the centuries, it is the most peaceable and the cheapest form of government. For one, I propose to stick to it. We ought to deem ourselves pre-eminently fortunate above all the nations of the world in having this vast territory divided into thirty-eight and more sections or divisions, over each of which presides a body of legislators and executive officers chosen right from the locality, knowing all the wants of the people, and obeying their orders, taking charge of that vast mass of matters of local and of immediate personal interest which we are absolutely disqualified for, which we are totally unfit to take charge of.

What is a finer arrangement in all imagination than that the several States shall each take care of these affairs for itself, while the imperial Federal Government shall manage the relations between them and all the relations of the whole in one toward and with the external world? The whole field of government is then completely covered in the best possible manner.

I should like to know how in the world three commissioners selected here by the Commissioner of Agriculture—for it was thought by the committee that the business of overruling the Constitution was hardly dignified enough to require men appointed by the President—I should like to know how three commissioners, appointed by a gentleman from Missouri, or even from Massachusetts, should know more about the cattle in Hartford County than the people in Hartford County, those who keep some of the finest cattle in the world.

Does the Senator suppose my neighbors there do not know when a cow is sick and have to send to Washington to find it out? Must you have an agent or inspector to come there to doctor a sick calf or tell the owner how much it is worth or what shall be done with it? How many people is it going to take to quarantine every herd of fine cattle in the United States in case the people choose to get a little "airy" about this bill and say, "We will take care of ourselves?"

About how many subordinates are to be appointed? No limitation is provided in the bill. A great deal is said about agents or commissioners, but not enough is said about their number, or what their compensation and their specific powers shall be.

Here is section 3, which strikes me as a little peculiar. Section 3 says:

SEC. 3. That the said commissioners are hereby authorized and required to make, record, and publish rules and regulations providing for and regulating the agencies, methods, and manner of conducting and making the investigations aforesaid regarding the existence of said contagious diseases; for ascertaining, entering, and searching places where such diseased animals are supposed to exist—

And so forth, and at the end:

And to make all other needful rules and regulations which may—

In the judgment of these three invented sovereigns, these three commissioners—be deemed requisite to the full and due execution of the provisions of this act.

The three commissioners do not know any more than any three respectable farmers and cattle owners in my own State know about it, but they are to make rules for the whole United States; and moreover, as the bill stands, these rules and regulations (which it was thought well to remember to let the President of the United States approve) "shall have the force and effect of law, so far as the same are not inconsistent with this act and the other laws of the United States"—and the Constitution, I suppose.

But I observe there is no penalty provided for the violation of these rules or regulations having the force of statutes. These men may issue a code to equal in volume the body of the statutes, which is to have "the force and effect of law," but nobody is to be punished in any manner, prosecuted or hindered if he disobeys one or the whole of them. What sort of statutes will those be? Several punishable offenses are set forth in sections 4 and 5, but in affixing the penalties no reference is made to section 3; yet to this unknown, unforeseen body of law which is to be published by the three commissioners, we give the force of statutory law.

The animal-industry act, which provides, in my judgment, pretty effectually for interstate and international cattle trade, might be supposed to be sufficient.

It is said in regard to this, as it is in regard to many other matters in which it is sought to enlarge the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, that the good work can not be done without it. That is a great mistake. It certainly can be done in this case. The States have absolute and complete jurisdiction—nobody denies it. It is asserted that the Federal Government has a concurrent jurisdiction over our cattle, but I deny it. The States have abundant power. Is there any indisposition on their part to act? If there be, it must be because the evil does not seem to them what it is here alleged to be. It must be because they are not afflicted by diseased cattle coming from foreign lands or from other States, and feel themselves in no danger.

I do not know a State which has not some legislation with regard to the evil. I am aware that I often have occasion to boast of our little State of Connecticut. It is many years since we created a State board of agriculture; it is many years since we enacted provisions for immediately inspecting, quarantining, killing, and paying for diseased cattle. Their fine blooded stock is very precious to our farmers and they took alarm early. Is there a State that has not some kind of legislation on the subject?

Am I to be told that the great State of Illinois knows less about this evil and is less likely to rise with the proper public spirit and take care of itself? Does not Illinois know what the disease is? Is it not aware of the possible danger to its great mart, Chicago, and the possible injury to the country at large? I think Illinois is willing and able to take care of herself.

We are told that some Legislatures will be in session for some time to come. There is nothing in their constitutions that forbids their governors to summon their Legislatures, in case of serious danger, to remedy defective laws.

The bill as it stands is a most extraordinary deviation from our theory of this Government—from that happy invention, that crowning work of the statesmanship of the ages, by which the local concerns remain in charge of the individual States, and all general matters concerning their relations with each other and their joint relations to the rest of the world are committed to a National Government. This magnificent system, this crowning work of the centuries, there is reason to fear may be undermined and nibbled away and destroyed by a great body of legislation of the character I have indicated until the partitions between the States and the National Government will be like the old breastworks in the South, or the lines of our canals that were abandoned a generation ago in the North, the curious historian only will find them. It is supposed that three hundred and twenty-five men in one body and seventy-six in the other here in Washington are better able to take care of the railroads, the cattle, the schools, and the savings-banks (and finally of all governmental work) than the thirty-eight local Legislatures.

Yet we began by saying that it is utterly impossible for a nation of many millions of people to live without dividing sovereignty and remitting minor affairs to the people of limited localities.

The tendency everywhere else but in the United States is towards local self-government. A great empire is convulsed from its center to its circumference, and is possibly running very serious risks by reason of the fight over the question of local self-government, whereas, to the superficial spectator, the tendency of American talk and legislation is towards the obliteration of State lines, after having boasted for a century of our wonderful balance of centralizing and decentralizing forces.

Mr. MAXEY. I called attention a moment ago to what I regarded as the fault of section 4 that is continued in section 5, which reads:

> That any person who is the owner of or who is possessed of any interest in any animals affected with any of the diseases named in section 2 of this act, or any person who, as agent, common carrier, consignee, or otherwise, is charged with any duty in regard to any animal so diseased or exposed to the contagion of such disease or diseases, or any officer or agent charged with any duties under the provisions of this act, who shall knowingly conceal the existence of any of the said diseases or the fact of such exposure to said contagion, &c.—

shall be punishable by fine and imprisonment as provided in section 4.

Then section 8 makes it the duty of the several district attorneys of the United States to prosecute all violations of this act in any district or circuit court of general jurisdiction in any district in which a violation of this act has been committed.

Interstate commerce is commerce which begins in one State and ends beyond its borders somewhere else. There is no such thing as interstate commerce which has no beginning, and yet this bill authorizes, under penalty of fine and imprisonment, officers to go into the limits of a State where cattle are not in transitu, not put under the control of any interstate-commerce laws, but actually in the State, and if that officer of the United States Government believes that those cattle are diseased, he has the right to destroy them. He can fix the damages done, and the party can not gainsay that, and if the damages are not satisfactory he can then by way of punishment quarantine the entire place or plantation of the owner of the cattle, and if he knowingly conceals the fact that the cattle have been diseased or have been exposed to disease, and fails to communicate that fact, he is liable to a fine and imprisonment as provided in section 4.

Not only that, but whilst I know of no law which authorizes the United States Government to institute a suit against a citizen of a State which does not run in favor of a citizen of some other State, or for a violation of some known law of Congress made in pursuance of the Constitution, yet here under the pretended interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution property which is not engaged in interstate commerce but is localized and in the State can be destroyed, and a man who is not engaged in interstate-commerce business and who may never intend to engage in interstate commerce may be taken into the Federal courts outside of the jurisdiction of the State courts and fined and imprisoned. If there is any constitutional power for that I never heard of it. The whole theory of this bill, in my judgment, is fatally subversive of every principle of local self-government and of the theory of government under which we live.

This is a dual Government. Congress has power to pass laws in pursuance of the grants enumerated on the face of the Constitution, and such laws as may be necessary and proper to carry out those enumerated grants, and there the power of Congress ceases. There is no power in the Constitution given to Congress to go into a State and interfere with the citizen of that State who has violated no act which Congress has the right to pass.

It is said that this is under the interstate-commerce clause. If it is under that clause of the Constitution, how can a man be punished when he is not engaged directly or indirectly in interstate commerce? How can he be taken into the Federal courts when not engaged in interstate commerce? How can he be fined and imprisoned when not so engaged? How can the appraisal of his property made by these commissioners or their agents bind him, and if he refuses to accept of their appraisement, how can we provide that his entire place shall be quarantined?

Sir, from the beginning to the end of this bill, in my judgment, it is fatally wrong. I say this representing in part a State which is as deeply interested in the cattle business as any State in this Union, and more so, I believe, than any other State at this time in the Union, and yet in my judgment the entire control of this question is in the hands of the State unless it is property in transitu actually engaged in interstate commerce.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to detain the Senate by making a speech upon this subject. I wish, however, to say that I do not share in the apprehension that any very great injury will be done to this Government and its institutions by the purchase or condemnation of a diseased animal in the interior of Massachusetts, or Connecticut, or any other State. The constitutional argument seems to be grounded upon the proposition that the Government of the United States may engage in a great war between the States to suppress resistance to the national authority and to provide for the public security, may build railroads to aid in the regulation of commerce, construct ships, establish courts upon foreign territory or build canals, but when they find a sick cow or a diseased animal that may communicate contagion in the interior of any State, however great the public danger that may arise from that, it would be a serious menace to our institutions and a dangerous invasion of the rights of the States to take charge of that animal and compensate its owner and provide for its safe disposition.

Certainly it is no argument to cite an instance or an illustration. It is certainly true that the diseased cow in the interior of any State, not intended for transportation, not subject to transportation, and not a part of the commerce among the States, is the subject of State jurisdiction and State power, and that it is not one of the subjects of power committed to the Federal Government, but that it is under the direction of the State laws; and that it is the genius and the practical character of our Government that the States alone can legislate in regard to that diseased animal which is used only for local purposes and is not engaged in the commerce of the country. This is a very plain proposition. Every one knows this. All courts have so decided, and the provisions of this bill can only be operative by the consent and through legislation of the States in aid of it.

But how narrow is the ground of distinction when you say that if that cow is about to be transported, is in the act of transportation in interstate commerce, that diseased animal may be seized and condemned and quarantined. Why? Because it will affect the general commerce of the country disastrously. Suppose the contagion is such that the diseased animal existing anywhere may affect the commerce of the country disastrously, even though it be local property, subject to a local jurisdiction and not intended for nor engaged in any other purpose or use, I venture to say that the authority of the States, complete and absolute as it is, will not be seriously menaced by assuming that it will not interpose an objection to taking possession of that animal and quarantining it, but that it will aid by its consent this beneficial act. I assume that it will not destroy their autonomy by the exercise of such a power with the consent and by the aid of the State. Certainly, in my judgment, if the point were contested, it would be so decided. The United States can not enter on any premises in a State nor take possession of a cow or any property belonging to any one, but there is no doubt that the States who have this authority would so legislate that the provisions of this bill could have effect.

There is scarcely a State in this Union, and was not before the war, in which it was not provided by law that the Federal Government might enter the State and condemn by judicial process in the courts the land of the State to be applied to the purpose of Federal power for forts, arsenals, and other purposes. I know there is such a statute in the State of Florida, and was before the war, that whenever the land of the State was needed for the purposes of the Federal Constitution it might be condemned through judicial process and the title vested in the Government of the United States. Why then might not adequate proceedings be assumed to be consented to by the States in reference to the condemnation of a sick cow? Without assuming that because the public interest demands that this sick animal shall be seized and disposed of by the national authority because the immediate and simultaneous seizure of the diseased animals in all parts of the country is necessary to the extirpation of the disease, that therefore the legislation of Congress may with the same justification be directed to the control of the public health in the different States; or the control of wages, because the wages may be expended on such things as may enter into commerce between the States, and thus supersede the power of the States over their own people in their domestic relations. The cases are not parallel, and the conclusion is not justified by the premises.

Mr. President, I think these fears are groundless. The people of the United States in my judgment appreciate the necessity and the advantage of the autonomy of the States and are opposed in all parts of the country to any violent invasion of them, but their practical good sense equally teaches them that such provisions as are contained in this bill are not intended to and can not have the effect to subvert the authority of the States, but would be used with their consent and in aid of the States and in support of their State power upon a beneficial construction of the powers of the States over their own people and of the Federal Government in relation to the interstate commerce, and is not intended to be and will not be a destruction of State authority. I do not therefore share in the apprehensions that are expressed as to the dangers that will result from the passage of this bill. So far as its provisions exceed the national power they are void, but the State can easily enact laws that when the Federal officer shall report danger from the appearance of the disease in any locality the suspected animal may be condemned under State laws and by State proceedings and turned over to the national authority.

So, in my judgment, if it is desirable that the sick cow in the interior of Connecticut or of Florida or of any other State capable and being liable to communicate contagion throughout the country should be purchased by the Federal Government or quarantined, with the consent of the States, and that a law to that effect will have a beneficial effect, I do not believe that it will either destroy the autonomy of the States or outrage the public opinion of the people of the several States, or that it will encourage a centralization of power beyond that which is healthful and in strict conformity with the rights and duties of the State governments.

The argument of the constitutionality of this question touching the arrest of a sick animal in the interior of any of the States not actually being transported in the interstate commerce of the country, but which may be so engaged, is not, in my judgment, a very serious constitutional question. Still I think it would be perhaps not unwise in deference to a general opinion in the country that some such provision as the amendment of the Senator from Missouri should be adopted. This subject should be under the control and supervision of the Federal Government, for as a general rule it will be perhaps more efficaciously administered from a common head when the disease is a contagion, which is to be suppressed in all parts of the country, and when the local administration of it will not be able to comprehend all parts of the country and the times when that purchase and that extirpation is to be made. Upon these grounds it would be wiser that there should be some central and general administration of this fund and of the performance of this duty.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will permit me, he likened the case before the Senate to that of the purchase of land within a State by the General Government for the erection of forts, arsenals, and dock-yards. In that case the Constitution in terms declares that the land must be so purchased by consent of the State Legislature, and that the Government shall have exclusive jurisdiction over such dock-yards, &c. So the principle applied here makes the amendment of the Senator from Missouri exactly applicable in accordance with the principle laid down in that clause of the Constitution.

Mr. CALL. There is no doubt of that. I said that before the war even all the States had by general laws made a provision for the Federal Government entering into a State and condemning, by judicial process without the act of the State Legislature, property to be used for this purpose.

Mr. MAXEY. This bill makes no such provision for the consent of the States.

Mr. CALL. I understand that, but I say it may in like manner be assumed that the States will in like manner legislate as to the purchase and condemnation of animals in the interior of the State, and will doubtless provide the proper process for it; therefore I think it is no serious menace, is not intended to be and can not be a serious menace, to State authority, or a violation of the principles of local self-government as contrasted with the general authority of the Government. Nor is it a precedent which can ever justify an assumption by the Federal Government of the powers of the States. Certain it is that if the facts be as stated, of which I am not a judge, and there is a contagious disease which is being communicated to the cattle of the several States, and is exterminating the cattle industry to a very large extent, and it is possible by any means to extirpate that disease, it will be wise to do it. I apprehend that the policy of this purchase and condemnation, allowing perhaps an appeal to some other authority for a larger compensation than it may be proposed to be paid to the owner, is a wise public policy. Still, in the present state of opinion, I think it would be not unwise to adopt some such amendment to the bill as is proposed by the Senator from Missouri, that the subject might be submitted to the action of State authority in order that there might be full and ample consent, and all removal of these constitutional objections might be made by consent of the State authority.

But I am not one of those who construe the powers of the Constitution to be so limited that they can not be beneficially exercised to carry out the purposes for which they are granted, and if it be a power in the regulation of interstate commerce to regulate the rates of transportation, to regulate the manner and method of transportation, if it be a power in regard to epidemic disease to expend the public money to quarantine persons who may carry disease, to stop their transit between States, I can see no very great stretch of power in saying that here is a diseased man or a diseased animal in a particular locality and liable to communicate contagion to the commerce of the country; and therefore the same power should be exercised as the power that regulates interstate commerce to prevent that consequence from occurring; provided that it is done with the consent of the States, but inasmuch as it would be very clearly outside of the authority of the Federal Government to step into the jurisdiction and power of the States in respect of that diseased man or that diseased animal, not being in the act of transportation or engaged in the act of commerce, I think it would be wise to adopt some such amendment as that of the Senator from Missouri, not because there is any doubt that the States would legislate as soon as this bill shall be passed in aid of its provisions—whether this provision requiring their consent should be in the bill or not—but because we avoid the criticisms made upon it and conform to the constitutional requirements and expressly subject the provisions of the bill to the constitutional rights of the States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. MILLER. I think the Senator from Missouri proposes to change that amendment somewhat. Let the amendment be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to section 3:

That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State, whenever the plans and methods shall be accepted by any State in which pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, or such State shall have adopted plans and methods for the suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the commission and approved by the President of the United States, and whenever the governor of a State, being thereto authorized by law, or other properly constituted authorities signify their assent to the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized to expend in said State so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigations and such disinfection and quarantine measures, including the slaughter of animals, as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease in said State, or from said State into any other State or Territory.

Mr. MILLER. The clause that I think the Senator from Missouri will take out of his amendment is that which refers to the States preparing rules and regulations and submitting them to the commission. I ask the Secretary to read that clause of the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Or such State shall have adopted plans and methods for the suppression and extirpation of said diseases, and such plans and methods shall be accepted by the commission and approved by the President of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. I ask the Senator from Missouri if he will consent to strike out that clause in his amendment.

Mr. VEST. I care nothing about that clause. It is part of the animal-industry act.

Mr. MILLER. It is an accompaniment of the animal-industry act. The amendment then will simply require the assent of a State to the rules and regulations prepared by the commission, and not vice versa, as first proposed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be modified accordingly. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified.

Mr. MILLER. I ask for the yeas and nays. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It destroys the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered and taken.

Mr. DOLPH. On this question I am paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL]. If he were present, he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—26.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Berry, | George, | Jones of Arkansas, | Vance, |

So the amendment was rejected.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 23d instant, approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 1071) for the relief of Frances W. Dyer;

An act (S. 1154) to authorize the city of Newport, R. I., to use the site of Fort Greene as a public park;

An act (S. 2428) to grant certain seal rocks to the city and county of San Francisco, State of California, in trust for the people of the United States;

An act (S. 3044) to provide for the execution of the provisions of article 2 of the treaty concluded between the United States of America and the Emperor of China on the 17th day of November, 1880, and proclaimed by the President of the United States on the 5th day of October, 1881; and Joint resolution (S. R. 40) providing for the payment of per diem laborers in Government employ on "Memorial" or "Decoration Day" and the 4th day of July of each year as on other days.

The message also announced that the President had, on the 24th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 305) for the erection of a public building at Huntsville, Ala.;

An act (S. 93) authorizing the construction of a public building for a post-office in the city of Houston, Tex.;

An act (S. 712) for the erection of a public building at Augusta, Ga.;

An act (S. 1592) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Denver, Colo.;

An act (S. 2533) for the relief of E. Remington & Sons;

An act (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885; and

An act (S. 542) for the relief of William Ervin.

MRS. ALMIRA AMBLER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler, which was, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "twenty-five" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mrs. Almira Ambler, a volunteer nurse in the late war, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay her the sum of $12 per month from and after the passage of this act.

Mr. PLATT. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference with the House of Representatives thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. SAWYER, Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, and Mr. PLATT were appointed.

CONSIDERATION OF PENSION BILLS.

Mr. SAWYER. I wish to say, as I did not get an opportunity this morning to call up private pension bills on the Calendar, that I will make an effort to do so to-morrow morning.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT LYNN—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 1162, entitled "An act for the erection of a post-office building at Lynn, Mass."

The title of this bill sufficiently indicates its purpose.

Congressional action in its favor appears to be based, as usual in such cases, upon representations concerning the population of the town in which it is proposed to erect the building and the increase in such population, the number of railroad trains arriving and departing daily, and various other items calculated to demonstrate the importance of the city selected for Federal decoration. These statements are supplemented by a report from the postmaster, setting forth that his postal receipts are increasing, giving the number of square feet now occupied by his office, the amount of rent paid, and the number of his employés.

This bill, unlike others of its class which seek to provide a place for a number of Federal officers, simply authorizes the construction of a building for the accommodation of the post-office alone.

The report of the postmaster differs also in this case from those which are usually furnished, inasmuch as it is therein distinctly stated that the space now furnished for his office is sufficient for its present operations. He adds, however, that from present indications there will be a large increase in the business of the office during the next ten years.

It is quite apparent that there is no necessity for the expenditure of $100,000, the amount limited in this bill, or any other sum, for the construction of the proposed building to meet the wants of the Government; and for this reason I am constrained to disapprove the proposed legislation.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 25, 1887.

Mr. DAWES. I regret exceedingly that the President has mistaken the purpose of that bill to be one of "Federal decoration" rather than one for the purpose of the economical accommodation of the public service. I move the reference of the message to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in order that a suitable report may be made to present it in the right light and to be acted upon, as it can be, by the two branches.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the message will be printed and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HOAR. If my colleague will withhold that motion for a moment I desire to examine the message. Let it lie on the table a short time. I desire to make some examination of the record.

Mr. DAWES. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to refer is withdrawn, and the message will lie on the table.

BRANCH HOME FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. SEWELL submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, with an amendment as follows: Amend by striking out the name of "James A. Waymire" and insert in lieu thereof the name of "William Blanding;" and the Senate agree to the same.

W. J. SEWELL,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
WADE HAMPTON,

EDW. S. BRAGG,
C. M. ANDERSON,
JAS. S. NEGLEY,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

CATTLE DISEASES.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Vermont will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President, and in his discretion, through the Commissioner of Agriculture, to aid the proper authorities of the several States in preventing the spread of the disease commonly known as pleuro-pneumonia among cattle. This appropriation shall expire at the end of two years from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, this subject is one of the most interesting of the business questions that can exist among the people of the United States. It appeals to every farmer and stock-raiser, whether he be on the hillsides of New England, with his dozen cattle, or whether he be on a Texan ranche with a hundred thousand, and it appeals to all alike, not only for assistance to extirpate a dangerous and contagious disease, but also appeals to them in respect of invading their farms and homes by a positive and police regulation of the United States, just such as each one of the States might make as to what shall be done on their little New England farms or Texas farms or ranches with their property—not property that is in transitu from State to State or to foreign countries, and not property that is about to be transported, whatever that might amount to, if it were that case; but it is an absolute police surveillance and control of the cattle of every citizen of the United States who owns any animal of that kind, be it much or little.

Where do we get that power? The purpose, the intent, the desire, the sentiment, the judgment is of course, on the part of all of us, in favor of doing everything that we can to make the cattle of the United States healthful, as it ought to be; to do everything that we can to make every citizen of the United States healthful, and to make him moral as well. That is the object and desire of all men and all governments. But the question is how far we have a right to go under the Constitution of the United States to do it.

This bill, as has been stated by the Senator from Missouri, the Senator from Connecticut, and others, proceeds upon the ground, and solely upon the ground—and there is no other that it can proceed upon—that this is a regulation of commerce, and therefore that the Congress of the United States has the power to do this thing with a view of preserving the people of one State from the contagion that may come from another. If that be true, it extends to every operation in every State among men.

It has been long settled under the Constitution of the United States that the power to regulate commerce applies to persons as well as to things, and therefore, inasmuch as every object of property, every animal that is reared upon any farm on the surface of the United States, every product of a mine that comes out of the bowels of the earth, every condition of every man, woman, and child in the United States, in respect of health, or morals, or pauperism, or whatever, is also within the surveillance and control of the Congress of the United States, because every one of these products and animals and things raised upon farms, cattle, horses, swine, sheep, and grain, and every other species of farm products, is within the operation of the regulations of commerce, and so is every man, woman, and child, because all of them are capable of going from one State to another either of their own free will or being carried, and are therefore, when they are put into a state of movement from one State to another, within the regulative power of Congress as to how or why they shall go, as a matter of regulation.

So the principle on which this bill stands, although it names cattle, is equally applicable to horses, to sheep, to swine, to poultry, to everything that has life, to wheat, to potatoes, to grapes and the product of the vine, to everything that is grown on the surface of the earth, to every ton of coal or iron that is mined, and to every man, woman, and child who exists within the domain of the United States.

Suppose we struck out of the bill the words "cattle" and "pleuropneumonia," and inserted "persons," and said small-pox, or the plague, or cholera, or whatever disease it might be, and then let the rest of the bill stand as it does, what would you think of it? That it should be within the power of the President of the United States and his Cabinet—I will take the very highest possible conservative authority—if they had reason to fear that small-pox existed in the State of Vermont and was likely to spread somewhere, to quarantine every house in the State of Vermont in their discretion, and to say to me and my wife and children, "You shall not leave the walls of this house, or the fence that surrounds the grounds that belong to it, not that you are intending to leave at that moment and are about to leave" (concerning which I say nothing, although I should doubt that extremely), but "because you may leave, you may go into the State of New Hampshire on the one side, or the State of New York on the other, or the State of Massachusetts on still another, the power of the General Government is to exert itself over you and take you into its possession." Of course you would not provide, for it would be inhuman, that we should all be killed because we have the small-pox and it might spread, but the quarantine part of it would be perfectly right on the theory of this bill, and humane in that sense.

Can it be said that the Constitution of the United States gives to the Congress of the United States the power to enter into every one—because if it be one it is all—into every one of the domestic relations, both of business and of health and comfort and arrangement among the people of the several States, because it may happen that they may traverse the boundary of their State and go into another at some future time, and thereby produce injury to the people of that other State, or to all the people of the United States? That is the proposition which is contained in this bill, and there is no denying it.

The Constitution has pretty carefully defined our powers in this regard. It has only given Congress the power to make laws which are necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers that are delegated by the Constitution to the Congress of the United States. That is its language. It does provide the power to regulate commerce among the various States. It then provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, all standing on exactly the same ground and in the same clause. Under the Constitution, Mr. President, the ox that you have on your farm at Mansfield is just as sacred against invasion, without due process of law, as any person in your family or yourself is sacred; no more, no less. They all stand on the same ground. Then it provides, finally, that the powers not delegated to the United States by the States are reserved to the States respectively or to the people.

The Supreme Court has passed upon these various questions in regard to how far you can go under a regulation of commerce, and they held in the Missouri case against the transportation of Texas cattle that a statute of the State of Missouri which prohibited for nine months in the year the importation of any Texas cattle into that State was unconstitutional, and they said that was an interference with the movement of property from State to State which the State of Missouri had no right to regulate or prevent unless it did it upon the specific ground of disease, which they admitted the State had the right to do, just as the State would have a right under the health laws to examine a person who is supposed to have cholera, or small-pox, or any other contagious disease. But in delivering this opinion, holding that this law of Missouri could not stand the test of the Constitution, the court say:

> We admit that the deposit in Congress of the power to regulate foreign commerce and commerce among the States was not a surrender of that which may properly be denominated police power. What that power is it is difficult to define with sharp precision. It is generally said to extend to making regulations promotive of domestic order, morals, health, and safety. As was said in Thorp, vs. The Rutland and Burlington Railroad Company, 27 Vt., 149, "it extends to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons, and the protection of all property within the State. According to the maxim, sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas, which, being of universal application, it must, of course, be within the range of legislative action to define the mode and manner in which every one may so use his own as not to injure others." It was further said that by the general police power of a State, "persons and property are subjected to all kinds of restraints and burdens, in order to secure the general comfort, health, and prosperity of the State; of the perfect right of the Legislature to do which no question ever was, or upon acknowledged general principles ever can be made, so far as natural persons are concerned."

Then the court go on to say:

> It may also be admitted that the police powers of a State justifies the adoption of precautionary measures against social evils. Under it a State may legislate to prevent the spread of crime, or pauperism, or disturbance of the peace. It may exclude from its limits convicts, paupers, idiots, and lunatics, and persons likely to become a public charge, as well as persons afflicted by contagious or infectious diseases.

Therefore the Supreme Court, in holding that a given statute of a State against transportation from another State to that extent was not constitutional, it being a regulation of commerce, say that in stating this we carefully draw the line, and admit that everything which takes place within the State in regard to the condition of its people and the condition of its property belongs to the State, and does not belong to Congress, and that is clearly, as anybody would see, without taking the opinion of any court, what the law must be under the Constitution of the United States if there is to be preserved what has always been understood to be any exclusive State sovereignty over any subject whatever within its boundaries, for if the subject of the health of cattle and of men is within the power of Congress, then there is no subject in a State that is not within the power of Congress, for those things are vital and inherent in every community, of course, and present questions that arise all the time, and there is no concurrent power; nobody pretends that; it is either on one side of the line or the other.

There is no concurrent power whatever here. So, then, Congress, under the power to regulate commerce, has the right to determine the hours of labor in the mine, because the product of that mine is going to be carried to some other State, or may be at some time or other, and Congress has power to determine everything in respect of the health of the citizens of every State, because every citizen may at some time or other, as the Constitution gives him a right to do, go from his own State into some other. Congress has the power to regulate the inspection of every kind of vegetable product, if it is grown upon the farm of any citizen of any State in this country, upon the ground that that product may go into another State, and it may have a disease, or a regulation, or a condition of things that if carried into another State will be injurious to the general welfare. That is the extent to which the argument for this power must go.

Can we stand that? Do we wish to stand it? Do we not still believe, as my friend from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] said a little while ago, that the very safety and unity of this Republic, its nationality, depends upon preserving the sovereign independence of its component parts in the States in respect of the objects of their domestic welfare and ordinary conduct in regard to persons and property in them? Can anybody deny that?

Wherefore, then, because here is an evil which we wish to aid to suppress, are we to overset every distinction that has hitherto been considered to exist, and rightly considered to exist, essential to the welfare of everybody, because we have a good object in view? We might just as well say that it would be a great deal better by and by in some case of extreme emergency that the trial by jury should be abolished for a short time. We have all seen times when we have said that a man instead of being tried by a jury ought to be dealt with immediately by somebody and have an end of him, but would anybody wish to abolish the trial by jury under such a temptation? Of course not. Nobody wishes to do that.

Wherefore, then, are we urged because here is a disease among cattle in some of the States—say all of the States, if you please—wherefore are we tempted to assume a power that we do not possess, and which, in my opinion, would not stand the test of judicial investigation for a single moment, and thereby defeat the object we have in view, to help extirpate this disease by undertaking to do it in a way that we have no power to do, and leave the thing worse than it was before?

Why are we not willing, therefore, as I propose and as I think we have the clear right to do in the appropriation of money, to have the Government of the United States aid those who have the constitutional right and authority, and the sole constitutional right and authority, to attend to this thing in their respective States, to aid them for the general welfare by every means in our power to accomplish it? That is the purpose of my amendment. It is a subject that affects the general welfare of all the people of the United States and all its property interests and its foreign trade, and I feel the deepest interest in it, and because I do feel that interest, I wish to provide the means for aiding in the object that we have in view in a way that will be effectual instead of destructive to the very object we wish to accomplish. Therefore I have offered this amendment, and I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I shall not take up the time of the Senate in attempting to discuss any further or to any greater length the question of our constitutional power to pass this bill or to carry it into effect if it shall become a law. The great constitutional lawyers of this body are differing among themselves. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] believes that this bill, if it shall be amended so as to require the assent of a State, can then be carried out in all its details. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] believes that it is entirely unconstitutional in all its provisions, and that no power under the Constitution can be given to it by the assent of any individual State that its operations may go on in that State.

So we have had the views of the constitutional lawyers of this body upon this question, differing the one with the other. But it so happens that under our Constitution when a law shall have been passed, no matter what may be the individual opinion of the legislators who pass upon it, the final decision as to whether it is constitutional or not is left to the Supreme Court of the United States. So long as we divide here upon this question, I know of no other way by which it can be settled, if the bill shall pass, save by its going to that final tribunal.

Each generation thus far since the organization of this Government seems to have interpreted the Constitution for itself. Fifty years ago many of the statesmen who sat in this Capitol did not believe that there was any constitutional power in the Federal Government to carry on internal improvements, but I know of no man now holding any position in any legislative body who for a moment believes in that doctrine in regard to the Constitution. All portions of the country alike come here to-day seeking appropriations for internal improvements, and a constitutional objection is never raised.

It was held until a few years ago that there was no power under the Constitution to issue paper money, but the war came and it issued it, and the highest tribunal has decided that that was constitutional, and that the Government could do it not only as a war power, but that it can continue to do it in times of peace.

What the Constitution may mean upon this question next year or five years or ten years from now, I do not know; but I have no doubt that if this Congress shall fail to act on this question, and if this disease shall assume anything like the proportions that it has assumed in Europe or in Australia, one and all of the statesmen who shall have the controlling of our resources will hold that under the general-welfare clause and under the power of controlling internal and foreign commerce and will probably do exactly what we are seeking to do under this bill. Undoubtedly if that time shall come the Supreme Court, if it shall be called upon to pass judgment on such a measure as this, will find just as good reasons for maintaining the constitutionality of the law as it has in maintaining the constitutionality of the greenback law.

In short, I believe, Mr. President, under the general-welfare clause and under the other powers of the Constitution the people of this country will, in the future as in the past, be able to protect themselves and their property. It was held only twenty-five years ago that there was no power in the Constitution by which the Federal Government could coerce a sovereign State. It took four years to settle that question, and to settle it in the Constitution, and there is no longer any doubt about the power of the Federal Government to coerce a sovereign State.

But I said I should not go into the constitutional question, and I desire now to call the attention of the Senate to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. Let us see what it is. I confess that I am surprised that the Senator from Vermont has made any such suggestion as this. We all know with how much care he guards the paying out of public money from the Treasury. No measure can come in here and pass the ordeal of this body without the Senator from Vermont putting his finger upon it and seeing to it that it is carefully guarded in all its provisions, particularly when it takes money out of the Treasury. But what is it proposed to do by this amendment? Simply—

That the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President and in his discretion, through the Commissioner of Agriculture, to aid the proper authorities of the several States in preventing the spread of the disease commonly known as pleuro-pneumonia among cattle.

What excuse for such crude and inefficient legislation as that? No excuse can be found for it unless it be found in the fact that a terrible disease is now prevailing in this country among its cattle, and that if it is not checked it is liable to cost us a vast sum of money. In short, the only excuse that can be given is that there is a great public necessity for it and that we have not time to stop and devise proper means and measures, and to throw around the expenditure of this money proper checks and controls. There certainly can be none other.

That is the reason given for the passage of the bill which the committee has brought in here which provides distinctly in all its particulars for how the money shall be expended, for all proper checks in paying it out and in determining the damages and cost and expense of exterminating this disease. This million of dollars, if appropriated under this amendment, might much better be put into the Potomac River than appropriated to be used in this way. Some of the States have no means or method, have no laws and no officers charged with this duty. How is the money to be distributed? At the discretion of the President of the United States? Are we to have the thirty-eight States and Territories coming to the President all asking for this money? Shall the State of New York, because of its immense population and its great interests, demand half of this appropriation, for the disease exists there, and has for many years, and it is from these eastern States that it has been carried to the western States? How is the President to divide the money, and what control or check shall be over it when it shall have been divided?

Sir, this amendment, if adopted, will be simply inoperative. If it be simply a question of dollars and cents, if that is all that is needed in this matter, then we need nothing at all.

The State of New York is rich enough to pay all that it shall cost to kill all the cattle in the State of New York that have this disease, or have been exposed to it; and it would not increase its tax-list one-quarter of 1 per cent. to do it—no, probably not one-twenty-fifth part of 1 per cent. upon its tax-list to do it. The State of Illinois, which now has the disease in Chicago, could appropriate money enough to do it entirely, and all the other States wherever this disease may be found are abundantly able to pay the money required to do it if that were all.

But here is a great pestilence among the cattle. We can not have thirty-eight different commissioners acting under thirty-eight different sets of regulations with a large number of scientific men, physicians, and veterinarians holding diverse ideas in regard to this disease, in regard to its contagion, in regard to the possibility of its being transferred from one animal to another. Are we to have thirty-eight separate commissioners? Of what use for the State of New York to spend its money, or have a commission to crush out this disease unless the State of New Jersey and the State of Pennsylvania on one side, and the State of Vermont and the State of Connecticut and the State of Massachusetts on the other, shall have equally efficient methods? The State of New York up to the present time has passed no law for co-operation with the animal industry bureau, and therefore the animal industry bureau of the Department of Agriculture has been able to do nothing in the State of New York save to go around and make a little investigation where nobody objected to investigation.

This amendment is of no avail at all. We might better take the present bureau of animal industry and give it the money that it might accomplish something. It has accomplished a little in the past. If it had more money it might arrive at something, perhaps.

But what is necessary in this matter is concert of action, and that can only be had through one Federal commission who shall have power to go into all the States and Territories and there enforce like rules and regulations regarding this subject. I know the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] railed about the impossibility of a commission making a set of regulations which should apply in Texas and Connecticut and in all the other States; but I need not say to that Senator nor to the Senate that the rules and regulations for the extirpation of this disease should be uniform in every State. They should be the same in Connecticut as they are in Missouri or Illinois, and unless they are the same, unless there can be this concert of action, nothing whatever will be accomplished, and I repeat again that concert of action can only be found in one central commission, and the emergency which demands it is sufficient to warrant this Congress in passing this bill in the interest of all our people.

We have had substantially similar legislation, as I said yesterday, in regard to yellow fever; and if the pestilence of cholera had visited our shores last year as it was thought by many scientific men and physicians that it would do, if it had become epidemic and had swept over our country and had gone beyond the power of the individual States to control it, does any Senator here doubt for a moment that Congress would have been called together and would have been asked to take action on the question? Does any one doubt that it would have appropriated vast sums of money; that it would have created a strong national board of health which would have undertaken to enforce sanitary measures and measures of quarantine in all the cities and towns of this nation? The emergency would have demanded that action and it would undoubtedly have come, and it would have been no violation of the Constitution, either, in my judgment.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it is not necessary to go further into the discussion of this amendment. No one here who understands fully the dangerous nature of this disease, the possibility of its spreading all over our country, will think for a moment of consenting that we shall simply appropriate money here to be distributed among the thirty-eight States to be used as those States shall see fit, or not used at all. I am ready for a vote.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not quite ready for a vote. I am sorry that my distinguished friend from New York has not undertaken to make any remark on the subject of where he thinks the power of Congress stops and the power of the State begins in respect of these matters of the health of cattle and men, &c. He has not chosen to say a single word upon that subject, and has not chosen to defend any longer this bill as it stands on the face of it as a regulation of commerce bill professedly, but he has sought refuge in the general welfare clause of the Constitution. Now, let us see what that is. I am sure my friend from New York has read it a great many times, but like the Ten Commandments and a good many other matters, it is a good thing to read again. Let us see what it is.

The Congress shall have power—

In a separate and distinct clause—

The Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

There is your general-welfare clause. It is not in the power to regulate commerce for the general welfare, it is not in the power to make war for the general welfare, it is not in the power to do anything that it likes for the general welfare, but it is in the power to raise money, and that is all. Congress may raise money to pay the debts of the United States and to provide for its general welfare. Some people have contended that even that general welfare must be referred to the enumerated things that Congress can do, named in the other part of the Constitution. I have not thought so.

But thinking, as I do, that the power to raise and appropriate money for the general welfare of the United States is a distinct and independent power contained in this eighth section of the first article, it does not follow, but the reverse, that Congress has the power on account of having a right to raise money for any object of general welfare that it likes to absorb to itself every police power of every State, because this particular police power that is proposed to be exerted in this bill is not different in kind or degree or principle from any other single power of any kind that any State now exercises. You may take pauperism, you may take crime, you may take the sale of intoxicating drinks, you may take other things that come under the head of social evils, all of which affect people outside of the State where the thing is done or not done, where it is allowed or prohibited either for good or for ill. If therefore Congress has the power in order to promote the general welfare of the United States to say my cattle in my stable shall be taken possession of by an officer of the United States on a suspicion that he has or on proof that is made in a court of justice—I will put it in its extremest form—that those cattle are diseased and ought not to go abroad, he has the same right to shut me up in my house and say that my conduct in some respect or other, if I am allowed to go at large, will be injurious to the general welfare. How amazing such a proposition!

But my distinguished friend says that the trouble about the substance of this amendment is that the money is liable to be frittered away in being distributed among States. The amendment does not provide for any distribution among States. It enables the Treasury of the United States—everybody being interested in this question and this subject—to contribute something to everybody else in every State where this disease exists, for the interests of all. The people of Vermont for their interest are taxed to pay for cattle that are destroyed in Missouri under proper authority of law which the State has a right to make. That is all. Therefore, it appropriates money just as we have done a thousand times, to be expended in the discretion of the President of the United States—not distributed, but expended—to aid the proper authorities where the evil is to crush it out, be it $100,000 in New York and $50 in Vermont. That a matter of administration.

The Senator asks what is to become of the safeguards of the Treasury, the accounting. The law provides for all that now. It has to be expended in aid of the lawful authority of the State acting under its law, doing what its sovereign power has conferred upon its executive authorities the right to do; and thus your vouchers come in. That is a mere criticism that in my opinion is entirely unworthy of my friend from New York and unjust to me. The laws of the United States provide for all the method of accounting already.

Then my friend says if we could aid the bureau of animal industry by an appropriation, that might do some good; but he has forgotten that the bureau of animal industry is a sub-bureau under the Commissioner of Agriculture now, and therefore when we put this money under the control of the President of the United States to be expended through the Commissioner of Agriculture, you have got under him this very bureau to do it, and for the general welfare of the people of the United States to pay $100,000 in one State where a large herd has to be exterminated and $5,000 in another, because it does good to us all.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Vermont, if I understand him correctly, holds that this bill is unconstitutional because the Federal Government can not go into a State and kill infected animals or those that have been exposed, or establish a quarantine there. Now, I want to know how the President of the United States is to expend this money. He says it is not to be distributed to the States, not given to the officers of the States, but is to be expended. For instance, we will suppose there is a herd diseased in the State of New York. The President is called upon for aid. What is he to do through the Federal officials? Is he to quarantine this herd? The Senator says the Federal Government can not do that. Is he to slaughter this herd and pay for it?

The Senator says the Federal Government can not do it under the Constitution. What, then, is he to do with this money? The State of New York, going on through its authorities, may quarantine this herd or it may kill it. The President can do nothing then but contribute to that expense by paying over a portion of the money to the authorities of the State of New York to help the State of New York to pay for the work that it has done itself. If I understand him correctly, there is no possibility of the President expending this money; he can simply pay it over as a contribution to the State itself. I might inquire—although I do not care to prolong the discussion of the constitutional question—where in the Constitution does the Senator find a power in the Federal Constitution to furnish aid to the States for a purpose like this?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will answer that question, which was suggested by my friend from Massachusetts. We get the power under the clause that I have read to provide for raising taxes to pay the debts of the United States and to provide for its general welfare, just as we have aided the States in a thousand respects for a hundred years in objects that we thought it would be advantageous to the whole people of the Union to aid them in. That is where I get the power.

Mr. BLAIR. I should like to ask the Senator a question. I ask him whether the power of the United States to promote the general welfare depends upon the consent of the State wherein that promotion is to take place?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, it does not depend upon the consent of the State so far as the grant goes, but when you appropriate money to pay a debt of the United States you can not make the creditor take it if he does not want to.

Mr. BLAIR. But that is hardly an answer to the question.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say that all this discussion is practically useless, because if this bill shall not be passed very promptly, and, in fact, I believe if passed now, it can by no possibility become a law. It ought to be taken into account now whether we can afford to extend this discussion indefinitely to the postponement of measures that can become laws, and must necessarily become laws if we would avoid an extra session. This bill has already gone beyond the time originally agreed upon. I speak this without reference to the Senator from Mississippi, but having, myself, something to say on this matter which I have withheld, hoping we might get a vote, I feel now that the opportunity is thrown away of getting legislation on this most important subject.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall occupy less time than the Senator from Kansas has done.

I am a member of the committee that reported the bill, and I desire simply to say that I did not concur in the report of this bill. I dissented from it on two grounds. I did expect at one time to present some views on the constitutional question, but they have been presented with so much force and so much clearness and with so much correctness by the Senator from Vermont that I shall not detain the Senate by repeating what he has said.

I desire simply to say that I regard this bill as the most flagrant violation of the Constitution I have ever known in the American Senate. The title of the bill is "to extirpate pleuro-pneumonia." It ought to be entitled "A bill to extirpate the Constitution of the United States."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. MILLER. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has been compelled to withdraw from the Chamber, and I agreed to pair with him. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. My colleague [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and they are both absent on a conference committee.

Mr. PLUMB (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and I therefore withdraw my vote. If the Senator from Alabama were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (after having voted in the negative). I voted under a misapprehension. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE]. I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 27; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I offer the following amendment, to be added to the amendment just voted on:

And swine plague, hog cholera, or other contagious diseases among swine.

The matter of the amendment which I suggest is to the American people far more important, I think, than the original text or the disease named in the original bill. If the object is to protect matters of commerce we find that the exportation of meat from swine and live swine is larger than the amount exported of cattle, and as to the extent of territory which the disease covers, it is far greater than is covered by what is called pleuro-pneumonia. I think my friend from Illinois will admit that in the State of Illinois—and he has alluded to Chicago—the hog cholera, the swine plague, is far more prevalent and does far greater injury to the citizens of Illinois than pleuro-pneumonia. On a line west of Chicago, and northwest of Chicago, and southwest, there is scarcely any pleuro-pneumonia, while the losses from the swine plague amount to millions each year. I have been waiting and hoping that the Senator in charge of this bill would have made a suggestion to protect that industry. So it is in the State of my friend from Iowa. They suffer millions in Iowa from losses by hog cholera, by whatever name it is called, when there is scarcely any pleuro-pneumonia in his State; and I venture to say, as I have said before, to the gentleman in charge of this bill or to the Senator from Vermont, that west of Chicago there is but little pleuro-pneumonia.

Some Senators here have talked about the cattle on the plains. If cattle on the plains in my own State or anywhere west of Chicago were suffering it would receive no attention in this body.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. As a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, the Senator from Nebraska ought to know that the bill reported from the committee covered precisely the cases that he is talking about. I read from the bill:

And for the purpose of removing the obstructions to such commerce with foreign nations and among the States now occasioned by the existence of contagious infectious, or communicable diseases among cattle and other live-stock, and especially contagious pleuro-pneumonia.

That would have included all the diseases the Senator is talking about with all live-stock if the bill had passed as reported, but the Senator from Vermont has succeeded in substituting another proposition for it which leaves neither pleuro-pneumonia in it nor hog cholera nor any other disease, and in which shape it will do no possible benefit to the American people.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It is remarkable that this bill should have been discussed three or four days and we were admonished of the necessity of this matter by reason of pleuro-pneumonia in cattle and that was the only thing, and that now my friend should say that the hog cholera, which is more destructive than pleuro-pneumonia, was hid away under the general language he has read.

Mr. MILLER. I have not said it was hid away. It is not hid away at all. It is as plain as daylight, and the Senator as a member of the committee must have known it was so, for he took part in reporting this bill.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I never discovered in the committee or out of it that it covered what my amendment alludes to.

Mr. MILLER. It is discovered now after the bill is beaten.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No, I did not discover it now. The Senator should have made it more prominent and he might have saved the bill. The purpose of the bill was to eradicate the cattle disease in Chicago rather than west of there, and the bill was drawn up not to protect the cattle-growers on the plains of the West; that was not intended, for there is no pleuro-pneumonia there. There is none on the plains of the West, and I was surprised at the phraseology of my friend, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], when he said the pleuro-pneumonia broke out in Chicago. I think that was his language. Am I right? The Senator says I am. The pleuro-pneumonia broke out in Chicago.

Mr. CULLOM. I state that pleuro-pneumonia existed not only in Chicago, but in New York and in Maryland and in quite a number of other States of the Union.

Mr. VAN WYCK. That is what I say, but the bill was to relieve Chicago. The cattle feeding on the plains of the West were sought to be made to carry the bill. I am not saying anything against the bill, but I object to that reason being thrown out to you, pretending that you are benefiting the cattle on the plains of the West when you have not found an instance of pleuro-pneumonia there.

My friend says it is in Chicago. Certainly it is; that is what the bill is for. It is to aid to a great extent the breeders of fancy cattle. They are to be paid $160 per animal. That is the class of men who are to be protected, not the plain growers.

My friend says the disease broke out in Chicago. It broke out in Brooklyn, too, I say to my friend from New York, where they feed them in distilleries; and it has broken out in Jersey City, where they feed them in distilleries; and it has broken out in Chicago, where they feed them in the distilleries. You want a little better sanitary regulation about your distilleries, and then you will have less of pleuro-pneumonia. The cattle do not have the disease where they breathe the free air of the West.

That was the feature of the bill that was urged on us. My friend from Missouri knew that there was no pleuro-pneumonia down in Missouri. My friend from Missouri was right. He knew there was no pleuro-pneumonia in Missouri. The cattle can breathe good air out in Missouri, and I think the animal industry bureau, which was a very important bureau, and did, as is said, some good work, says so; and therefore we take it for granted, because it must be so. Let me read from its report:

The danger from pleuro-pneumonia west of the Alleghany Mountains has been greatly reduced since the first annual report of this bureau was presented. Ohio, Illinois, and Missouri are now free from this plague. Much progress has been made in freeing Kentucky from it.

I think they report but one instance in Missouri, and that is this:

While investigating the dissemination of the contagion from the infected herds in Illinois, I learned from the Messrs. Tripp that a young bull had been sent from their herd at Peoria to a lunatic asylum in Missouri.

[Laughter.]

This bureau of animal industry sent this bull away because he did not like his associates. It seems from the report that they chased him, and when they found him he was perfectly well. So of course the Senators from Missouri know from the reports of the lunatic asylum that there is no pleuro-pneumonia in their country. There is none in Chicago except at the distilleries. The men who have the cattle-pens or the distillery-pens in Chicago of course are very anxious. They undoubtedly want this legislation because they want to keep up the cattle trade, which is of course important to that class of gentlemen.

I want this bill, if it is passed, to stand on its own merits. It is a very large thing when you get a tariff to call it protecting American labor. Now, when they want to get this bill to stamp out pleuro-pneumonia for the protection of men who have fancy breeds in the East or who feed their cattle in distilleries, the object is to furnish a market for persons who have diseased cattle. I want the basis of it understood.

Now, in the bill of the committee, or in the bill of the Senator from Vermont I desire this clause to be introduced, because if you propose to benefit men west of Chicago, I want something done which will secure that. That country in the Northwest which produces what my friend from New York said was the means of saving this country when it was in financial distress and producing the balance of exchange in our favor. That result was caused by the meat product and the grain product. Now, if you desire to benefit the West and the Northwest and the Southwest, and not Chicago alone, then do something to stamp out the plague which infects swine, because in 1884 and 1885, while we find the production of cattle, live and dead, was $35,000,000, the hog production was $65,000,000, nearly double; and in 1886, while the production of cattle, neat and alive, was $29,000,000, that from hogs was $58,000,000, double. So the meat production from swine doubles the meat production of cattle.

So there can be no reason why that matter should not be examined into. It has been examined into by the Agricultural Department. It has been examined into by the bureau of animal industry, and there is no reason why it should not be made particularly prominent in this bill and not be covered up by live-stock.

I ask that the amendment shall be placed either in the substitute of the Senator from Vermont or in the bill reported by the Senator from New York.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, this is a most remarkable speech made by a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, one of the active members of that committee who gets up here and tells this body that there is nothing in this bill to protect the hog industry of the country. This bill in half a dozen places and more mentions that it is for the purpose of suppressing all contagious diseases known to cattle or live-stock of all kinds. The bill was reported from the committee, and the Senator from Nebraska voted in favor of reporting it, and if he did not know that these clauses were in it for the protection of the hog industry and all other animal industries, why did he not move an amendment to it during the last two days when it has been under discussion?

If the introduction of hog cholera into the bill would have saved it, for the benefit of the country, why in the name of the people whom he represents did he not introduce an amendment to put hog cholera into it? He waits until the bill is defeated by the adoption of an amendment that absolutely destroys the bill, and then he gets up here and berates the East and the chairman of the committee because there is nothing in the bill about hog cholera, when it is all full of hog cholera and has been from the beginning.

He tells us that this bill has been sought because it benefited nobody west of Chicago. Who does he think brought this bill here? Who does he think has been before the committee advocating this bill? From what portion of the country have the petitions come for this bill? This bill originated west of Chicago, and all the gentlemen who have appeared before the committee live west of Chicago. I believe every legislative body that has indorsed this bill—a large number of States have done it—is west of Chicago, save the States of Massachusetts and Maine. I have not heard a word nor received a petition, nor a line, nor a syllable from any man in favor of this bill living east of Chicago. All the cattle-growers' associations on our great plains have met this winter, gone to great expense to call their associations together, associations in the State of the Senator himself and in all the Territories, and they have flooded the committee and the Senate with petitions for the passage of this bill. Then a Senator, a member of this committee, gets up here and states that for which there is no foundation whatever, that this bill has been sought by the people of the East and by the growers of fine cattle.

Mr. President, I can not find words which are appropriate to be spoken in this body under its parliamentary rules to express my utter contempt for such a speech as the Senator has made upon this question. I know that more than ninety-nine out of every one hundred people living west of Chicago desire this bill, and desire it as it came from the committee. True, it has been murdered here; murdered by Eastern men, not by men living west of Chicago, and let the burden rest with them, Mr. President. If the great plains of the West and of Kansas and Nebraska are devastated by this plague, they will not have it to charge upon the Committee on Agriculture. Whilst the people of the East have not been petitioning for this measure, they have, one and all, been willing that it should pass, knowing and believing that its great benefits were to come to all our people, and were to come largely to the great cattle industry of the West, and not of the East.

Now, if the Senator from Nebraska thinks he can make anything out of the proposition which has been adopted by the Senate by putting hog cholera into it, in Heaven's name let him put hog cholera into it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is very evident that a majority of the Senate propose to act with hostile intent towards this bill. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont was a hostile amendment, and so understood, and it will hardly deceive the people of the United States. Although it contains in it a provision for the appropriation of a million dollars, the cattle-raisers and the farmers who are interested in this subject—and there has been no subject involving so much money presented to this Congress during its lifetime as is presented in this question—the farmers, I say, will not be deceived. They will not suppose the Senator from Vermont, or anybody who voted with him, intended to aid them in protecting their vast herds, or their little herds, as the case may be, from this disease.

Under the pretense—if that is an improper word to use in this body I will withdraw it—under the claim that there was a constitutional difficulty in the administration of this bill, we are met here with a hostile amendment that absolutely, as it was intended it should, nullifies and destroys the bill, and I want the Senators from the New England States and the Senators from other portions of the country to take that responsibility; but I do not want them or anybody else to pretend to me or to the people of the West that this is in their interest.

A million dollars is proposed to be appropriated, and if you had $50,000,000 it would be absolutely worthless. Every Senator who voted for it knew that there was no power in the present organization of the animal industry bureau to kill these cattle. Everybody knew that that million dollars could only be used for the purpose of paying the agents of the department to stalk through the country to give their advice to the farmers who know more about this disease and more about its eradication than all the agents of that department do now or will at the end of the two years provided for in the bill. It is a bill in its present shape, if anything, to make a few more employés of the Government, and without any earthly object or purpose toward benefiting the industry that it is pretended to be in the interest of.

There is not a power under the law as it now exists to kill a single animal, and nobody pretends that that will be done. The bill that was before the Senate was sheared of its objectionable feature, if it was objectionable, because it requires the assent of every property-holder before his stock can be killed. Nobody can pretend here at this time, and not hold himself up to ridicule to the people of the West, that that is an infringement of a constitutional right when the owner of the property submits and consents to the killing of it, and to the taking of the sum of money provided for in the bill.

We have spent two days here in the expiring hours of this Congress listening to constitutional arguments as to the right of the Government to intrude upon a farmer's farm and take his cattle and kill it with a provision explicit, unquestioned in the bill that no head of stock could be killed except with the consent and approval of the owner. I suppose it is believed by some members of this body that they will be enabled to go to the country and tell the cattle owners, who have an industry honorable and great, that they are their friends. Every man who lives in this country has an interest in its prosperity. Its success means cheap meat to the people; it means comfort; it means health; it means prosperity. But that industry is to be stricken down, not because Senators believed there was a constitutional objection, but because they were afraid to make this appropriation. It is understood by everybody who reads that that appropriation will never be expended and can not be expended under existing law unless it is absolutely thrown away.

The Senator from Nebraska speaks about this being in the interest of people west of Chicago. Why, Mr. President, the Legislatures of all the Western States, the chambers of commerce, the boards of trade, the cattle-growers' associations, and all without reference to their business or their interests, have urged the legislation proposed by the committee. The great herds of Texas, of Colorado, of the Indian Territory, of New Mexico, of Arizona, of Nevada, of Montana, of Dakota, are at the mercy of this disease, and these States and these Territories are absolutely powerless under any law that we may pass to protect these herds. Millions and millions of property are at the mercy of any man who, incited by his cupidity and his avarice, shall ship his diseased stock to that western country as they have attempted to do and as in some instances they have done.

The Senator from Nebraska tells us that there is no pleuro-pneumonia in Missouri. There has been. There is in Illinois, there is in New Jersey, and there is in other regions of the country; and New Jersey and New York are sending immense numbers of their cattle to the prairies of the West. All the time car-load after car-load of high-bred cattle are going out to increase the herds of the West, to give them a better blood and a better grade.

I do not intend to waste the time of the Senate in a discussion of this question, but this is an absolute killing of the bill. It is the absolute destruction of an attempt on our part to secure legislation in the interest of the cattle-owners and in the interest of all men everywhere who eat meat, and I thank God that in this country all men do eat meat. When this disease shall have swept off these herds from the great prairies of the West, no man will eat meat in this country who is not a man of more means than he who labors by the day.

Now, Mr. President, I want the Senate to take this bill, I want them to understand it, and representing people who own cattle, representing in some sense the interest of the West, let me tell gentlemen that they will not ever deceive anybody in that country under the pretense that they have devised a better or a safer method for the appropriation and use of this money.

Mr. President, the Western people demand but little of this Government. When you vote your millions of dollars for rivers and harbors the extreme West gets nothing. We pay the duties that go to fill the coffers of the nation without remonstrance because the law says we shall. When we ask for a little we are met not by open and manly attacks but by covert means for our destruction.

I do not suppose this bill will become a law as it is now amended. I should hope that in some portion of the legislative department of the Government there was sense enough to see that to put upon the statutes such a bill as this is now would be simply absurd. I regard it as the death-knell to the measure, but I did not propose that it should go down without at least the Senate and the country understanding that we know the motive and the purpose with which this amendment was moved and with which it was sustained.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Mr. President, I agree with very much that the Senator from Colorado has said, particularly that part of his remarks in which he said that the West gets but little of the appropriations made by Congress. I agree with that, and that was the reason I interposed my amendment, that we might get some good out of this bill. That was my object and my purpose.

The Senator from New York speaks of my connection with the committee. Certainly I am a member of it. I have not antagonized the bill that came from the committee. I did not take part in its deliberations on this subject, as other duties did not allow me the opportunity. I have not antagonized the bill of the committee. I voted against the substitute of the Senator from Vermont and in favor of the bill as it came from the committee. I have been waiting two or three days to propose the amendment which I have now offered.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator does not understand that I object to his amendment—not at all.

Mr. VAN WYCK. No; I approve of very much the Senator said.

Mr. TELLER. I do not object to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. VAN WYCK. But the Senator from New York seems to do so.

Mr. MILLER. Not at all. I said get it in by all means.

Mr. VAN WYCK. He arraigned me that I had been here and had neglected to offer this amendment, when he knows very well that the Senate should consider first the committee amendments before an opportunity can be offered for any others.

Mr. MILLER. All I said was that if the original bill as it came from the committee had not been killed by the substitute the Senator's amendment was entirely unnecessary; but he started out with the proposition that the original bill had nothing to do with the protection of the country against pleuro-pneumonia, when the fact is that the original bill covers all contagious diseases known to all domestic animals.

Mr. VAN WYCK. There I differ with my friend, and I should not have discharged my duty as a Senator representing the State of Nebraska, a portion of the great Northwest, unless I had made it clear and distinct that the money appropriated by this bill was to benefit the people of the great Northwest.

Now, look at the question for a moment. The Senator arraigned me, as I stated, although he does not propose to do so now. I could not have introduced the amendment at an earlier time. I proposed to introduce it on the bill of the committee, and when the substitute was voted in then I proposed it there.

Now, I will say in all frankness and candor to my friend that this bill did not contemplate the eradication of hog cholera. In the first place let me call his attention to the title of the bill:

A bill to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot and mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle—

There it stops on that point—and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

There is the title of the bill, and when we get further along it provides for the destruction of live-stock. It provides:

That they shall not pay more than $160 for an animal with pedigree recorded or recordable in the recognized herd-books of the breed to which the animal destroyed may belong, nor more than $60 for an animal not pedigreed.

That is all there is of this bill to provide for the killing of animals. It is just as necessary to destroy herds of hogs and swine as it is cattle, but the bill does not make any provision for that.

Mr. MILLER. Why not?

Mr. VAN WYCK. Because it does not.

Mr. MILLER. Are hogs in Nebraska worth more on an average than $160 a head? That is the maximum. They can pay $5 or $2 or $1 if the owner agrees to it. It seems to me that the maximum limit is high enough for any ordinary hog of Nebraska or elsewhere. [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN WYCK. That does very well, but that does not get away from the point that this bill was not intended to reach disease among swine, although the farmers of the West suffer millions from hog cholera where they suffer thousands from the destruction of cattle by pleuro-pneumonia. This bill never intended to cover it even by its title or by the provisions it contains:

That they shall not pay more than $160 for an animal with pedigree recorded or recordable in the recognized herd-books.

I do not suppose there are any swine in herd-books. There may be in New York.

Mr. MILLER. In New York there are herd-books of swine. Some of them are very valuable and worth more than $160.

Mr. VAN WYCK. So I supposed, judging from this bill. The Senator from New York can not make the distinction between cattle and swine. They have got beyond that point in New York and really do not know the difference.

It is perfectly plain; and an attempt to make the bill obscure will not do away with the force of the suggestion. As I stated to the Senator, I waited until the proper stage of the bill came, and then I asked that the swine should be protected, because there is no man in this body, and no man out of it, who will pretend that there is protection in this bill or in this commission to that great industry.

Mr. McMILLAN. My impression is that it does protect the cattle of Minnesota, and all these other interests of that character. I understand the Senator from Nebraska was a member of the committee that reported the bill, and if his views are such in regard to the bill as he has now expressed, why did he not perfect the bill when it was in committee?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I have once explained that other duties prevented my attendance on the committee when this matter was under discussion, and therefore when the bill came here I moved it when I had the chance. I was with my friend for the bill, and voted against the substitute, intending to put in either one or the other this provision to protect the farmers of your State and the whole Northwest from the ravages of swine disease.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think the farmers of our State will be protected by the bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I beg leave to differ with my friend, because the only evidence of that fact is the word "live-stock" being used, and when this commission was baptized by this committee in this bill it was called "a board of cattle commissioners consisting of three persons." The phraseology of the bill was to strike particularly at "pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle," and the provision making compensation for damages for cattle that should be killed was on the basis of $160 if it was pedigreed in the herd-books and if not pedigreed in the herd-books not to exceed $60.

Will the Senator from Minnesota or any other Senator pretend for a moment that the provision related to swine as well as to cattle. It is idle to make such an assertion; therefore it was that I desired not to antagonize the bill but to make it better. My friend from New York does not antagonize it, he says. The Senator from Colorado does not antagonize it, but says that it should be placed in the bill. Now I desire to put it in the substitute. If the substitute is not such as these gentlemen desire, that is quite another matter; let them war on the Senator from Vermont then. I am trying to make his substitute better, and if it finally resolves itself into the bill I want to make the bill so much better by specially designating that which will benefit the whole country beyond Chicago, the whole West.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I believe this is known as the pleuro-pneumonia bill. I could not vote on the substitute or the amendment by way of substitute proposed by the Senator from Vermont because of the pair I have had with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], who, I understand, would vote for the amendment, if present.

I do not propose to discuss the bill, but merely to say a few words by way of explanation of the vote that I shall cast on the amendment as it is, or on the bill as it stands amended.

Only those States that purchase cattle to feed have very much interest in a pleuro-pneumonia bill. I represent particularly that part of the State of Virginia that buys cattle, feeds them, and ships them to other States of the Union for sale, and ships them to Liverpool. The interest that those people have is to get rid of the quarantine system that is adopted by different States under their own State laws. For instance, one State will require you to keep your cattle for ninety days, another for sixty, and the man that herds the cattle will find that the expense is such that they eat their heads off before the owner can get them from the State in which he purchased them into the State to which he proposes to bring them.

Now to take a million dollars and distribute it as it would be, about on an average of $26,000 to a State, and leave the States to regulate the quarantine system as it is, and you had as well take that million dollars and dump it into the Potomac River. It is the quarantine system that is the curse of the cattle country, and it is the quarantine itself that reduces the profit of the cattle-feeder. The live-cattle breeder loses two cents a pound when he ships cattle from this country to Europe. Live-stock can not be shipped from here to Liverpool without a clean bill of health. They will ship dead cattle at 2 cents a pound less than live ones. Granting that it may cost a cent a pound more, as it does really, to ship live-stock over the dead carcases, you will not find that there is one cent additional profit in shipping the live over the dead, and you can not do it unless the Congress of the United States shall take charge of the whole matter. This is leaving it with the States, just making an appropriation of money that does nothing to help the situation in the least.

Now, sir, I understand perfectly well that there are Senators here who object to the original bill because it seems to be violative of what are called State rights. I say, Mr. President, that unless you do this as a National Government and do it here through the National Congress you had better leave this money in the Treasury, for $26,000 given to the people of any State is a very small consideration when they come here and ask you to do that which will enable them to ship cattle from one State to another in this Union without the States having a right to quarantine them on every border, and give them a clean bill of health from any port in the United States to Liverpool for live cattle. That is what the farmer asks for; that is what he comes here and asks the Federal Congress to do; that is what the National Cattle Breeders' Association ask you to do; that is what the National Congress of Cattle Breeders ask you to do; that is what the National Congress of Cattle Dealers ask you to do in their meeting here. They ask you for bread and you give them a stone.

They ask you to allow them to transship cattle with a clean bill of health, and you offer $26,000 a State when they come and tell you through their petitions, based upon experience and the evidence of the best men in this whole country, that the amount of a cent a pound is lost on every steer that they may ship from this country to Liverpool. Twenty-six thousand dollars, forsooth, because it is violative of some Senators' views of State rights to do the thing directly!

Why, sir, it is known to Senators on this floor that there are States which require the cattle-shipper to quarantine ninety days before cattle from certain other States shall cross the boundary line. That is where we want to apply the corrective, and unless it is done there, there is no remedy against the evil that we are trying to correct.

I would ask the Senator from Vermont, I would ask any Senator on this floor, what State has requested the Senate to give it a contribution of $26,000. They have asked you to take charge of a question which the States themselves can not handle. The States can not take charge of this question; and to say that when men buy cattle in one State to be fed in another they shall not be required by the authorities of that State to feed them for ninety days before they can be crossed into another State. That is the pleuro-pneumonia bill that the farmers of this country want, and they are not asking the Senate to give them $26,000 per State.

The bill of the Senator from New York may not be perfect to the mind of every Senator here, but it is the only bill before the Senate that the farmers of this country have asked for, and it is the only one that will satisfy their demands.

First, we must know the evil that we are dealing with, and then apply the remedy. Nobody is asking for money to pay veterinary surgeons. All that we find in the bill of the Senator from Vermont. They are asking that there shall be given to them a right to pass cattle from one State to another without the imposition of a quarantine that absolutely amounts to a prohibition of the cattle trade. They are asking that they may ship their cattle abroad with a bill of health from the port of shipment to Liverpool, and instead of that you give them $26,000, when it is a demonstrable fact that it costs a cent a pound to them on every head they ship from this country abroad.

Mr. President, I make these observations in explanation of the vote which I presume I must cast, because the Senate has already adopted the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. I will give my people the $26,000, but that is no pleuro-pneumonia bill in any sense of the word. It corrects no evil complained of and answers no demand made by those who have petitioned the Senate to pass the pleuro-pneumonia bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, some Senators in voting upon the adoption of the substitute did so not understanding the vote fully, coming in from their committee-rooms and from conferences. I feel sure that the Senate of the United States will not be satisfied, will not satisfy its own judgment, by eventually passing the bill as it now stands. I wish that there may be time for consideration of this matter. One Senator has told me that in casting his vote for the substitute he did not fully understand it, and is ready to move a reconsideration of that vote.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to state, if the Senator will give me leave, that I have been engaged in a committee-room nearly all day. I came in while the roll was being called, and voted in the affirmative upon the amendment of the Senator from Vermont without being fully aware of what was the motion pending at the time. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted. I make that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts enters a motion to reconsider the vote on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. MILLER. The agricultural appropriation has passed one House and is now with the Senate. I understand that it contains an appropriation in the direction of this bill. That bill has not yet been completed, and I do not know precisely in what condition the appropriation for this purpose may be in that bill. I desire to know in what condition it may be, and to have time for that purpose. Therefore I now move to lay this bill on the table.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator give me a moment?

Mr. MILLER. I withdraw the motion temporarily.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say that it is the utmost folly to talk about putting in the appropriation bill any amount of money that will accomplish the purpose that is intended in the original bill, because without some legislation upon that subject $100,000,000 will not do it. I want some legislation on this subject that will enable the Federal Government to use the money that it appropriates in an intelligent and proper manner. Such legislation, we all know, can not be had in an appropriation bill by the rules of another body, to say nothing of our own, and it will not do for anybody to solace himself with the suggestion that we can meet this great emergency and this great public demand by saying that Congress will appropriate a million dollars or $5,000,000. There must be some legislation upon the subject, or else it is folly to waste any money in the shape of an appropriation.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator from New York, having waived the further consideration of his bill, will not lay it on the table, but will allow it to be informally laid aside in order that the Senator from Virginia may report the agricultural appropriation bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. MILLER. My intention in moving to lay the bill on the table was not to put it beyond the power of the Senate to take it up again. I was intending to-morrow, or some other day, if upon a consultation with the friends of the bill, and even with those who were opposed to it, it was thought the bill could be put in proper shape that would be of any value, to then propose to take it from the table and call up the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to reconsider the vote by which the substitute had been adopted. I am not well versed in parliamentary rules, but several Senators advise me in that direction, including the Chair. If it will be better and conduce to the better management of the Senate to have it laid aside informally, I will let it go in that way; but I think the better way is to lay it on the table with the understanding that if any arrangement can be arrived at, I shall make a motion to take it from the table, and then reconsider the vote on the substitute.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MAHONE. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, with amendments, and I ask that they be printed, as I intend to ask the Senate to take the bill up some time to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. 502) for the relief of T. M. English, administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

ALICE KELLEY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelley; which was, in line 5, to strike out "twenty-five," before the word "dollars," and insert "twelve."

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment of the House and ask a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. BLAIR, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. CAMERON were appointed.

DISEASES OF CATTLE.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot and mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If I renew my motion to lay the pleuro-pneumonia bill on the table in its present condition and it is carried, will it not be perfectly competent for me to-morrow to move to take it up? If I can get a majority vote of course I will bring it up in its present condition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be of opinion that it would be superseded by the unfinished business of the evening, whatever that may be; but if it stands as it is now, it is subject to a motion at any time to proceed to its consideration. The Senator from Virginia has given notice of his desire to take up the agricultural appropriation bill to-morrow, which would supersede it under the rule.

Mr. CULLOM. I would like to inquire also what becomes of the motion to reconsider the amendment last adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is pending, and will be the first question when the bill is under consideration.

Mr. MILLER. I ask, then, that this bill be laid aside informally, and that the Calendar be now taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator restate his proposition?

Mr. MILLER. I made a request for unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside informally to proceed to the consideration of the Calendar or any other business.

Mr. HALE. Has not the pleuro-pneumonia bill been finished yet? [Laughter.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from New York.

Mr. TELLER. I offer an amendment to the substitute proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the bill just disposed of so that it may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be received and printed.

HOUSE CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. HOAR. I rise to make a conference report. Before the report is read, as I suppose it must be read in full, I think it will be more convenient to the Senate to have me explain it in one sentence before it is read, and then Senators can follow it as it is read.

The House passed a bill with reference to contested-election cases in the House of Representatives in which they provided that the clerk of the Committee on Elections of the House should be a permanent salaried officer, and that the evidence in election cases should be sent to him in vacation; that he should stay in Washington all the time and he should prepare that evidence for the consideration of the House. The Senate struck out all that and imposed the duties upon the Clerk of the House of Representatives without any additional salary, and that amendment of the Senate the House of Representatives now concur in. That is the whole story.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the bill of the House with the following amendment thereto in the nature of a substitute, as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"That section 127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

"All officers taking testimony to be used in a contested-election case, whether by deposition or otherwise, shall, when the taking of the same is completed, and without unnecessary delay, certify and carefully seal and immediately forward the same, by mail or by express, addressed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.; and shall also indorse upon the envelope containing such deposition or testimony the name of the case in which it is taken, together with the name of the party in whose behalf it is taken, and shall subscribe such indorsement.

"The Clerk of the House of Representatives, upon the receipt of such deposition or testimony, shall notify the contestant and the contestee, by registered letter through the mails, to appear before him at the Capitol, in person or by attorney, at a reasonable time to be named, not exceeding twenty days from the mailing of such letter, for the purpose of being present at the opening of the sealed packages of testimony and of agreeing upon the parts thereof to be printed. Upon the day appointed for such meeting the said Clerk shall proceed to open all the packages of testimony in the case, in the presence of the parties or their attorneys, and such portions of the testimony as the parties may agree to have printed shall be printed by the Public Printer, under the direction of the said Clerk, and in case of disagreement between the parties as to the printing of any portion of the testimony, the said Clerk shall determine whether such portion of the testimony shall be printed; and the said Clerk shall prepare a suitable index to be printed with the record. And the notice of contest and the answer of the sitting member shall also be printed with the record.

"If either party, after having been duly notified, should fail to attend, by himself or by an attorney, the Clerk shall proceed to open the packages, and shall cause such portions of the testimony to be printed as he shall determine.

"He shall carefully seal up and preserve the portions of the testimony not printed, as well as the other portions when returned from the Public Printer, and lay the same before the Committee on Elections at the earliest opportunity. As soon as the testimony in any case is printed the Clerk shall forward by mail, if desired, two copies thereof to the contestant and the same number to the contestee, and shall notify the contestant to file with the Clerk within thirty days a brief of the facts and the authorities relied on to establish his case. The Clerk shall forward by mail two copies of the contestant's brief to the contestee with like notice.

"Upon receipt of the contestee's brief the Clerk shall forward two copies thereof to the contestant, who may, if he desires, reply to new matter in the contestee's brief within like time. All briefs shall be printed at the expense of the parties respectively, and shall be of like folio as the printed record; and 60 copies thereof shall be filed with the Clerk for the use of the Committee on Elections."

DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. PLATT. I will request that the pleuro-pneumonia bill as it had been amended up to the time the amendment of the Senator from Vermont was proposed be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. HOAR. And let the order include all proposed amendments.

Mr. PLATT. I want the bill as it stood when the Senator from Vermont proposed his amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

JOHN ROACH'S ASSIGNEES.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask unanimous consent to take up a bill for the purpose of moving its recommittal to a committee. It will take but a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before that motion is put it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the business which by unanimous consent was agreed to be the next business in order, being the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, pending which the Senator from Oregon asks that the Senate proceed to the consideration of——

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Senate bill No. 3318, for the relief of George N. Quintard and George E. Weed, assignees of John Roach.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the Pacific railroad resolution the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the business before the Senate.

Mr. HARRIS. Then the request is that it be informally laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves to refer a bill.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3318) for the relief of George N. Quintard and George E. Weed, assignees of John Roach.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACCOUNTS.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McPHERSON. I understood it was the intention of the Senate to-day to take up the Pacific railroad resolution and dispose of it.

Mr. HARRIS. It is now the unfinished business.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very true, but notice has been given by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] of his intention early to-morrow morning to present the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. We have also notice from the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] that he is ready with another appropriation bill, and, therefore, as a matter of course, under the arrangement entered into by the committees on both sides of the Chamber, it will be impossible to proceed with the resolution to-morrow morning, although it be the unfinished business, unless the Senator from Iowa shall give way, and I do not know that he will be disposed to do that. Now, I wish to give notice that it is my intention to antagonize every appropriation bill, and every pension bill, and every other bill brought before the attention of the Senate until such time as we can have consideration of this resolution. Discussion has proceeded here day after day on unimportant questions, and the Pacific railroad resolution question should either be voted upon directly or be antagonized four or five times a day to other measures.

The decision of the Senate was that it would act on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. McPHERSON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I was requested by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who is temporarily called out of the Chamber, to pair with him. I withhold my vote.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 21, nays 36; as follows:

YEAS—21.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON (at 5 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.). I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. HOAR. I hope I may be allowed a word. ["Go on!"] I desire simply to say, if I may be permitted, having charge of the pending measure, that I feel myself bound in honor to press it to a vote, to stay here to do it, and I propose to do it, and so far as one vote is concerned (which is all I can speak for), I shall resist every motion to proceed to any other business or to adjourn.

Mr. CULLOM. I inquire of the Senator if he desires to finish the measure to-night to a vote?

Mr. HOAR. Of course.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope we shall be able to dispose of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that at the conclusion of the reading of the bill we take a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. I have no choice about that. I would feel of course to do in that respect what a majority of the Senate think most convenient. Whether they will sit right on or have a recess is for the Senate to say. I will not undertake to say anything about that; but I desire to address the Senate in explanation of the measure briefly. I desire to have it voted upon and disposed of and out of the way before the final adjournment of the Senate this day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I move that after the completion of the reading of this resolution the Senate take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that at the conclusion of the reading of the pending joint resolution a recess be taken until 8 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States.

The Secretary proceeded to read the joint resolution, and after proceeding for some time,

Mr. CONGER. I move that the further reading of the joint resolution be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the reading can not be dispensed with, the Senate having ordered that the joint resolution should be read.

Mr. PLATT. Besides, it must be read, according to the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the motion of the Senator from Michigan to the Senate if he desires.

Mr. CONGER. I do not insist upon it. There is so much confusion that the joint resolution can not be heard if it is read.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In pursuance of the order of the Senate the Senate takes a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.

---

EVENING SESSION.

The Senate reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 3349) to validate and cure defects in certain acts of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PACIFIC RAILROAD ACCOUNTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary will be read.

Mr. HOAR. Has not that been read?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not the amendment. The original joint resolution as passed by the House was read as ordered. The amendment has not yet been read. It will now be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Committee on the Judiciary report to strike out all after the resolving clause and insert:

That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint three commissioners, whose compensation shall be $750 per month to each, and the necessary traveling expenses and board bills, for which proper vouchers shall be returned, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and said commission may appoint a stenographer, if necessary, and fix his compensation; and the persons appointed on the said commission shall have power to examine all books, papers, and methods of the companies hereinafter named, employ experts if necessary; and they shall at all times be under the immediate direction and control of the President of the United States, and may at any time be removed by him in his discretion.

SEC. 2. That the duty of said commission shall be to examine into the working and financial management of all of the railroads that have received aid from the Government in bonds; to ascertain whether they have observed all the obligations imposed upon them by the laws of the United States under which they received such aid, or which have been since passed in reference thereto, and complied with all other obligations to the United States; and whether their books and accounts are or have been so kept as to show the net earnings of the aided roads, and what said books and accounts actually show in regard thereto, and what have been in fact said net earnings; or whether there has been a diversion of earnings of aided roads to less productive branches, through constructive mileage allowances, or average mileage allowances between aided and non-aided roads or parts of roads, or otherwise; and also whether such system of constructive mileage allowances is fair and usual, and in practical operation has resulted adversely or otherwise to the aided roads and the interest of the United States; or whether there has been a diversion of earnings of aided roads to wrongful or improper purposes, and, if so, to what extent; whether there is a discrimination of rates in favor of unaided against aided roads; whether any, and if so, how much, money is due and owing to the United States on account of mistaken or erroneous accounts, reports, or settlements made by said roads; whether any traffic or business which could or should be done on the aided lines of said companies has been diverted to the lines of any other company or to non-aided lines, and what amounts have been deducted from the gross earnings of any of said aided railroad companies, by their general freight and passenger agents or auditors, by way of rebate, percentage of business done, constructive mileage, monthly or other payments on any pooling or rate arrangement, contract, or agreement; and also to inquire into, ascertain, and report as to the kind, character, and amount of the assets of said companies, and what assets of each company are now subject to the lien of the Government, and the value thereof; and also whether any dividends have been unlawfully declared by the directors or paid to the stockholders of said companies, and, if so, to what extent, and whether the amount thereof may not be recovered from the directors unlawfully declaring the same or persons who have unlawfully received the same; whether the proceeds of any trust funds or lands loaned, advanced, or granted have been diverted from their lawful use; whether any new stock or bonds have been issued or any guarantees or pledges made contrary to or without authority of law; whether any of the directors, officers, or employés of said companies respectively have been or are now directly or indirectly interested, and to what amount or extent, in any other railroad, steamship, telegraph, express, mining, construction, or other business company or corporation, and with which any agreements, undertakings, or leases have been made or entered into; what amounts of money or credit have been or are now loaned by any of said companies to any person or corporation; what amounts of money or credit have been or are now borrowed by any of said companies, giving names of lenders and the purposes for which said sums have been or are now required; what amounts of money or other valuable consideration, such as stocks, bonds, passes, and so forth, have been expended or paid out by said companies, whether for lawful or unlawful purposes, but for which sufficient and detailed vouchers have not be given or filed with the records of said companies; and, further, to inquire and report whether said companies, or either of them, or their officers or agents, have paid any money or other valuable consideration, or done any other act or thing, for the purpose of influencing legislation; and to investigate and report all the facts relating to an alleged consolidation of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, and the Denver Pacific Railway and Telegraph Company into an alleged corporation known as the Union Pacific Railway Company. Said investigation shall include the alleged sale of the stock of the Kansas Pacific Railroad Company to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and all the circumstances and particulars pertaining to said alleged sale, and whether any of the Pacific railroad corporations which obtained bonds from the United States to aid in the construction of their railroads have expended any of their moneys or other assets in the construction, or to aid in the construction, of other railroads, or invested of their moneys or other assets in the stocks or bonds of any manufacturing, mining, and commercial companies or corporations, or of other railroad corporations; and if any such expenditures or investments have been made, the extent and character thereof made by each of said corporations shall be inquired into, and also the present interest of any of said corporations in the railroads auxiliary to their respective railroads.

And said commission shall also ascertain and report the names of all the stockholders in each of said companies, from its organization to the date of the investigation herein provided for, as they appear on the books of said companies at the date of its annual meeting in each year; the amount of stock held by each; what consideration, if any, was paid by each stockholder to said company for his stock, and when and in what property such payment was made; the date when each stockholder so appearing on the books became such; and whether stock is now held or has heretofore been held in the name of any person in trust or for the benefit of any other, and the names of all such persons; the total amount of the stock in each company, and the dates and amount of any increase of such stock, and the reason for such increase; and the amount of the annual salaries or compensation that are now or at any prior time have been paid to any officer or employé of said company, when such salary or compensation amounts to $5,000 or more per annum, and the names of the persons now receiving or who have heretofore received such salaries or compensation, and all bonuses or donations which may have been given or paid to any such person; and all payments made under the head of legal expenses, to whom made, and the amount paid to each, and for what specific services such payments were made.

Said commissioners shall also consider and report whether the interests of the United States require any extension of the time for the performance of the obligations to the United States of said companies, or any of them, and the facts and circumstances upon which said opinion is based, including the security held by the United States for the performance of such obligations, and the value thereof, and the value of the property of such companies, and either of them, not included in such security, and what further security it is expedient that said companies shall be required to give; and if, in their opinion, such extension shall be required by the interests of the United States, they shall submit a scheme for such extension, which shall secure to the United States full payment of all debts due them from said companies, with a reasonable rate of interest, in such time as the commissioners shall propose, having due regard to the financial ability of said companies and the proper conduct of their business in such manner as shall afford efficient service to the public.

And the said commission shall report in full in regard to all such matters aforesaid, and in regard to any other matters which may be ascertained or come to their knowledge in regard to said companies respectively, on or before December 1, 1887, to the President of the United States, who shall forward said report to Congress, with such recommendations or comments as he may see fit to make in the premises.

That the commissioners hereby created, or either of them, shall have power to require the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to the matter under investigation, and to administer oaths; and to that end may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section. Any of the circuit or district courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any person, issue an order requiring any such person to appear before said commissioners, or either of them, as the case may be, and produce books and papers if so ordered, and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $100,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the purposes of this investigation.

SEC. 4. That whenever, in the opinion of the President, it shall be deemed necessary, to the protection of the interests and the preservation of the security of the United States, in respect of its lien, mortgage, or other interest in any of the property of any or all of the several companies upon which a lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance paramount to the right, title, or interest of the United States for the same property, or any part of the same, may exist and be then lawfully liable to be enforced, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under the direction of the President, redeem or otherwise clear off such paramount lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof out of the Treasury; and the United States shall thereupon become and be subrogated to all rights and securities theretofore pertaining to the debt, mortgage, lien, or other incumbrance in respect of which such payment shall have been made. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General, under the direction of the President, to take all such steps and proceedings, in the courts and otherwise, as shall be needful to redeem such lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance, and to protect and defend the rights and interests of the United States in respect of the matters in this section mentioned, and to take steps to foreclose any mortgages or liens of the United States on any such railroad property.

SEC. 5. That from and after the 1st day of July, 1887, there shall be charged to and collected from the Central Pacific Railroad Company, the Union Pacific Railway or Railroad Company, by whichever description it may be lawfully known, the Central Branch Union Pacific Railway Company, the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, and the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, as all the same are described and known in the acts of Congress providing for issuing bonds in aid of the same, or acts in addition thereto, their successors and assigns respectively, 40 per cent. of their respective annual net earnings, to be ascertained as provided in section 1 of the act of May 7, 1878, in lieu of the 25 per cent. provided for in said act, so far as the same respects the companies mentioned in said act, and as to the others herein mentioned absolutely; and to that end the said act of May 7, 1878, and any and all amendments or modifications thereof, be, and the same are hereby extended to the Kansas Pacific Railway Company, to the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, and to the Central Branch Union Pacific Railroad Company; and said act, and all amendments thereto or modifications thereof, shall henceforth apply to the said respective corporations herein last named, as well as to the corporations named in said act.

SEC. 6. That the sinking-funds which are or may be held in the Treasury for the security of the indebtedness of either or all of said railroad companies may, in addition to the investments now authorized by law, be invested in any bonds of the United States heretofore issued for the benefit of either or all of said companies, or in any of the first-mortgage bonds of either of said companies which have been issued under the authority of any law of the United States and secured by mortgages of their roads and franchises, which by any law of the United States have been made prior and paramount to the mortgage, lien, or other security of the United States in respect of its advances to either of said companies as provided by law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. McPHERSON. If the Senator from Massachusetts will permit me at this stage of the proceedings to attempt to simplify the discussion of this measure very materially, by offering an amendment to the proposed substitute, I should be glad to do so at this time, and to briefly state the object and purpose I have in view.

I move to strike out of the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, commencing with section 4, on page 11, all that follows.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey moves to strike out sections 4, 5, and 6, of the proposed amendment. The question is on that motion.

Mr. McPHERSON. Now, Mr. President, a single word with respect to my amendment.

As will be observed by every Senator, this divests the bill of everything in the shape of new legislation that is proposed by the committee respecting these railroads. It leaves simply a resolution of investigation, and I think every Senator on this floor is sufficiently advised at present as to the necessity of such a course.

It is unnecessary for me to enter into any discussion whatever touching the merits or necessity of the proposed investigation. The joint resolution came to us from the House of Representatives providing simply for an investigation. The Judiciary Committee have improved and amended the House resolution so as to make it practicable to have a thorough and full investigation of all the affairs of these companies, but they have done more; they have proposed here new legislation. They have proposed to confer upon the President of the United States certain powers which it is very evident to every Senator the President of the United States would not exercise, and would remit to Congress at his earliest convenience and at the first session of Congress which followed, even if it should be adopted and become a part of the resolution.

Section 5 provides for a payment of a greater sum of money than that provided by the Thurman law, to wit, an increase from 25 per cent. of the net earnings to 40 per cent. of the net earnings. It will be remembered that when the Thurman bill was before the Senate it occupied the time of the Senate for about eight weeks in discussing that particular phase of the question. It was after a long and protracted debate, both in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, that the Thurman bill was finally passed. Now, with only four or five days left of this session, if we expect to secure an investigation of the affairs of these companies it seems to me it would be wisest and best, in short, necessary, to divest it of any and every subject which can provoke debate.

Mr. HOAR. I will say to the Senator that I myself favor his amendment, and am perfectly willing, if the vote can be taken, to have it taken now without debate.

Mr. McPHERSON. Very well. I only wish to make an explanation, if the Senator from Massachusetts will bear with me.

When the Committee on the Judiciary had reported back the bill to the Senate providing for the increase to 40 per cent., I confess that for my part I saw no objection to it, but I do now see a very grave objection to it, and I will simply state the objection, and when I state it, in addition to the reasons I have already stated, I believe even the Judiciary Committee themselves, who have reported this proposed increase to 40 per cent., will be more than willing that it shall be stricken out.

Let me simply state the fact that while the 40 per cent. increase upon the basis of the net earnings of the Union and the Central Pacific Railroads for 1884 and 1885 would require the Union Pacific Railroad to pay into the public Treasury something over $2,600,000 annually, a sum of something like $600,000 in excess of the entire interest account paid by the Government, and $1,400,000 more than it now pays on account of net earnings and transportation account into the public Treasury, it would only compel the Central Pacific Railway Company to pay $129,000 additional, or a sum equal to $1,300,000 less than the Government pays annually upon its interest account. Hence you will see the inequality of the application of the 40 per cent. Therefore, as it is likely to provoke discussion, I shall ask the Senate to strike out everything in the shape of new legislation and take the resolution of investigation pure and simple.

Mr. GEORGE. As the percentage levied on each road is the same, 40 per cent., why is there this difference?

Mr. McPHERSON. That is a very proper question for the Senator to ask me. It is because the entire net earnings of the Central Pacific Railroad during the year 1884 and 1885 have fallen down to a sum amounting to $840,000 a year. The 5 per cent. of net earnings which the Government is to receive of that amounts to about $43,000 annually. Therefore, it is in taking the entire net earnings of the Central Pacific Railway Company, if the 40 per cent. were exacted it would only amount to about $329,000 all told.

As to the Union Pacific Railway Company, 40 per cent. of its net earnings, including the Kansas Pacific and other lines, would amount to about $2,600,000. The funding bill which was a short time ago before the Senate provided that the Union Pacific Railroad should pay a sum of about $1,400,000 a year, or about $1,200,000 less than it would be required to pay under this proposed amendment, and that was considered extortionate by them. I only speak of it to show the unfairness of exacting from one of these corporations the sum of $2,600,000 a year while it can not possibly amount to more that $329,000 from the other.

Mr. GEORGE. As the present percentage now levied is the same, being 25 per cent., and the proposed percentage being 40 per cent., if these unequal results come out of the 40 per cent., do they not equally come out of the 25 per cent.?

Mr. McPHERSON. The Senator is mistaken in that. In the first place, the Central Pacific Railway Company has diverted mainly its business from that line to the Southern Pacific line, which is a competing corporation. The same parties that control the Central Pacific Railway Company to-day have controlled it from the beginning, and they have absolutely turned the switches and turned the business from the Central Pacific Railroad on to the tracks of the Southern Pacific. It has no through business and gives no through business to the Union Pacific. Hence they have both become local roads, notwithstanding it was the intention of the Government when these roads were incorporated in 1862 that they should be a continuous through line of road from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean.

Mr. HOAR. I hardly meant to yield to the Senator to make a very long speech at this time.

Mr. McPHERSON. I am now through. I have simply stated all I wish to say.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say in addition to the answer to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that the term "net earnings" in this bill is a delusion as it is used. It is not the net earnings in any sense that anybody understands the word except the definition which is given in the old Thurman act, that the net earnings shall mean anything that the railroad receives after deducting its operating expenses and keeping the road in repair and the interest on its first mortgage, not interest on all the loan; and the Government does not allow in that estimate (and the railroads so keep their books) the expenses for a new bridge, or new rails, or new cars, or anything which keeps the road up with the times, or for a side-track or a new depot or anything.

If there is a little spur road requiring a single track or a double track to a new village anywhere in the 4,500 miles of territory which this system accommodates, that can not be deducted. The effect of this 40 per cent., as I could demonstrate if I were going to take the time, would be simply bankruptcy to this road, and leave the road where it is to stand as not paying its current demands; and of course we should have a road that the Government has got to take possession of and run ourselves. If we can have a vote, though, I will not go into a discussion.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey whether he would not be willing to exclude from his amendment the fourth section of the substitute reported by the Committee on the Judiciary. It seems to me that that is one of the most important provisions of the bill as presented to the Senate by the committee. That section is as follows:

SEC. 4. That whenever, in the opinion of the President, it shall be deemed necessary, to the protection of the interests and the preservation of the security of the United States, in respect of its lien, mortgage, or other interest in any of the property of any or all of the several companies upon which a lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance paramount to the right, title, or interest of the United States for the same property, or any part of the same, may exist and be then lawfully liable to be enforced, the Secretary of the Treasury shall, under the direction of the President, redeem or otherwise clear off such paramount lien, mortage, or other incumbrance by paying the sums lawfully due in respect thereof out of the Treasury; and the United States shall thereupon become and be subrogated to all rights and securities theretofore pertaining to the debt, mortgage, lien, or other incumbrance in respect of which such payment shall have been made. It shall be the duty of the Attorney-General, under the direction of the President, to take all such steps and proceedings, in the courts and otherwise, as shall be needful to redeem such lien, mortgage, or other incumbrance, and to protect and defend the rights and interests of the United States in respect of the matters in this section mentioned, and to take steps to foreclose any mortages or liens of the United States on any such railroad property.

The interest which the Government has in these several roads and companies is liable at any time, by default of the company to meet the interest on the first-mortgage bonds, to be placed at hazard.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest, if the Senator will allow me to interrupt him, to save time——

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from New Jersey to try his question on the last two sections first.

Mr. McPHERSON. I have no objection to that, although I do not agree to the fourth section. I think it is a power which never should be conferred.

Mr. HARRIS. I suppose the question is divisible, so that the vote can be taken separately on each section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question can be taken on the sections separately.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I wish to remark further, now that I have commenced referring to this section, and I shall not detain the Senate long, that in my judgment no more important legislation has been proposed with reference to these companies since the passage of the charter under which they were organized down to the present time. One of two results will occur in the event the fourth section becomes a law, either the United States will get back all the money it has invested by the issuance of its bonds to these companies or it will obtain possession of this system of roads.

I do not believe that those interested in these companies and those interested in the railway system of the United States generally will allow the contingency to happen which would put the United States in possession as owners of this system of railways, because if that contingency should occur and the United States should become the owner of this system of roads there would be very little difficulty in determining the question which has agitated Congress so long, that of the proper regulation of the interstate commerce of this country. Give to the United States possession of that key to the situation, and it will unlock every difficulty involved in the problem; and because of that, in my judgment, those who are interested in the railway property of this country never would allow the contingency to transpire, but instead of default on first-mortgage bonds, instead of any act which would induce the putting into force the provisions of the fourth section, there would be provision made by those directly and indirectly interested to meet every obligation that these companies are under to the Government of the United States.

Therefore, without desiring to extend my remarks, I hope that the fourth section at least will not be stricken out of the amendment proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator ask for a division of the question?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I ask for a division.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will then be put first on the motion to strike out the fourth section of the substitute reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BUTLER. It is to be taken first on striking out sections 5 and 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Unless otherwise ordered, the Chair will direct the first proposition to be submitted first.

Mr. BUTLER. I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to suggest that the vote first be taken on striking out the fifth and sixth sections, to which the Senator from New Jersey assented.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair ordinarily would put the question on the sections in the order in which they stand, unless the Senate should otherwise direct.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I move that the vote be taken first on striking out the fifth and sixth sections.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the vote will first be taken on striking out those sections.

Mr. HOAR. I understood the Senator from New Jersey to modify his amendment by including sections 5 and 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the question will be taken on striking out the fifth and sixth sections of the substitute. [Putting the question]. The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest that the vote be taken by a rising vote first, and I will state very frankly my reason. If there is any doubt of the action of the Senate on this subject I desire to address the Senate upon it at considerable length, but I do not want to inflict a speech of an hour or an hour and a half upon the Senate if the mind of the Senate is made up. I hope my honorable friend from Texas will allow a rising vote to be taken in the first instance.

Mr. COKE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Texas can call for the yeas and nays after the rising vote.

Mr. COKE. Very well, I have no objection to that.

Mr. HOAR. I will state to the Senator very frankly that my purpose is, if I can, to ascertain the disposition of the Senate so as to see whether it is necessary for me to address the Senate at length on the subject.

Mr. COKE. I am willing to take a rising vote first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] to strike out the last two sections of the substitute.

The question being put, there were, on a division—ayes 22, noes 7 (not a quorum voting).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas call for the yeas and nays?

Mr. COKE. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HOAR. I think under the circumstances I ought to make a brief address to the Senate, though there is no quorum present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a quorum present in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will let the call of the yeas and nays proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has counted and ascertained that a quorum is present.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I understand that he would vote "nay."

Mr. COLQUITT (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], but after conversation with his colleague [Mr. ALDRICH] I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES], who I notice is not in the Chamber. I withhold my vote.

Mr. SPOONER. I am paired generally with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], but I transfer the pair to the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARRIS (when Mr. VEST's name was called). The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] is detained at home by indisposition. He asked me to announce his pair with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If the Senator from Missouri were present he would vote "nay," and I suppose the Senator from Colorado would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is absent to-night, and is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If my colleague were present, I think he would vote "nay."

Mr. COKE. My colleague [Mr. MAXEY] is absent, sick, to-night, and is paired with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]. They are both absent.

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 14; as follows:

YEAS—26.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I now move to strike out the fourth section, because this is a power I would not be willing to confer upon anybody. So far as the exercise of such powers with respect to an amount of money necessary to be raised for the purpose of paying off the first-mortgage bonds, it is one that should come before Congress for its consideration, and nobody else; therefore, I cannot consent that that section should be retained.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to say that the subject embraced in the fourth section of this amendment has been very carefully considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, not merely of the present Congress but of at least one preceding Congress, and a bill was reported from that committee in almost the precise terms corresponding with the present amendment by the present Attorney-General, who was then a Senator from Arkansas, and who made a terse and forcible argument in favor of the bill reported by him from that committee when it came before the Senate for consideration. I merely make this statement to show that this subject does not come before the Senate for the first time, nor was it considered for the first time by the Judiciary Committee of the present Congress.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to make an inquiry of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator is upon the Committee on the Judiciary. I agree with him as to the force of the argument he has made; but I should like to inquire if this section carries an appropriation with it sufficient to enable the President and Attorney-General to perform the duties required under it.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That was the purpose and judgment of the committee, as I understand, and it will carry an appropriation sufficient to meet that contingency.

Mr. BUTLER. In pursuance of the inquiry of the Senator from Massachusetts, may I inquire further what amount of money is appropriated by that section?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Such amount as may be necessary to enable the President and the Secretary of the Treasury to discharge the duty which the section would impose in case of its being enacted into law.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to inquire further of the Senator if any amount has been arrived at, approximately even?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. It would run all the way from a few thousand dollars, it might be, to the entire amount of the first-mortgage bonds on these several railroads.

Mr. BUTLER. How many millions?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Of the first-mortgage bonds senior to the lien of the United States there are about $64,000,000.

Mr. BUTLER. So that that amount might be necessary to remove the lien?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In the event of a failure of these several companies to meet their obligations under the first mortgage bonds and those mortgages should be put in process of forclosure it might become necessary to use that amount of money less whatever the sinking fund would amount to now in the possession of the Government.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to see this section something more than mere idle words. I suggest to the Senator that there be added expressly "and sufficient for carrying out the purposes of this section is hereby appropriated."

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no objection.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator says it is the opinion of the committee that it carries with it that power. Is there any precedent for an appropriation by implication?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I can not now state whether there is a precedent such as the Senator calls for, or not. The committee was of opinion that this section as framed would accomplish the purpose. If there be doubt about it, I certainly have no objection to the removal of that doubt.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator's position is correct, there is no need of an express appropriation at any time to authorize a thing to be done. If a direction to do a thing carries with it the power to take money out of the Treasury sufficient for that purpose, there is hardly ever need of an appropriation.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I am entirely content that the Senator from Massachusetts shall add the amendment he suggests.

Mr. DAWES. Here is by implication authority derived solely from that source to take the largest sum out of the Treasury that ever was taken by any enactment.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I have no disposition to discuss that question with the Senator. If he thinks this is not sufficiently explicit, let him make it so by amendment, but let us have this provision made in some form.

Mr. DAWES. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In order that if the contingency should occur there will be power possessed by the President to meet it and to save the Government from the loss of the great amount of money involved in the lien that it has on these several roads.

Mr. McPHERSON. It seems to be the wish of quite a number of Senators to leave this section in the bill. There is one point that is worthy of consideration, and that is this: If these railroad companies should default in paying interest on the first-mortgage bonds there is no authority vested now anywhere to protect the interest of the Government in the bonds loaned by the Government. Therefore there might be a possible necessity for some power being vested somewhere to protect the interest of the Government in a case of that kind; and so it is that I have no objection myself and I have no particular wish that a vote shall be taken on the fourth section unless some other Senator desires it.

Mr. SHERMAN (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Mr. President, in my judgment this fourth section ought not to be in the bill, first, because it is wrong in principle, as it confers so enormous a power on the President of the United States ten years in advance of the time for the exercise of that power. The first-mortgage bonds of the Pacific railroad companies do not mature, any of them, until 1897, according to my memory.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. In 1895 to 1899.

Mr. HOAR. The average is 1897.

Mr. SHERMAN. More than ten years. There can be no default in the payment of interest on the first-mortgage bonds. Such a thing as that is not to be considered, because that is the first and primary and paramount lien on these roads. There is not one of them but what is worth more than the amount of the first-mortgage bonds, and probably two or three times the amount of the first-mortgage bonds.

This proposes to place in the hands of a President of the United States to be elected eight or ten years hence this enormous power of assuming the payment of $65,000,000 indebtedness. It does not invest him with the power to take the money from the Treasury, because the criticism made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is perfectly just. You may impose a duty upon the President of the United States, whatever it may be, and yet he can not take one dollar from the Treasury, except in pursuance of an appropriation made by express law. That appropriation can only be expressed in such words as these, that so much money be appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Consequently this is mere brutum fulmen; it does not amount to anything, except that it confers, nominally at least, a very dangerous power long years in advance of the time for its exercise.

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] suggested that these companies might default in their interest. They have never thought of such a thing. Such a thing is not to be conceived of as possible. That interest must be paid and is paid as promptly and as regularly as the interest on the bonds of the United States, because it is a primary lien on all these roads. That is, therefore, a contingency which need not be provided for by law.

This is an intimation that these railroad companies intend to commit an act of bankruptcy, when there is no such disposition and no sign of such an act. It is to suggest a state of things that has not occurred to the mind of mortal man, because standing back of and behind these first-mortgage securities there is an immense interest, amounting to over $130,000,000 or $140,000,000. Therefore, the contingency of the companies failing to pay the interest on these bonds or their failure to pay the bonds on maturity is a thing not to be thought of, at least for ten years, and consequently it is a mere idle section threatening the credit of these companies to even suggest the possibility that the interest is not to be paid on these first-mortgage bonds, which are high in the market, equal to the bonds of the United States. Such a suggestion as this in a law of this kind, passed by both Houses of Congress, appears to be a mere effort, you may say, to bear down these bonds, to toss them into the market as discredited and suspected by the Congress of the United States. Therefore, that section ought not to be here, and I hope the Senator from New Jersey will adhere to his amendment.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I will adhere to it. I prefer that the section be stricken out, although, as I said, I am not very strenuous about it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me say one or two things while I am on the floor. I did not read the measure carefully until to-day, when it was understood that it would be taken up, and I must confess that on the whole, with some qualifications, I do think the House joint resolution covers about all that is required in regard to this subject-matter. It is true that the Senate provisions in regard to the investigation are a little broader. They confer power to take testimony, to examine witnesses, to call in the aid of the courts, and evidently in that respect it is more carefully prepared than the House resolution. I at first supposed that the House resolution was a concurrent resolution, and if so it would have no force whatever. It would not authorize these people to draw their salaries. They could not draw money from the Treasury except in pursuance of a law, and a concurrent resolution is not a law, because it is not approved by the President.

That is what I supposed the House resolution was, but it turns out to be a joint resolution which has to be read three times and approved by the President, having all the force and effect of a law, and it contains substantially all the powers necessary to be conferred upon commissioners to ascertain the exact condition of these railroad companies, their market value, what it is best for the Government to do, what class of bonds the Government should take in payment of its lien, &c.

It seems to me, therefore, that in that respect the House resolution appears to cover the ground well enough, although there are provisions, as I said, in the Senate resolution that would be perhaps better to be attached to the resolution. So that the form of the resolution I am indifferent about.

There is another thing. The rate of pay and compensation and expense contemplated by the Senate amendment is out of all proportion to the character of the duty to be performed. It proposes to give to these commissioners $750 a month, without any duration of their term of service, or $9,000 a year, with all their expenses paid, with full power to employ any number of employés, and it appropriates $100,000 for an investigation that ought to be conducted by three men, judicious men, good lawyers, at a reasonable rate, and the whole thing ought to be completed within six months.

The temptation will be, by giving these enormous salaries to these commissioners, to prolong the investigation, because their interests are involved to that extent, and this inquiry is one that ought not to take any such time as that. It seems to me that in this respect the House resolution is better. The House have provided for a commission to be employed at the rate of $3,000 a year. That is probably too small. Five thousand dollars would be nearer the sum that would justify a good accountant and lawyer to devote his time and attention for the necessary three, four, or five months to make this investigation. In that respect the House resolution is better.

The amount involved, in comparison with the great interests to be investigated, $100,000, seems to be very small, but yet it appears to me to be entirely too large for all the services that can be performed by commissioners under the operation of this proposed law.

At all events, I trust the Senate will strike out the fourth section as being entirely unnecessary to secure the Government. If these companies should ever default in their interest or principal, Congress will be in session within a short time and can soon protect the Government. The common-law right of subrogation exists, and the Government, even without this section, could in the courts of the United States assert its right to be subrogated in place of the holders of the first-mortgage bonds in case of failure to pay them by the railroad companies.

There is no necessity for this legislation, and if these railroad companies, or any of them, should default in the payment of either principal or interest, the courts are open to give them the equitable right to be subrogated in place of the first mortgage bonds.

The provision contained here is, as I said before, a threat upon the credit of the companies, and it seems to me it ought not to be continued here. It does no good to anybody. It only does evil so far as it goes.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, these commissioners are ordered to report on or before December 1, 1887, so that their salaries are to run by the committee's amendment only for a period of about eight months. The Senator from Ohio, I think, was not aware that the time was fixed. He will find the provision on the tenth page, in section 2.

They are to report a scheme which shall preserve the interests of the Government and the public for the redemption of these large debts, the extension of them if it should be necessary—debts amounting in the aggregate to upwards of $150,000,000. I do not mean the debt to the Government to that amount, but the debt to the Government alone will amount to over $100,000,000.

Mr. President, you want to have some able men, able financiers, able lawyers whose character will bear weight, will bear down all the scandal of the blackmailer, all the intrigue of any other great railroad company that wants to get possession of these roads, all the manipulators of the stock market, and all the thousand influences which have been directed at this Senate from bull and bear, from anonymous writers in the press, from persons with political aims, which have made the history of this measure to my mind one of the most humiliating that ever has occurred in the history of American legislation.

Now, for such men, called from other occupations for a temporary purpose, which is to begin promptly as soon as these men can be appointed and to end on the 1st of December next, it seems to me $750 a month is too little. I wanted to fix the salaries at ten or twelve thousand dollars apiece per annum, and there were men of high authority—without going into any private discussion in this Senate—who wanted to fix the salary at ten or twelve thousand dollars apiece for the work, not at that rate per year. The committee finally agreed on $750 a month. That would only be $9,000 a year. You could not get men to sit as referees to whom business corporations like these would submit a question of one-tenth of its importance and proportion without fees of $10,000 apiece, even if the reference did not last six weeks.

I respectfully, submit therefore, to my honorable friend from Ohio that his criticism that these salaries are too large on the whole—although I defer very much to his judgment on all questions, especially such as these—is not a valid one. I submit to the Senator that this is as reasonable and low a compensation as we ought to suggest.

I am aware of all the motives and influences, I think, that surround this legislation. I do not feel afraid of the perversion which it has been suggested may be made of this purpose. I believe that President Cleveland can appoint, will be disposed to appoint, and will appoint three men of high character as financiers and lawyers who will take up this problem in the interest of the Government as a creditor, in the interest of the American people.

One of these roads alone—the Union Pacific Railroad—serves 4,600 miles of territory with its system, and the people of that vast region now growing into life, the region whose growth is expected to be most rapid, whose business institutions are growing up under the policy which some men propose, are to be served for an indefinite period in the future by a railroad with bankruptcy hanging over its head, a railroad without a dollar left to it to build a new bridge, to put in new steel rails, to build a new side track, to send out a new spur of five miles to a little growing village, and that probably for a longer period, but certainly for ten years. Under some policies that may be, perhaps will be, the condition of this thing, and then at the end of that time the whole concern is to be taken possession of and run by the Government with such means and appliances as a political administration of the road will bring, or to be stripped and thrown into the market to some other great railroad to gobble up and absorb in the end, the Government as a creditor and the public with its vastly larger interests to be the loser, to say nothing of wiping out the present capital of over $30,000,000 in value of stock.

Mr. President, the policy of Congress in regard to this measure is plain and clear. You want, in the first place, to secure the rights of the United States as a creditor by finding out what is the best thing these debtors can do with regard to their public obligations and their public service, and give them such reasonable extension, if any, as they may require.

You want, in the second place, to secure that these roads for the future, if you can, shall be operated in the interest of owners, men who have invested their money for dividends and not for purposes of speculation in the stock. The Union Pacific Railroad to-day has a capital stock of $60,000,000, and that is selling, in spite of the manipulations of this winter, at between $56 and $57 a share. That represents $33,750,000, or thereabouts, of value in the stock over and above both mortgages, although not a dollar of dividends can be paid at present, or will be till this matter is settled.

Now, who can protect the Government, who can manage the interests of this road for the benefit of the Government like men whose $30,000,000 is to be wiped out unless the Government be paid? It is for our interest to preserve that management, and not send it back to the harpies of the New York stock market from which Mr. Adams has rescued it. A little more than a year ago a constituent of mine, a high railroad authority, incautiously declared that in his judgment the Union Pacific Railroad Company stock was a good investment at 100 cents on the dollar, and would pay a reasonable dividend of at least 6 per cent. on that sum, and there were no other solid investments in this country that you could get that would pay more than 3½ or 4 per cent. at that time.

In consequence of that declaration trustees and persons with slender means, widows and other women, proceeded to take up that stock, and at this moment a very large portion of that stock is held by that class of persons. They have elected their own board of directors. They elected Mr. Adams president. The office of the company was moved to Boston, and there is not a dollar of the original stock owned by the credit-mobilier men, by Oakes Ames or his family. There is not a dollar of the stock owned by Mr. Jay Gould. I have before me a statement taken from the stock-book. Nearly all the stock has changed hands since 1880. There are 2,100 shares held by persons who own less than 10 shares each. There are six thousand eight hundred persons and institutions now owners of that stock; three thousand one hundred and seventy-nine more own less than 50 shares each. Seventy-nine thousand nine hundred shares are held in Europe, and there are less than one thousand four hundred persons who own stock in blocks exceeding 50 shares.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the total number of shares?

Mr. HOAR. The capital is about $60,000,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How many shares?

Mr. HOAR. The statement which is made from the stock-books is that there is not one in ten of the present stockholders who owned any stock in 1880, and not one in one hundred and fifty who was the owner of stock in the year 1875, and there is not a quarter of the stock of the company held to-day by persons who may be supposed in any degree to hold it for stock-jobbing purposes. And yet when this attempt is made to find out what is the interest of the Government as a creditor, what is the interest of the people whom these 4,600 miles of railroad serve, whose institutions it is to develop, whose farms and dwellings and business are to have a value according as this road is prosperous and accommodates them and does good work, or to dwindle and decay if the road becomes bankrupt and cheap and unsafe and unable to grow with the country, how is it met?

When we undertake to look into that question, first comes the bull or the bear of the stock market, and sends letters to this Senator and that Senator, and writers working in the dark for New York newspapers revile the personal character and the motives of men who undertake to do their legislative duty in regard to this subject, and then comes the man who wants to bankrupt the road in the interest of some local concern, and then comes the politician who wants to use an investigation in the interest of some political party, and then Senators and Representatives begin to have their knees shake together. I do not think so many of them as people suppose imagine that that thing is true. The fear is when they vote on this great business question that their reputations, the reputations of the seventy-six men whom these great sovereign American States have selected as the men they delight to honor, of character and capacity and reputation and fitness for public service, will not protect them. They can not vote according as they think the public interest requires, because their characters are to perish before the miserable blackmailers of the New York newspapers. I do not believe it.

I think the scheme of this resolution, that is that you shall have the three best business men that the President can find at a fair salary, and perhaps a scheme looking to all these measures and that they shall take the road and investigate to the bottom every question and every charge that may possibly bear on the interest of Congress in reference to these great institutions in the future and report at the next session, is a good one, and is the best one that we can contrive.

It seems as if this investigation proposes to cover a great ground, but nearly everything that has been inserted there has been inquired into by one or the other House of Congress. The documents, statistics, and figures are all drawn up.

Now I wish to say one word of Mr. Charles Francis Adams. He is no friend, or companion, or associate, or sympathizer of mine. I suppose he thought when I was elected Senator that I was about as unfit a person for the office as could be found in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts among men likely to be proposed for it. I am not his friend or associate, either socially or politically, but I will say of him that in this great undertaking, in which he has embarked his reputation, he is acting with a wisdom, with an integrity, with a single sense of duty, and with a single sense of honor, in my opinion, which entitles him to the respect of the American people; and if he shall succeed in rescuing this great road and restoring it to the purpose for which it was chartered and in making it stand free, independent, strong, the servant of the American people, like the New York Harbor, or the Erie Canal, or the Mississippi River—if he shall have succeeded in letting it stand as the Baltimore and Ohio, the Boston and Albany, and the New York Central stand, a simple business institution managed by its owners, returning reasonable and honorable and moderate profits, he will have performed a service to the American people which will confer a new luster even upon the great name which for four generations has been among the chiefest of the ornaments in our treasure.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire, Mr. President, to ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question or two for the purpose of getting out some information which I do not now have. The Senator said there were 4,600 miles, I believe, of this railroad. I desire to ask the Senator how much of the 4,600 miles is subject to the Thurman act requiring a percentage of the net income to be paid into the Treasury?

Mr. HOAR. I have the figures.

Mr. GEORGE. How many of these 4,600 miles?

Mr. HOAR. I have the figures here in a pamphlet. It will take some little time to find them.

Mr. GEORGE. I mean of the Union Pacific?

Mr. HOAR. I understand. The Union Pacific proper and the Kansas Pacific are all one. The precise length is not in my memory at this moment.

Mr. GEORGE. Give me an approximate estimate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. About a third of the 4,600 miles.

Mr. HOAR. It is somewhere about 1,200 or 1,500 miles.

Mr. GEORGE. Then I understand that out of this magnificent system of railroads belonging to the Union Pacific Railway only one-third of these 4,600 miles is subject to the laws of Congress requiring a portion of the net income to be paid into the Treasury; and that on all the rest, the two-thirds, notwithstanding any law we have passed, or any law we now propose to pass, every cent of the net income belongs to the company itself, and is not subject to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. That is not strictly true.

Mr. GEORGE. Make it strictly true.

Mr. HOAR. The Union Pacific road is now consolidated with the Kansas Pacific into what is called the Union Pacific Railway Company, and that is subject to the mortgage of the United States. Then they control these other roads, some of them by leasing, others of them by owning a majority of the stock or bonds, or in some other way. I understand the Senator's point perfectly, but it is a point which requires a fullness of statement to answer, and I am now about to answer. That is the substance of it.

If this 40 per cent. be exacted, according to the returns of the year 1885 upon the Union Pacific and Central roads it will require about $2,600,000. That will eat up substantially every dollar. You understand that net earnings, by the definition of the Thurman act, are simply what is left after paying interest on the first-mortgage bonds and keeping the road in repair and paying the operating expenses. Besides, they pay interest on the indebtedness which they have incurred to acquire this large additional system, and they pay $1,500,000 to keep the road in repair, to keep it up decently with the age. They spent $2,600,000 for this purpose last year.

After paying that they will have nothing left whatever. It will be entirely gone, and more. I have the exact figures on my desk, which I shall be able to show. Now, they keep their accounts in this way: They have charged to the construction account every repair which they make except what is a mere necessary repair to keep the road actually running. Every new bridge, every new depot, every new side-track, every substitution of a steel rail for an iron rail, every new car, every improved heating apparatus, everything which the constantly increasing demands of the public and the improvements in railroad management require, they charge to the construction account, so that they are not able now and do not take that out. They put in a new bridge for an old one, expended $50,000 last year for the Omaha bridge, and the Government did not allow it. If they put that into the construction account, as possibly they might under the term "repairs," in this bill, and deducted it before they paid their 25 or 40 per cent. they would make a showing that they are not earning their operating expenses, which would instantly ruin their credit.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator has given me a good deal of information which I did not ask for, and failed to give me the information which I did ask for.

Mr. HOAR. What did you ask for which I have not given?

Mr. GEORGE. I wanted to know how many miles of these 4,600 miles which you said belonged to the Union Pacific Railroad Company, or which they were operating, were subject to pay the 25 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. I understand it is about a third.

Mr. EDMUNDS. From a third to three-fifths.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont says it is from a third to three-fifths. It is not in my memory at this moment, and I shall have to search a little to find it.

Mr. GEORGE. Then there is about two-thirds or over it——

Mr. HOAR. Two-thirds to two-fifths.

Mr. GEORGE. There is between two-thirds and about two-fifths.

Mr. EDMUNDS. One-third to two-fifths.

Mr. GEORGE. Are you speaking of the number of miles on which we have a lien?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have a lien from Omaha to Ogden on the main line, and then there is the Kansas Pacific, which has been consolidated with the Union Pacific, which was originally a part of this same enterprise, of about 600 miles more.

Mr. HOAR. Fourteen hundred in all, a friend who is to be trusted as an authority I am sure, informs me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It must be more than that, because it is a thousand miles from Omaha to Ogden, and then the Kansas Pacific is about 600 more. So it will be between 1,600 and 1,800 miles lien on which the act of 1862 and 1864 and the Thurman act operate.

Mr. GEORGE. And the remainder of the 4,600 miles, which would be about 3,000, we have no lien upon.

Mr. HOAR. Now I have it here exactly. This is exactly what is stated to me. The Senator from Vermont has been led into some error. One thousand four hundred and twenty-five and twelve one-hundredths miles are covered by the Government lien. Let me read:

From Omaha, Nebr., to Ogden out is 1,031.18 miles. From Kansas and Missouri State line westwardly it is 393.94. Making the amount I have already given. Here is the pamphlet, the report of the Union Pacific.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand in general terms that there are about 1,400 or 1,500 miles of the 4,600 miles on which the United States has a lien and from which we receive a net income of 25 per cent., leaving about 3,000 or 3,100 miles of road belonging to this company upon which we have no lien and from which we derive no income. I understand that to be the fact.

Mr. HOAR. What do you mean by saying "we derive no income?"

Mr. GEORGE. The United States derives none. If that is not so, correct me. I state that my understanding is that on these two-thirds or 3,000 miles——

Mr. HOAR. Three thousand and ninety-four miles.

Mr. GEORGE. That there we have no lien for our debt and we take none of their income for the purpose of indemnity. Is that the fact or not?

Mr. HOAR. It is not literally true as the Senator states it. The original act of all entitles us to succeed to all the property of the company when our debt becomes due, if it is not paid; as it then exists, but we have no mortgage, we have no lien that is a paramount lien to them or anybody else even subject to the first mortgage. We have no mortgage on those miles.

Mr. GEORGE. What claim have we on those 3,000 miles of road outside of our lien?

Mr. HOAR. We have not any claim.

Mr. GEORGE. That is what I understood.

Mr. PLATT. A claim to take it.

Mr. HOAR. A claim to take it when our debt becomes due as it then stands.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire only to make one or two observations on this state of affairs as exhibited by the answers of the Senator from Massachusetts to my questions. Here is, as he states, a magnificent system of railway——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. He does not seem to think that what I stated just now was an answer to the point and substance of his second question. This company, of course, has acquired the interests in these roads which enabled it to operate them, by purchase of the owners, or by acquiring bonds on which they have to pay the interest, or by taking second-mortgage bonds, or by building them itself and going into debt for them. So it has got to pay all the other incumbrances although it is operating these roads.

It is operating them under a very large incumbrance which does not make them a source of pure profit, and in the figures which I have stated I have turned in as if it were to be accounted for to the Government or taken into consideration in this matter everything that the Union Pacific Railway gets from any source whatever; and when you have taken out what it has got to pay on these things and for operating expenses and the $2,600,000 which this 40 per cent. will require under the proposed section in this bill, it will not have enough left of the whole to pay the $1,500,000 which is the least sum, and that is only $375 a mile, which is necessary to keep the road in repair in accordance with the spirit of the age, according to the decent necessities of the management of a great railroad.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to submit some observations to the Senate?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly, sir; but I thought if the Senator had a little more light on the subject he would make a great deal more sensible observations.

Mr. GEORGE. If I may be allowed to go on, after having all this light thrown on the subject, and having got possession of all the immense amount of information which the Senator from Massachusetts has contributed in answer to my question, I think I will proceed in about this way. There is a railroad company that got about $25,000,000 from the Treasury of the United States. How many millions of acres of land it got I am not now prepared to say, but it got a large amount of land. The United States indorsed its bonds. The United States has a second-mortgage lien upon its line of railway. It now turns out that after getting this money from the Government, after getting this land from the Government, after getting the privilege from the Government to put a first mortgage upon its road which has a superior lien to the mortgage of the United States, in some way or other, with this lien only on about 1,400 or 1,500 miles of railroad, they have acquired about 4,600 miles, and that is the attitude in which it comes before us here to-day.

I want the Senate and the country to understand that with all these loans and donations by the Government we ride as second mortgagee upon 1,400 or 1,500 miles of railway, and the company has succeeded in some way or other in getting about 3,000 miles more, upon which we have no lien, upon which we have no right except the general right which any creditor has against the property of his debtor. We stand in that attitude.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me——

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no, if you please.

Mr. HOAR. Would not the Senator like to be corrected?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; I do not want to be corrected any more. I would rather live in delusion than be corrected by the Senator from Massachusetts in the way he has been correcting me for the last half hour. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will be gratified. He does labor under a delusion in his last statement.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, and so does the Senator from Massachusetts labor under a delusion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senator will not interrupt me any more I will go on, and I will go on by stating the proposition again, because it is a very important one. This company has 4,600 miles of railroad, a magnificent system, as described by the Senator from Massachusetts in his first speech. This company is a debtor to the Government. We have paid interest on bonds which we loaned them, and which they ought to have paid. The bonds will mature in a few years. This company makes no provision for the meeting of the debt when it falls due. A few years ago, under the Thurman act, the Congress of the United States provided that they should pay 25 per cent. of their net earnings into the Treasury as a sinking fund to meet this debt. It is ascertained that that 25 per cent. will not meet the debt when it falls due; so when those bonds become due, the Government paying the interest on the bonds all the time, the Government will be under the necessity of paying the principal.

What next? The Judiciary Committee come in here and say in the amendment which they offer to the bill that the company ought to pay 40 per cent. of its net earnings, not on the whole 4,600 miles—we give them the net earnings on two-thirds of that 4,600 miles—but on one-third we ask them to do the very moderate thing of paying 40 per cent. of their own net earnings in satisfaction of their own debt.

Mr. President, I think that is very liberal on the part of the United States. Any other debtor in all this broad land, from Canada to the Gulf, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, would consider that any creditor of his who would allow him to keep the corpus of his estate and 60 per cent. of his net income and only pay to the creditor 40 per cent. of that income—I say any debtor in all this broad land except these Pacific railroad companies would regard a creditor who would treat them in that honorable and charitable and lenient spirit as a magnanimous and lenient creditor.

But when every other debtor in this broad land must not only surrender all the net income of his property in payment of his debts, but must surrender the corpus of the estate itself if he can not raise the money, when that is the condition of everybody else in this country, the Senator from Massachusetts comes in here and says that we are oppressive to the railroad companies who own this magnificent system, 4,600 miles of railroad, when we ask them to pay only four dollars out of every ten, not of their gross income, but of their gains, after deducting all legitimate expenses. That seems to me to be rather a hard proposition for the Congress of the United States to accept in behalf of the tax-payers of the United States.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. If you please, let me get through.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator was sitting down.

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir. Every dollar that is paid upon these bonds of the United States out of the Treasury of the United States, which is not supplied by the 25 per cent. of net income which is now required by law to be paid into the Treasury of the United States, must be paid by the tax-payers of the United States. I speak in their behalf, crowded, oppressed as they are by onerous taxation, against a further surrender of their rights in behalf of these railroad companies.

I can not state—that is what nobody knows, that is what this investigation is intended to find out—how much money has ever been paid out of the private pockets of the investors in these companies for this magnificent system of 4,600 miles. It is certain that all the railroad companies put together got $64,000,000 as the result of the sale of the bonds of the United States. It is also certain that they were allowed to sell and did sell bonds which the United States generously allowed to drive ahead of their bonds in the way of a lien to an equal amount. Am I correct in saying that the first-mortgage bonds were allowed to be equal to the bonds of the United States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. To be in advance of them by the act of 1864.

Mr. HARRIS. Equal in amount.

Mr. GEORGE. Equal in amount?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. GEORGE. And they were allowed to drive ahead. That makes the money derived from the bonds alone twice $64,000,000, which, according to my arithmetic, is $128,000,000. That much it is certain that these corporators, these builders of this road, these owners of this road got without advancing one single dollar for it.

Then I presume some Senator on this floor who has a better memory than I have—probably the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] can tell me or tell the Senate and the country how many millions of acres of public land they got which did not cost them a cent. Here is your $128,000,000, which never cost anybody a cent except the tax-payers of this country—here is this enormous donation of public lands which never cost anybody anything except the people of the United States' to whom they belong, all invested in this railroad enterprise; and here with this result, with all this owned but 1,400 or 1,500 miles of railroad, and then somehow or other with that small beginning upon which we have a lien and only on which we have a lien, this corporation has grown from 1,500 miles to 4,600 miles, leaving about 3,000 miles clear gain of railroad made by this corporation upon which we have no claim whatever.

The Senator from Massachusetts says they owe for these things. Well, it seems to me they owe for everything. They have never paid for anything. They never paid anything for their 1,500 miles, so far as I know, or very little, and it turns out now, if the statement of the Senator from Massachusetts is correct, that they bought the balance of it on credit and paid nothing for that, and upon the capital furnished by the United States, and probably some little advances—I do not know how much; the Senator from Massachusetts can tell—on this $128,000,000, $64,000,000 from the United States and $64,000,000, the proceeds of mortgage bonds which the United States generously allowed to go ahead of their lien, and their bonds, their claim, and the proceeds of this public land, and probably some small contribution—I do not know how much; the Senator from Massachusetts will be able to tell—they are the owners of this magnificent railroad, if he be correct, of about 3,000 miles, and they have all this because they owe everybody, because they paid nothing, because they bought everything on credit, and now they come before us here as objects of charity and leniency!

Mr. President, I do not want to crush out these roads; I do not want the Government of the United States to become the owner of these roads. I believe that the worst thing that could happen to this Government is to become the owner of a railroad if it is compelled to run it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. We do not want the road, but the money.

Mr. GEORGE. You want the money, and you will never get the money, allow me say, as long as you let the railroads keep it. I know but one way to get it, and that is to make them pay it up and relieve the tax-payers of this country of the burden which otherwise is cast upon them.

That is the way I understand this thing to be. If I am in error about any of it I can be corrected. When the Senator from Vermont was absent, who is the author of the proposition, as I understand it, to require 40 per cent., the Senate voted by a yea-and-nay vote to release it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not the author of the 40 per cent. provision. The House of Representatives by a bill passed in the last Congress, not this one, was the author of the 40 per cent. provision, to which I most cordially agree.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the House of Representatives passed a bill providing for an extension of this debt and the payment of so much, and said that if the company did not accept it, then they should pay 40 per cent., but did not require them to do so if they did accept it. That is what the Senate has agreed to and the Senator from Vermont has agreed to. That is a queer statement by him.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will pardon me for a moment. My friend from Massachusetts has called in question the correctness of my statement. If my friend from New Jersey will please allow me to reply——

Mr. HOAR. I have the floor, Mr. President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Massachusetts says he has the floor. I will wait until he is through.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts to sit down, but if he says he did not release the floor——

Mr. HOAR. I sat down because I supposed the Senator from Mississippi was not through. I understood I was to be recognized after him.

Mr. GEORGE. I am through for the present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts now has the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Now I will yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I beg to be excused. I will take my time.

Mr. HOAR. When I said I thought I had the floor it was not in the least to interfere with the Senator from Vermont making his explanation at any time or manner he chose. It was not to assert any right against him, but because he was appealing to the Senator from New Jersey to yield to him. I hope the Senator will not suppose that I had any purpose of discourtesy.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; I did not understand it in that sense; it is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Then, Mr. President——

Mr. MCPHERSON. Does the Senator from Massachusetts propose to go on?

Mr. HOAR. I want to say a word or two in reply to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], if I can be permitted. The Senator from Mississippi preferred to make his speech under what he spoke of as an illusion, and it might have been spoken of, I think, as a delusion. No single one of the propositions of fact on which he based his argument is correct, as I understand.

Mr. GEORGE. Now, will the Senator——

Mr. HOAR. My friend would not allow me to interrupt him and I ask him to let me state my proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator occupied much of my time while I was on the floor.

Mr. HOAR. In the first place, the Senator from Mississippi affirmed that the property of this company, except so far as it was covered by the United States lien on 1,400 miles of it, was not to be dealt with by the Government like the property of any other debtor. There is a provision in the original act that at the maturity of this debt everything that belongs to the company shall vest in the United States if it is not paid, so that whatever that company acquires, whether it be one thousand or three thousand millions, subject to the debts on which it acquired it, or debts put on it in the course of its business, will then vest in the United States.

Then the Senator says that here are debts due the Government which this road does not pay, and we ought to make them pay it. That is a mistake. There is not one single dollar due to this Government from any of these roads—not one, and will not be until the year 1897, or thereabouts. The United States Government agreed, in consideration of the enormous risk of the original builders of this road, that they would lend them these Government bonds, and they should not be called upon to pay back either principal or annual interest till their maturity at the end of thirty years.

What the Government did by the Thurman act was not to come in as a creditor who had made a bargain and break it, to repudiate their contract with these men—not at all. They said that under our supervising power as a Government we will require you to pay into a sinking fund a sum of money, so that there shall be some preparation toward the payment of your debt at maturity. Now, what is the result of that process? That sinking fund is required by law at this moment to be invested in securities which pay only 2.2 per cent. annually of interest.

As to the money expended on the road, the Senator from Mississippi says they buy everything on credit, and do not pay cash for anything. They find a road that has been built by somebody else with a bond and mortgage, and they buy the equity and pay for it, and have to pay the interest on those bonds, and they have a property which at the present rates at which it sells in the stock market, having a capital stock of $60,000,000, is worth $33,750,000—the Union Pacific Railroad alone at this moment—beyond all the debts that it owes, the Government debts and everything else.

If you will just pass a law you shall do just what you have a mind to, and if you pay off our debt at maturity it is all that we will ask, and not tie up there what they can do with their money; they can take advantage of a favorable condition in the money market and raise the money and pay every cent they owe you before 1897. We do not ask the Government to extend its debt. They will find a new creditor who will let them have money on fifty, sixty, or seventy-five years with 3 or 4 per cent. interest, and pay you, and pay the first-mortgage bonds too.

What you are doing by this 40 per cent. business of yours is to say to this railroad company, "You shall not use your money as you please, as you would let another debtor, as you would have to let him because you could not help yourself; you shall not put it where it serves the public and pays an income, as Mr. Adams shows in his report it does, of from 8 to 10 per cent., but you shall take this amount of money which you are getting 8 or 10 per cent. for now, and for twelve years lock it up where you can get only 2 per cent., and put it into a sinking fund; not that you can pay us anything that is due now, as the Senator from Mississippi thinks, but that you can be ready to pay us in the year 1897."

To do that the Senator says you are only taking 40 per cent. on the 1,400 miles that the United States has a lien on, and leaving them their earnings on all the other 3,000 miles. The Senator is mistaken in that. In calculating the net earnings of the 1,300 miles they are obliged to take every dollar of income which they get from all their other property and put it in, every dollar of it. That is what they do and that is what they have done all along. Now, taking every dollar of it and putting it in, they show you by the figures which I have here, and which are perfectly demonstrable, that they can not have anything left to build a new bridge or put in a new steel rail.

The Senator uses the words "net earnings," as if that were an adequate and proper description of the thing which you are making them pay 40 per cent. on. It is not net earnings; it is what the Thurman act says shall be called for the purposes of this road net earnings; that is, every dollar of money that they get from any quarter except what they have to pay for their operating expenses, for the interest of the first mortgage and the keeping their road in repair; and as the Government officials and the railroad, too, have agreed now for nine years, since the Thurman act passed, the keeping the road in repair only means just what is enough to keep the trains running and not the substituting any new track, or any new material, or any new car, or new bridge, or anything else that the demands of the community require. You are asked to do that just at the time when you are undertaking to perfect in six months a scheme of dealing with this debt which will settle the relations of the road forever, and just at the time when you pass the interstate-commerce bill, with which I have no fault to find here, but which is to utterly reconstruct the relations of this road to the people.

Remember this is not a creditor laying his hand on the debtor's property. It is the guardian of the ward; it is the paternal Government or non-paternal Government saying, "We propose only to make you manage your property reasonably, with reference to the fact that you have a debt coming due in twelve years." That is the only assertion of authority under which this is vindicated at all, and I affirm, Mr. President, on my serious responsibility that there never was a more wicked, unjust, monstrous proposition than this proposition is, if you strip it of the mistakes which have deceived honorable and just gentlemen on this floor and elsewhere, and come to understand it in all its relations.

Here is a railroad that you said you would lend this money to, and they should not pay you until 1897, and now you come in twelve years before, when they have so managed their property that it is worth beyond all their debts, yours and every other's, by the unerring test of the stock-market, $33,750,000, and you say, "Take every single dollar that you want to occupy new territory with against rival lines, every single dollar that you want for an improvement over 4,600 miles of railroad territory, every single dollar that you want to secure increased safety with for passengers, for life and property and character; take every single dollar, and strip yourself of your credit which is necessary to carry on your road and have it hold up its head, and put your money out at 2 per cent. and lock it up for twelve years;" and Senators are going to be frightened into a performance of that kind by anonymous articles in irresponsible New York newspapers, if they do it at all.

There is another thing which my honorable friend from Mississippi totally, though unintentionally, misstated. He says the owners of this property got it out of the United States when they built that road, "these owners," when they built that road between the years 1864 and 1868, getting it entirely completed in 1870. There was some terrible mismanagement, to use no harsher term even than that, and Congress looked into it, and it was proposed by some men to repeal the charter and to have General Grant appoint some commissioners who would run that road for the Government and take possession of it. Congress said no; whatever has been the abuse and misconduct, whatever the risk there may be in the Government debt at the time, then thirty-four years off—it was in 1873 when this investigation took place—the public scandal of having a great trans-continental railroad run by such men as might be appointed, however honest the purpose of the President of the United States may be, would be worse than to lose the whole thing; therefore you may keep your property, and we will not take it away from you. They draughted the law, a remedy which the Supreme Court held to be unconstitutional, and they allowed this stock to remain salable in the market for value. They let them do it, and I have shown that every dollar of that entire stock has changed hands since the year 1880, and is held by the class of persons whom Mr. Adams described in the extract I read.

Now, the new persons bought it with your leave, and paid dollar for dollar for it. The stock was up at 116 when a large portion of these people, on Mr. Adams's assurance, made the purchase, and Jay Gould sold out and cleared out, and they removed the office to Boston, and the stockholders elected the directors, men of standing and character in the business world. Having taken that stock by your leave, which they bought in the open market, they proceeded to pay into the treasury of that road $10,000,000 of new capital to equip it, and it has been done within the last three years.

Mr. GEORGE. Was that paid on stock or on bonds?

Mr. HOAR. It was paid on stock, dollar for dollar, one hundred cents, at one time. Now, is it just, is it honest, is it decent, when the question is before us of what it is reasonable to do with the men who bought the property which you said they might buy and paid their cash for it, dollar for dollar?

The Senator says they are asking us to give them something. Not at all. It is you who are proposing to come in and say, "take this money which is earning you 8 or 10 per cent. and put it where it will get but 2 per cent. and keep it and hold it for a debt which is to fall due in 1897," and they say "that is not after all quite reasonable and honest." A trustee who would do what you ask this Government to do with its ward would be turned out of office by any probate court in the country if he managed the estate as you want to have this managed, sold out property in that way and tied it up; and if he did it to make a fancied personal advantage out of it he would be indictable for embezzlement and sent to the penitentiary. Yet when it is undertaken to discuss this thing on its merits as an honest measure, gentlemen get up and halloo, "these men did so and so in the year of our Lord 1868, twenty years ago."

I say that every one of the fundamental propositions of fact which has led the usually fair-minded Senator from Mississippi to take the position and make the speech which he has taken and made, disappears when it is compared with the record.

Mr. GEORGE. I made most of my speech upon what I understood the Senator from Massachusetts to state. I asked him for the facts. It seems now that I misunderstood him in one point. I understood him to say when I interrogated him that we did not get any income from these 3,000 miles of road upon which we had no lien. I understand him in his last speech to say that we do get an income from that road. But I suppose the Senator will admit that the income we get from that is after they pay all their other debts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes; but if my friend from Mississippi will allow me, if anybody will turn to the report of the Commissioner of Railroads, which I suppose is as good as anybody else's statement——

Mr. GEORGE. That is good authority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He states that we do not get and do not pretend to get anything from the unaided parts of these lines.

Mr. GEORGE. So it appears, and the Senator from Massachusetts was wrong.

Mr. HOAR. Not at all; I deny it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The authority of the Commissioner of Railroads in an official report is perhaps as good as the statement of a Senator.

Mr. GEORGE. I do not intend to detain my eager friend long from his anxious desire to get up and defend these corporations and their conditions, but there is one observation made by the Senator from Massachusetts to which I want to advert. He says these railroads are our wards, and I think he has made that out. All of his reply to me is based upon the idea that it was the duty of the United States to protect these parties against their own improvident acts. For instance, the Senator from Massachusetts says we allowed them to purchase stock. I should like to know by what authority we prevented a free citizen twenty-one years of age, a citizen of Massachusetts, of New York, or of Connecticut, from investing his money just where he pleases.

But then the Senator says that all this cheating and rascality which has been perpetrated in the management and building of this railroad took place twenty years ago, and we ought not to hold the present stockholders responsible. Mr. President, we are not dealing with the stockholders; we are dealing with corporations. They are the same to-day that they were twenty years ago, and if the shrewd, rascally men who owned the stock of these companies twenty years ago were smart enough to sell the stock to other people, it is no reason because these people were deceived by their vendors that the Government of the United States should make good their improvident contracts by levying taxes upon the people of this country.

Mr. McPHERSON. Mr. President, if I can now have the floor for a single moment, I will take it for the purpose of answering some observations made by the Senator from Massachusetts. I had resolved when this resolution came before the Senate that I would enter into a detailed examination and discussion of all the matters appertaining to the conduct of these railroads. It would have taken me several hours to expose many of the things which I think ought to be exposed, and which I trust the commission to be appointed under the resolution will expose, but I am more anxious for the passage of the resolution than for anything else.

I trust that the things I have ascertained, and which to my mind seem an absolute certainty, will be revealed by the commission which it is proposed to appoint. Therefore, I will refrain from entering into an elaborate discussion of the matter here at this late hour, as I wish to reach a vote.

But with regard to some observations of the Senator from Massachusetts, I must be allowed to say a word. He insinuated that this resolution was now before the Senate by reason of persistence on the part of somebody which behind it had some political significance.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, the Senator misunderstood me. I made no such insinuation. I neither referred to him nor to the resolution or anything about it in any such sense. I favor the resolution.

Mr. McPHERSON. I will say that all the persistence that I have had in the matter has been out of pure sympathy for the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has utterly and totally misconceived me. I am very sorry——

Mr. McPHERSON. I think other Senators besides myself so understood him.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I said what I honestly believed, and I think the Senator will understand and appreciate the feeling, that I think the history of this attempt to have this railroad matter settled in some way is the most humiliating thing in the history of our legislation. I made that statement, and said that when we attempted to approach this subject we were surrounded by all these influences, the bulls and bears of the stock market, the anonymous articles in the New York newspapers, the ambition of rival roads, the blackmailing of the corporations, and I did say that when these influences were all in full cry the knees of some Senators seemed to shake, and of some Members of the House of Representatives, but I had not the slightest reference to the Senator from New Jersey or to the resolution, or to anything. On the contrary I think the Senate is going to deal with this question with an absolute contempt for all those influences, and among those I spoke of the desire of great rival roads to get ahead of these lines as one of the disturbing influences of public sentiment.

Mr. McPHERSON. Disclaiming as I do any intention to give it any political direction, I will have nothing further to say on that subject.

I have been earnest, I have been persistent in demanding that this resolution be brought to the attention of the Senate. Sir, the conduct of Congress within the last six months has been the most humiliating in its history. Bills have been brought before the Senate and House of Representatives seeking a settlement with different Pacific railroads on terms which would grant to them, if passed, a larger subsidy than was ever heretofore given to them at any time. If the bill reported by the honorable Senator from Massachusetts, known as the funding bill—as to which I will here and now do him the credit to say that as soon as he discovered its character he immediately withdrew it from the attention of the Senate—if that bill had passed the Senate the stock of the Union Pacific Railroad would have gone up 50 per cent. Why? It contemplated giving them a larger subsidy than the entire amount of the original subsidy bonds.

That bill was reported by the Judiciary Committee, an honorable and intelligent committee, and now that same committee bring before the Senate as an addendum or as a rider to this resolution, which was simply a resolution of inquiry, what? An amendment which applies mainly to one line of railroad, to wit, the Union Pacific. If that amendment had been incorporated into this resolution, the stock of the Union Pacific Railroad in an hour would have fallen 50 per cent.

Now, I want to know why the honorable Senator from Massachusetts charges newspapers in the city of New York with being stock-jobbing newspapers. There is no agency upon earth which has been so influential as the Judiciary Committee of the Senate to enable stock-jobbers to make money; in the first place, on the funding bill, and, in the next place, to bear the stock on the resolution now before the Senate. I have no sympathy with such talk.

There are such things of course as stock-jobbing newspapers. Why not stock-jobbing newspapers as well as stock-jobbing men? But for the Senator from Massachusetts or myself to say that the great influential journals in the city of New York were engaged in a stock-jobbing scheme because they opposed the passage of the funding bill, is to my mind exceedingly unjust. I do not believe they were controlled by any such mercenary motive, nor do I believe that the New York World newspaper (let me single it out as having been most influential of all in exposing the character of the funding bill) is entitled to be called a stock-jobbing newspaper. It seems to me it earned a better title than that, and certainly if this resolution becomes a law and the investigation of these Pacific railroads can be made under the resolution full, thorough, and sufficient, it will reveal to my mind a condition of corruption and extravagance never known before in the history of this country. So much upon that head.

Mr. President, I wish now to say a word in answer to the Senator from Mississippi with respect to the Union Pacific Railroad, and I need not speak of it because the 40 per cent. section has been already stricken out of the bill, and therefore it is not a pertinent subject for discussion; but I will say that as to the branch lines of which he speaks, the Union Pacific Railroad has expended $46,000,000 contrary to law since 1878, since the passage of the Thurman act, in building auxiliary or branch lines, in which the Government of the United States according to Charles Francis Adams's own statement, the president of the road, has not one particle of interest—$46,000,000 contrary to law. Is there no necessity for investigation?

More than this, these auxiliary lines to-day represent a capital of over $30,000 per mile, when it never cost to construct them more than $10,000 per mile. The securities of these roads, partly held as I suspect and as I believe and truly believe this investigatian will prove, by the directors themselves, and partly held in the treasury of the Union Pacific Railroad, do not represent in worth and in value to the Government one-third of their face value.

The entire earnings of those roads during the past year in 1885 and 1886 do not pay one-half the interest of the bonded debt, and yet constructive mileage is given to them, and it is alleged, and I believe it will be proven, that even the coal burned in the engines upon these branch lines, which belong in part to the directors of this road, is taken out of the income of the Union Pacific Railroad, run as it were entirely at the cost of the Union Pacific Railroad.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator——

Mr. McPHERSON. I refuse to yield just now. In a moment I will yield. They are run by the Union Pacific Railroad as a part of its auxiliary system, earning only 50 per cent. of the interest upon their bonds, and the only value those securities have to-day is the value given to them by the indorsement and guarantee of the Union Pacific Railroad. Why, sir, when you come to investigate it you will find a bigger credit mobilier there than there was in the old times.

Now, a single word as to the Central Pacific. I voted to strike out the third section, and I did it for the reason that I do not want to oppress the stockholders of that road. I do not want to make a single particle of new legislation until all the facts that can be revealed through this investigation are brought forward and submitted to Congress upon which to base intelligent action. I wish to know the relations of these railroads to the people, to one another, and to the Government. I wish to know whether the Central Pacific Railroad was organized and constructed as part of a through line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, intended to run in harmony with the Union Pacific and give the Union Pacific its business, the Union Pacific to run in harmony with the Central Pacific and give to that road its business.

That was the intention in the organization. I wish to know whether the present managers of the Central Pacific can turn that road into a purely local road, giving no part of the through business to the Union Pacific; and having no line itself upon which to pay increased net earnings on a line in which the Government has an interest. I wish to know whether the Congress of the United States will permit those two roads to run as local roads and an unfriendly feeling to continue between the two.

Why, sir, as to the Central Pacific road, if this state of things continues for a few years longer you will have nothing but the skeleton left, rusted tracks, and a ruined road-bed. Take, if you please, their own report of the past year, and see what has been used in the repair of the Central Pacific road. It would astonish you what has become of its business. Since the organization of that line it has been in the control of the same parties who control it to-day. For a long time, until the construction of the Southern Pacific Railroad, it took upon its shoulders the weighty burden of carrying the expenses of the unconstructed Southern Pacific. They paid in a few years over $13,000,000 of revenue largely to the Southern Pacific Company for the payment of the interest upon its bonds while it was under construction.

I can not get all the facts, but I have a statement from the Commissioner of Railroads which shows that in a few years they paid out $13,000,000 in revenue to the Southern Pacific system. Why was the Central Pacific Railroad, on which the Government has a lien, compelled to bear the burden of constructing a competing line? The president of that company, in his last report, declares that since that road has been constructed more than 70 per cent. of the entire through business goes over its line. In other words, the Central Pacific nursed through its infancy the Southern Pacific, paid the interest on all the infant's bonds while the road was under construction, and the very moment it was able to stand alone and became a through line of road, the business that belongs to the Government roads was transferred to the Southern Pacific. They even turn the switches and turn the business of the Government road upon the tracks of this competitor.

Mr. President, I should like to go on in this way for four or five hours longer, and the information that I have would be sufficient, I think, to justify the proposed investigation.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to make an observation which he said when I rose before he would allow me to make in a moment. I do not rise to controvert what the Senator says in regard to the turning into the Union Pacific constructive mileage of the acquired roads. I know nothing about it personally. I wish to say, however, that among the communications which have been made to me is one from the present management of the Union Pacific Railroad, in which they say that they would be thankful to have that matter fully investigated, and that it will appear on such investigation that they have only done what is according to the approved and proper railroad usage, for reasons which they state. I am not going to give those reasons, because I concur with the Senator. I suppose if it should turn out that it was a mistake the Senator will be gratified, but if it should turn out that it is right it ought to be exposed. So I agree with him. I merely thought it proper to say that the managers of the road make this claim.

Mr. McPHERSON. We want the investigation, and I wish to assure the Senator from Massachusetts that no man in the world is so unwilling as myself to put on the statute-book cause for any exposure. The only object or purpose I have in view in this whole matter is a public purpose, and in order that when we next proceed to legislate with respect to these railroads we may do it intelligently, we may do it upon the best information which the best commission can give us, and that and that only; and I hope that at the next session of Congress legislation which will be final, so far as it can be, may be made touching the status of these railroads and their relations to the Government. Therefore I oppose the 40 per cent. clause in this resolution because of the shortness of time in which it can be discussed in this House and the other, and because of the other fact that while it did not reach the Central Pacific road at all, it imposed a very heavy penalty upon the Union Pacific, and I did not want to be considered a stock-jobber in these matters. I want to leave these two roads right where they are, and let their stocks be worth only that which the investigation will reveal that they are entitled to as value.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, the pending motion is to strike out the fourth section. The discussion, which has run on for well on to two hours, relates to other subjects, but I do not desire to have the minds of Senators drifted away from the question upon which we are to pass by the next vote. I fear if we go on in this way we shall have a repetition of what has occurred in the past in connection with these roads.

The Senator from Ohio, in the remarks which he submitted this evening, stated that this fourth section was in effect an assault upon the character of the first-mortgage bonds, and that it would have a tendency to depreciate their value in the market. Mr. President, the value of a bond, railroad or otherwise, depends wholly upon the certainty of payment; and if the fourth section shall be retained in this bill, it will only emphasize the certainty of the payment of the first-mortgage bonds. Now, if we are to permit this to pass by, refrain from legislation upon this subject, may we not repeat the mistake that Congress made in past years. Let me recall one or two of them.

In 1872 the attention of the Government was called to the subject of the action of the Union Pacific Company in engaging in the construction of branch lines. In the report of the Government directors for that year I find the following:

In section 6 of the act of July 7, 1862, it is provided that, "after the road is completed, until said bonds and interest are paid"—

Meaning the subsidy bonds—

"at least 5 per cent. of the net earnings of said road shall also be annually applied to the payment thereof."

Here arises an important question: Is the road completed? We think it is, within a fair and reasonable signification of the terms. In our judgment, it has been completed for a period long enough to embrace the two years ending June 30, 1872. The net earnings of the company for those two years are reported as follows:

|---|---|
| For the year ending June 30, 1871 | $3,443,078 78 |
| Total for the two years | 6,585,210 92 |

Five per cent. on this amount would be $329,270.54. But the company claims that, inasmuch as the above shows the net, after merely deducting the operating expenses and that the interest account should be deducted also. There is some force in this position, so far as the interest on the first-mortgage bonds is concerned, as the Government subordinated its lien to that of the holders of the first-mortgage bondholders. The interest on these bonds amounts to about $1,634,220, or, for the two years, $3,268,440. As this is payable in gold, estimating gold at 12 per cent., $892,212.80 should be added to the amount, making an aggregate of $3,660,652.80, which, deducted from the gross net, would still leave $2,925,863.20, on which the Government is entitled to the 5 per cent., and which, on this basis, amounts to $146,273.16. We do not see how it can be reduced below this sum, for all other bonds issued by the company are subordinate to the lien of the Government. If the road is completed, then this sum is due to the Government from the company; if it is not completed, then it is not due.

We have expressed our opinion concerning the question. We would suggest that the attention of the officers of the company be called to this subject, and some definite solution of the question arrived at.

Here it may be well to state, as illustrative of the company's ability to discharge this 5 per cent. claim, that up to August 1, 1872, the Union Pacific Company had furnished toward the construction of the Colorado Central Railroad, in money and material, $269,244.94, besides $35,387.54 for equipment loaned; had advanced to the Utah Northern Railroad, in material, freight, &c., $91,000, and to the Utah Southern Railroad, in material, freight, &c., $99,109.52, or an aggregate of $494,742. We understand that the grand total for all of these roads now amounts to $1,400,000.

Then the Government directors go on to say:

We do not question the wisdom of a policy which tends to secure to the trunk-line the business which the said several roads may command. It could not well afford to have said business diverted from it. The policy, however, should be so ordered as not to interfere with whatever present or future claim the Government may have for reimbursement.

We have herein expressed the opinion that the Union Pacific Railroad Company, properly managed, can be made to meet all just demands upon it, including the Government lien.

The next year this was renewed and the attention of the Government was called to the subject again. These reports where from time to time communicated to Congress. No attention was paid, and this investment went on from that time down to the present. If when this information was furnished the Government by the Government directors and the policy entered upon by the company was taken notice of by Congress, a system of remedial legislation might have been provided which would have carried the company safely through its construction of feeding lines and at the same time protected the Government; but instead of that all the moneys, amounting now to many millions of dollars, have gone from under the lien of the Government, whereas if notice had been taken of this warning in 1872 a scheme of legislative remedial action could have been had which would have allowed the company to have gone on with that policy, to have held subject to the Government lien every dollar that they put in those lines. But Congress having this notice allowed the opportunity to pass, and because of non-action on the part of Congress then under this notice you have the present condition of affairs on your hands to deal with.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And we seem disposed to allow the opportunity to pass now.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. And you are allowing it to pass again; and now when there may be lurking danger of forfeiture, of a failure to meet the liabilities of the company under the first-mortgage bonds you say, "Oh, do not make any provision such as this fourth section suggests; let it go; you may injure the credit or standing of the bonds; wait until the new danger has rounded up into perfection, and then Congress will take hold of the subject and act!"

Mr. President, the time to act is now, having failed to act in 1872; and it is no hardship to the company, no injury to them, no detriment to the public interest to provide in advance the means whereby the President may step in and save the Government from any impending harm. Therefore I hope this fourth section will not be stricken out of this amendment.

Mr. VANCE. Mr. President, the investigation which Congress proposes to make of the conduct of officials directly or indirectly connected with the public most undoubtedly should be made, but the apostle speaks of a repentance that is not to be repented of, and what we desire in this case is an investigation that needs not to be investigated.

The history of this railroad corporation may be said to have been conceived in sin and brought forth in iniquity. One of the most enormous public scandals connected with the financial history of this country clusters around the beginning of that incorporation; and after it had flourished and stunk in the nostrils of all honest men for a great number of years, they resorted to a modern method to restore it to credit. They chose a new president whose name itself should be synonymous with all that was purity and should remove all cloud of suspicion from any of its transactions thereafter. They sought for that name in the mugwumpian altitude where Mr. George William Curtis and Mr. Carl Schurz are supposed to be riding sideways, because there is not one among them masculine enough to ride astraddle, upon a golden cloud with harps in their hands and singing songs of the purity of the new political Zion.

Charles Francis Adams became the president of that company, and thenceforward everything that was supposed to be crooked or infested with a tortuous quality was to be banished forever from its transactions.

It so happened a few weeks ago during the time we were discussing the interstate-commerce bill, that I came across a newspaper published in Chicago, the Tribune, with a marked article on that subject, and as I had no occasion to interpose my eloquence in behalf of that bill, I put that paper into my drawer, where it has remained until this good day. I pulled it out to-night, and I find one of the transactions characteristic of this new and purified civil-service-reform administration of the Union Pacific Railroad.

It seems that there were certain rolling mills, steel mills, or whatever you call those institutions which are devoted to the manufacture of railroad iron, in the city of Chicago that made a contract with a new railroad company in the State of Colorado, called the Colorado Midland, to furnish it 15,000 tons of rails for its road, provided that a reasonable charge could be obtained for the transportation of those rails from Chicago to where they were to be laid down. It was ascertained that, by an arrangement with the Colorado Transit Association, the Union Pacific had entered into an agreement to charge four times the regular price charged to all other customers for all rails coming over its road to supply this Colorado Midland, which was to be a rival of the Denver and Rio Grande and, to some extent, of the Union Pacific. An earnest appeal was made to the officials, the managers of the Union Pacific, to reduce that rate one-half, that is to say, just double what was charged to other customers of that road.

That was refused, and then the agent of the mills appealed to the immaculate Charles Francis Adams, the president of the company, and reminded him of his virtuous professions in regard to honest transportation rates while he was commissioner of railroads of the State of Massachusetts. Mr. Charles Francis Adams got behind the Colorado Traffic Association, vulgarly called the pool, and said he had not time to answer such impertinent inquiries, and referred the letter of the agent of the mills to the pooling agent. The amount of freight which was thereby refused because the tariff was prohibitory and the rails could not be bought in Chicago and shipped over that road, I see it stated in this article to which I refer to have been $250,000.

Now, Mr. Charles Francis Adams was president of the road that was indebted to the Government of the United States for the aid without which it probably never could have been built, and as there was an act of Congress requiring 25 per cent. of the net earnings of that road to be set aside to meet that indebtedness, and as Mr. Charles Francis Adams was an immaculate man and an agent of this company, and to that extent the agent of the Government, had he any right to refuse $250,000 in cash in which the Government of this country was in part interested?

More than one-half of it, it is stated, was fair profit. In the language of the Senator from Massachusetts, was that fair, was that honest, was that decent? It strikes me that it was not; and, however great the reputation of Mr. Adams for integrity and uprightness may have been, and may be yet, for all I know, I say that that transaction was in keeping not with the record of Mr. Adams as commissioner of railroads for the State of Massachusetts, but rather in connection with those iniquities which characterized the beginning of this corporation. And what is worse, it is alleged to be true that one reason why the pool was resorted to to avoid the carrying of this freight at a reasonable rate was that the Union Pacific Railroad Company was interested in a rolling-mill in the city of Denver, Colo., and this prohibitory tariff rate enabled that mill perhaps to supply this road with rails, or at least gave it a chance.

All these things are charged, and I have not seen them denied anywhere. Let that be a warning to all those who trust too much in those men who make high professions of their superior honesty and integrity. Let me commend to all such the homely wisdom of the negroes of my country, expressed in the song which I have often heard them sing:

De bigger dat you see de smoke
De less de fire will be,
And de leastest kind of possum
Climbs de biggest kind o' tree.

De darky at de ole camp-ground
Who kin loudest sing and shout,
Is agwine to rob some hen-roost
Afore de week is out.

[Laughter.]

Mr. STANFORD. Mr. President, it is not my wish to detain the Senate at this late hour, but I desire to offer an amendment and to precede that amendment by a few remarks.

I want the investigation to be so thorough that if afterwards Congress should think it wise to legislate they may do so with the greatest possible intelligence on the subject.

Preceding any remarks that I may make, I desire to read something in regard to a report that was made in reply to a Senate resolution on March 6, 1884, in which it is stated in answer to interrogatories:

First. The Central Pacific Railroad Company has fully and promptly complied with the requirements of said act.

That was in 1884, in answer to a Senate resolution. Later, August 6, 1885, this is the answer from the Commissioner of Railroads:

SIR: In reply to your communication of even date, requesting to be informed whether the Central Pacific Railroad Company has complied with the requirements of the act of May 7, 1878, to date, I have the honor to state that as far as this office is advised, the said company has fully and promptly complied with all said requirements.

It is sufficient to say that up to 1885 the Central Pacific Railway Company had met all its obligations to the Government. To my knowledge there has never been a single complaint on the part of the Government of any failure on the part of the Central Pacific Railroad Company to comply with every requirement of the law.

I would like also that the investigation should go to the extent of ascertaining what the Government has paid out for the transportation of freights, troops, and expenditures of every kind, for transportation, say from 1850 to 1869, the time of the completion of the road, that it may form a basis of estimating what advantage the construction of these roads has been to the Government.

I should like to have a comparison of the cost of the construction of these roads with what might have been the cost at any time within a perior of five years before their commencement or of five years subsequent to their completion.

The Central Pacific Railroad was commenced two years earlier than the Union Pacific. It was commenced in the midst of the war. It received the bonds of the Government at a time when they were worth in gold, the money which was used on the Pacific Coast, only 40 cents on the dollar; but on the whole we averaged, I think, a little over 60 cents, and the interest that was piling up against us was used as credit and money was not then as cheap as it is now. We pushed forward at a time when materials were high. We paid at one time as high as $60 a ton freight to get material out there where the road was to be built. Then for war insurance high rates always prevailed.

The result was, however, that we gave to the use of the Government the road seven years earlier than the contract required, for it was a contract under which the railroad company was organized. The act of Congress required a contract with the Pacific railroads, which was made and upheld. We have lived up to the contract literally in every respect.

I should like further to ascertain whether there has been legislation calculated to impair the business and earning capacity of the road, whether by the States or the General Government.

This pioneer road received the bonds under such circumstances, and when they were of such value as I have indicated. It runs through the poorest country in the United States. Very soon after the road was constructed Congress gave to three different railroad companies twice the amount of land through a better country than was given to the pioneer road which was built under such circumstances.

If this road does not earn the money that was anticipated, what was the cause of it? Who was disappointed and who are the sufferers? Other lines of road have been aided by Congress through a better country to the extent of forty-eight sections of land to the mile.

These are circumstances that it seems to me ought to be taken into consideration in considering this matter. To the Central Pacific Railroad Company I have done my duty faithfully, and I think it will appear that they made fair contracts with others, and at the same time the company always endeavored to take care of itself.

I am a little hoarse by reason of a cold and will say no more but ask that the amendment I offer be read by the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting, after the word "premises," in line 139, page 10:

The commissioners shall also ascertain the average cost per annum of Government transportation in the regions now traversed by the Pacific railroads between the year 1850 and the completion of said roads, and also the average cost per annum since such completion and what additional facilities have been furnished to the Government and the people by said roads.

Also to inquire what discount the Pacific Railroad and its several branches were forced to make in disposing of the bonds guaranteed by the Government to obtain the gold coin which was the currency of the country through which the greater part of said roads passed. Also to ascertain the comparative cost of construction of said roads as compared with what they would have cost with the prices of labor and commodities prevailing five years preceding or five years subsequent to the completion of said roads.

Also to inquire whether or not the Pacific Railroad was completed in less time than was allowed by law, and if so how much less time and if the United States was benefited thereby. Also to inquire if either of the Pacific railroad companies have been embarrassed and the earning capacity impaired by antagonistic local or State legislation. Also to inquire if the United States, since the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies accepted the terms proposed by Congress for the construction of the Pacific Railroad, has granted aid in land for building competing parallel roads to the said Pacific Railroad, and if so how many such roads and to what extent such competing lines have impaired the earning capacity of the Pacific railroads.

Also to inquire if the United States have contracts with the branch roads controlled by either of said Pacific roads for carrying United States mails, and, if so, what service has been performed by them, and what money, if any, has been paid for said service, and what remains due and unpaid, and if the United States by failing to pay for said mail service has embarrassed said railroad companies or either of them in paying their indebtedness to the United States.

Also to inquire if the several Pacific railroad companies have complied with the provisions of the act "to alter and amend an act entitled 'An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes,' approved July 1, 1862; also to alter and amend an act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of the said first-named act," commonly known as the Thurman act, and if not, in what particulars they have failed to comply. Also to inquire what sums the Pacific railroads and their branches can severally pay annually on account of their indebtedness to the United States without imposing such burdens upon the people and particularly upon the localities through which the roads pass, as to retard the development of the country.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts if the substance of that is not already embodied in the resolution of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I have not examined it enough to be able to answer that question. The resolution reported by the committee requires the report of any other matters "which may be ascertained or come to their knowledge in regard to said companies, respectively." That unquestionably would include every fact which would bear on the justice or expediency of the action of the Government.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Then it would be possible for any individual or any interested party——

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from California prefers to enumerate some special matters that he thinks ought to be inquired into. I can not at the present moment see any impropriety in it.

Mr. MCPHERSON. On the application of any party desiring investigation of this character to the commission they will be fully qualified under the present resolution to make such examination as the Senator from California desires.

Mr. HOAR. The whole investigation proposed by the Senator from California, if I took it in as it was read, could be brought within a very brief compass, and I think it is embraced already, unless perhaps the point as to the effect of the competing lines on the business of these lines may require some consideration. I am not enough of a railroad man to know about that.

Mr. STANFORD. I think it will not be very difficult.

Mr. HOAR. I do not see any objection to it.

Mr. STANFORD. There is scarcely any freight that goes across the continent by rail that could not be carried by the Union and Central Pacific Railways had the other roads not been built. I do not think there will be any difficulty in ascertaining that. I do not oppose a full examination. I do not say that some of these points may not be covered by the resolution if the commissioners were so disposed, but I want to make sure that the information shall be had.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from California is an amendment to the second section, while the pending motion is a motion to strike out the fourth section. However, with the consent of the Senator from New Jersey, the Chair will put the question on the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I think we had better take the vote first on striking out the fourth section.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, suppose we leave the region of poetry and exuberance a little while and come back to the statutes of the United States and see exactly where we are.

The first thing to know is as to the propriety of the business we are entering upon beyond the matter of investigation, which, if it had not been proposed by people who want to get at the truth, I should have thought was a device of the railways to put off coming to a final determination of this business one way or the other, and find out exactly what is the situation of these companies and the United States, not only as a creditor, but as the supreme authority having the legislative power and the legislative duty of protecting the creditors of every corporation that it creates.

Now, let us see first where the United States stands as it respects its securities for the advances that it made. I have here the statute itself of 1862, which is precisely like that of 1864 as far as these matters are concerned, except that by the act of 1864 the first-mortgage bonds, as they now are, of these two railway companies were then second-mortgage bonds, but they were transposed and advanced over the United States subsidy bonds by the act of 1864. But so far as it respects the mortgage, the lien, the right of the United States for security for the forty, or fifty, or sixty million dollars of its advance, the act of 1862 will answer my purpose, as I happen to have it before me.

Let us see on what property the security of the United States rests as to the Union and the Central Pacific Railway Companies. I am speaking now chiefly of the Union Pacific because it is true, as the Senator from California has said, that the Central Pacific has at all times done everything that the statutes of the United States required it to do. Whether it had an offset or whatever, it obeyed the law and awaited its time to get the money that it might otherwise have applied back again. What does this act provide as to the security of the United States? The United States shall issue bonds, &c.:

The issue of said bonds and delivery to the company shall ipso facto constitute a first mortgage on the whole line of the railroad and telegraph, together with the rolling-stock, fixtures, and property of every kind and description, and in consideration of which said bonds may be issued; and on the refusal or failure of said company to redeem said bonds, or any part of them, when required so to do by the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the provisions of this act, the said road, with all the rights, functions, immunities, and appurtenances thereunto belonging, and also all lands granted to the said company by the United States, which, at the time of said default, shall remain in the ownership of the said company, may be taken possession of by the Secretary of the Treasury for the use and benefit of the United States: Provided, This section shall not apply to that part of any road now constructed.

It took in by provision some roads in some State, I believe. Now then, the road which Congress authorized this company to build was, as it has turned out when it is planted on the face of the earth, a road from Omaha to Ogden—I am now speaking of the Union Pacific—and it was nothing else. The bonds of the United States, to the amount of the dollars that I may mention by and by, were issued upon the strength of that security and that rolling-stock and the fixtures that belonged to those 1,034 miles of road as now constructed.

Then there was the Kansas Pacific branch, as it was called, which was part of the same system in this incorporation, on which for 365 miles, or whatever the distance was, bonds of the United States were also issued, which I will come to by and by. There was our security for this money advanced for the building of the road.

Now the question is whether under the act of 1878, called the Thurman act, the 25 per cent. of net earnings is to be computed upon and taken out of the earnings and gains and profits and receipts of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and the Central Pacific Railroad Company for all the other lines in which they are interested besides these main lines.

Mr. MORGAN. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the Senator whether or not section 5 of the act of incorporation does not cover all the roads that may be in the ownership of this company at the time of the default made in the payment of the bonds, and whether this statutory mortgage does not extend over all the road that it may own at that time and subsequently acquired, being "all the rights, functions, immunities, and appurtenances belonging * * * at the time of said default."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am extremely sorry to say that according to the decisions of the Supreme Court as I understand them—and I am afraid they are right in point of law—it does not, and I am extremely sorry to say for the interests of the tax-payers of the United States that so far as I know not a single one of what are called these branch roads and extensions belongs either to the Central Pacific or the Union Pacific Railroad corporation as such. They are separate corporations, the stock of which is held or controlled by these corporations of which they have perpetual leases so that the lien of the United States under this statutory mortgage, when you come to bring it down to judicial determination if the bonds were due yesterday and there was a foreclosure to-day, will be the right of the United States to foreclosure upon the line of road from Omaha to Ogden, to take the Union Pacific which is enough for my purpose to illustrate this matter, or if you take the Central Pacific from Ogden to Sacramento and perhaps taking in the Western Pacific with which it was consolidated going down towards and perhaps to San Francisco, but not the vast system of State railways that the Central Pacific got the control and real ownership and possession of which were not under the mortgage at all.

That being the state of the case let us see how much money was paid out and how much land was paid out on that kind of security. I have the report of the Railroad Commissioner, who stands impartial between the tax-payers and these corporations, for 1885 in my hands, and then

I have later that of 1886, which does not state differently at all on this question of how the matter stands.

We find by this report that in respect of the Union Pacific Railroad Company the United States has issued its own bonds to the amount of $27,236,512; that interest accrued and not yet paid by the United States because the coupons have not been presented, amounts to $817,095.36; that the interest already paid by the United States to the 1st of July 1885—and this report was made up to that date—was $27,409,136.49 Out of that is to be taken, according to this tabular statement, for transportation and cost of the 5 per cent. of the net earnings in the first place, $10,647,579.36, and the 5 per cent. of the net earnings reserved in the Treasury, $283,162.99, making a balance of interest paid by the United States, besides the $817,095.36 of outstanding coupons yet to be paid, $16,478,394.14.

So, as the Commissioner states it, the state of the accounts between the United States and the Union Pacific Railroad Company on the 1st of July, 1885, sums up in this way: The total debt of the Union Pacific, including the Kansas Pacific, is $33,539,512 of principal; accrued interest on the bonds that we are paying the interest on $35,111,924.94, making on the 1st of July, 1885—there being still twelve years on an average of interest yet to be paid which would make 72 per cent. of the original $33,000,000 of the debt, $68,651,436.94.

Mr. BUTLER. All interest?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, that is principal and interest down to the 1st of July, 1885. There is twelve years of interest yet on $33,000,000, which would be, at 6 per cent., 72 per cent. on $33,000,000, which, in round numbers, is three-quarters of that, which would be about $24,000,000 more, which added to your $68,000,000, leaving off the odd hundred thousands, would make $92,000,000, that within ten years from this date will be due to the United States from this corporation for actual cash that the United States will have paid out.

Now, what else did it get? Let us see. The land question is stated in the same report. The net proceeds of land sales, after deducting all expenses of management, commission, &c., to December 31, 1884, were $25,668,806.65. Add that twenty-five million dollars to the ninety-odd millions that I had before and you have, in round numbers, just about $120,000,000 of cash that this company will have had from the United States.

"The estimated value of the unsold lands is $13,602,696.25."

Take that to be a fair estimate of that value and add that to your $120,000,000, and you have $134,000,000 that the people of the United States have paid into this thousand miles of road from Omaha to Ogden.

Mr. SAWYER. They take out a percentage of the amount earned for carrying the mails.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not the subject I am now speaking of. I am speaking of the money of the people of the United States and its property which has been turned over to this company.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like very much to get a little information upon one point, if it does not disturb the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Because it seems to me that his statement and the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts are very wide apart.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am reading from the official record.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish to know whether the 25 per cent. of the net profits required to be paid in under the Thurman act is taken from the earnings of the Union Pacific Railroad proper, that is to say the 1,000 miles, or whether it is taken from the earnings of the Union Pacific Railroad and its various branches?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a point I was just about to come to.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to get information on that point, because it seems to me that the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Massachusetts differ very widely about it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am taking this step by step, slowly and carefully, leaving out the glamor of the eloquence of my friend from Massachusetts; and the fact that the stock in this corporation has changed hands, as stock some times does in all corporations—it is said to have changed hands, and I dare say it has changed hands—does not affect the question. I am first trying to find out how much cash and property in cash value (but, nevertheless, it is all cash except $25,000,000 out of $125,000,000) the people of the United States have put into these thousand miles of railroad, because we have not put in cash for anything else than the thousand miles or the 1,300 miles if you take in the Kansas division. I am only on that point now.

There should be taken out of that all that has been saved in the sinking fund, amounting to a million or two or three as to the Union Pacific, to be credited off against that on the 1st of July, 1885.

Now we come to the question of what the 25 per cent. means. I am not going into any denunciation of these railways, because they are of great public benefit beyond all question. I am only asking the Senate of the United States to see whether it has any duty to perform in respect of protecting the interests of the people for whom we are trustees, just as Mr. Charles Francis Adams and his coadjutors are trustees of the people that they represent.

Let us see where this 25 per cent. of the act of 1878 is drawn from. Again I take the official report, not the statement of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, or of Mr. Charles Francis Adams, though I do not think Mr. Adams would state it, and my friend from Massachusetts, if he meant to say that this 25 per cent. is calculated upon the earnings of these side lines, is misled as I think, but if he turns out to be right I shall be glad to know it and act accordingly. But here is the official report, and that is all I know about it that I care to state at this present moment; here is the official report for 1885, and then for 1886, which states, in substance, the same thing, which speak of how this 25 per cent. is got.

It appears that the first question arose, according to this report, on the question of the Kansas Pacific, which stood to this act in exactly the same way and was consolidated with the Union Pacific. The Kansas Pacific was not aided for its entire length, although it was one single line from Kansas City to Denver. Although it was one single line, it did not get under the force of these acts of 1862 and 1864 bonds for the whole length of the line, but only to the one hundredth meridian, and that left out about one-third of the whole length of it and gave only 300 or 400 miles of aided line, although it was one single line.

Mr. BUTLER. Did it get land?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, it got land and got money, too. The Commissioner says as to that in respect of footing up what are their net earnings, &c.:

The mode of keeping the accounts of the Kansas Pacific road does not give an approximation to the actual net earnings of its "unaided" part—

Referring to what I have explained—

5 per cent. of which is due to the Government.

Under the original act 5 per cent. of the net earnings, and the act of 1878 only speaks of net earnings in precisely the same sense.

The business of that part of the road is very much greater than that of the "unaided" part, but the accounts are stated as if they were equal, and the net earnings of the whole road are divided between its two portions in proportion to their length. This has been giving the Government far less than its dues. This could be corrected by making the accounts exhibit the actual earnings and expenses of the "aided" part of this road, as was done, according to records left by Commissioner French, from November 21, 1876, to May 31, 1879. If the statements of account left by him are correct, arrearages of the "5 per cent." payments for sixteen or seventeen years are due the Government, and proportionally increased payments in future years. Those accounts and the names authenticating them, S. T. Smith, auditor, and H. C. Clements, assistant and acting auditor, are in print.

In the suit in the Court of Claims, Nos. 11901, 12515, 14339, brought by the Union Pacific Railway Company against the United States, the company's definition of "operating expenses" was accepted by the court, which awarded to it $2,910,124.08.

The court decided also—

This I beg Senators to listen to, if they care anything about it, if this is a matter of sufficient importance, if the people have any interest in this question—

The court decided also that the Government can retain the compensation for transportation over the "aided roads" only. A contrary decision is published by the Secretary of the Treasury in a circular dated September 11, 1885.

The upshot of that was that the courts overruled what the executive officers undertook to maintain, that the net income mentioned in the act of 1878 was to be drawn from all their operations instead of from the very aided lines that lands and bonds were given to; and the courts decided against the United States, and held that the net income was to be computed only upon the traffic of the lines that were aided by the bonds and the lands of the Government, and therefore, as I understand it—and if I turn out to be wrong I shall be as glad as anybody to be corrected, for I only want the truth—and if I am right in this official information the 25 per cent. that is paid into the sinking fund and which makes the sinking fund so small is derived only from the traffic and the income of the thousand miles from Omaha to Ogden—I speak in round numbers, of course—and of the three hundred and odd miles from Kansas City towards Denver, and on the Central Pacific from Ogden to Sacramento, and then on the Western Pacific, which is also part of the aided contrivances and which is consolidated with the Central Pacific for a few miles—I do not know how many—going down towards San Francisco. So this 25 per cent. that is now required to be paid is not a penny of it drawn from the traffic of any of these outside branch lines, and if you increase it to 40 per cent. it is not drawn from it, and if you increase it to 50 it is not drawn from it.

Now the question is, where is the injustice in this, supposing the United States was not a creditor, but was the sovereign power that had created these corporations, whose first duty it is to preserve their funds for the payment of their creditors? What becomes of the 75 per cent. that is now left in the hands of the corporations?

My friend from Massachusetts says they can not build a new bridge. If he will look at the statements of the Railroad Commissioner, who is supposed to know something about it, he will find that hundreds of thousands of dollars are paid for new bridges, according to some of these yearly reports, depending on their condition, great sums of money are paid for steel rails and all that sort of thing, and the Supreme Court has decided, and it decided rightly, just as the law of 1878 said, that everything that was necessary to keep the roads up to a state of first-rate condition for the duties that they were organized to perform was included in "operating expenses," and that no income should be computed until their lien paramount to the United States was provided for by paying the interest due upon that.

What became of the balance of the 75 per cent.? For some years after this act of Congress was passed, and which denounced penalties against any director or officer of the company who, until they met the obligations of the United States and to the creditors by paying into the sinking fund, should declare any dividend, the companies proceeded year after year to declare dividends, and to pay them, and but for this statute they might do it; it was "net," everything to carry on the road and keep it in the best possible condition was authorized to be drawn out before the 25 per cent. was computed, and it was drawn out, and then that being computed and the 25 per cent. paid in or not paid in, as it was not, the balance was divided among the stockholders; and I will assume that every stockholder was a widow, and that every other stockholder, to use a phrase which is exuberant, was an orphan and innocent, paid 200 per cent. to buy their stock, what of it?

What right has a widow to wrong her creditors? What right has an orphan to wrong his creditors or her creditors? I do not understand it. I am in favor of the widow—not that I wish anybody's husband to die; I am in favor of orphans—not because I wish anybody's father or mother to die; but I do not quite understand on what principle it is that widows and orphans and all the other people who are supposed to be represented by Mr. Charles Francis Adams are entitled to be allowed by Congress to go on year by year as they are quite likely to do—and they have done it for many years—to take money that belongs to their creditors and put it into their own pockets.

Mr. BUTLER. If it will not disturb the Senator—because I want information—I wish to ask whether I am to understand, as the upshot of his opinion or investigation, that the entire profits of the unaided parts of these railroads go into the pockets of the stockholders?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. And not a dollar into the 25-per-cent. fund?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not a dollar of it into the 25 per cent. fund.

Mr. BUTLER. That is a very important fact.

Mr. STANFORD. The Central Pacific Company has now about $3,000,000 in the sinking fund for the payment of their first-mortgage bonds, something over $3,000,000 in the Government Treasury that does not increase at all by interest.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a question of convenience. We are now on the question of where this money comes from, and what becomes of it. We are not on the question of the wisdom of the investment in the sinking fund. That is not open.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator allow me to make an inquiry?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Is there any Senator here who has a chestnut bell?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now I will proceed, Mr. President.

So I repeat according to the information I have—and if I turn out to be wrong, I shall be most glad to be corrected—not a single penny of the 25 per cent. that is now paid into the Treasury of the United States for the benefit of whom it may concern is drawn from the traffic of any of these lines except that line of road in respect of which the bonds were issued and the lands granted, and not a single penny therefore, of course, of the other 75 per cent., which with the 25 per cent. makes the 100, has any relation to their earnings outsides.

If you go on with this report, that I do not take the time to read, you will see that it is stated just what the sum is on each one of these roads, the aided part of the line, figuring up the sum that will make 25 per cent. So unless the Commissioner of Railroads is either an utter idiot or a perfectly dishonest man in sending his official reports to the Congress of the United States, it is not open to dispute that every penny of money that is gained by these roads in respect of lines that are not within the millions of subsidy of cash along its line, as from Omaha to Ogden and from Kansas City the three or four hundred miles where the Kansas Pacific went, and from Ogden to Sacramento, and then the little bit of Western Pacific, has no relation to any of these accounts at all, and anybody who will read them can not fail to see it because it is stated so; the figures are footed up, and the 25 per cent. is computed.

Now, what becomes of the other 75 per cent.? I repeat that year after year after the act of 1878 was passed the Union Pacific Railroad Company, composed of stockholders of widows and orphans, and so on, and having directors of the highest possible respectability, failed to pay in what the act of 1878 required, and proceeded to declare dividends and pay them to the stockholders.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him a moment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator said just now that if he made any misstatement he would be glad to be corrected, and I think he made unwittingly a misstatement in answer to the Senator from South Carolina, who asked if all above 25 per cent. now passed into the pockets of the stockholders, and the Senator said yes; and also when he stated—though he stated the fact with literal correctness—that there was a dividend year after year when they did not pay what was due. There has not been a dividend paid to the stockholders for several years. All the earnings have gone into the improvement of the property.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will only kindly allow me to go on, I think he will be satisfied when I get through.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator had invited the correction almost by an earnest request that it should be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not quite understand it in that way, but I do not in the least object to the interruption. But the interruption of my friend relates to a little later date and to a little different disposition of this money.

Mr. HOAR. I will interrupt the Senator with but one sentence more. The failure to make that payment years ago grew out of a dispute as to the amount.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is a matter of argument, and I must be permitted to go on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senator from Vermont declines to be further interrupted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator will kindly allow me to state my case.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator asked to be interrupted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not ask for a repetition of the argument of my friend from Massachusetts to which we all listened with so much delight. If I have misstated a fact by perversion or inversion or conversion or any other kind of version, I shall be glad to be corrected; but I am not willing at this late hour of the night to allow my friend from Massachusetts to repeat as part of my speech the delightful observations which he has already made to the Senate. I should be glad to be heard for a few minutes on my own account.

Mr. HOAR. That is unworthy of the Senator and of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did say to my friend from South Carolina that the 75 per cent. went into the pockets of the stockholders. Very likely I was incorrect about that, for a good many of the net earnings of corporations that are net earnings do not quite get into the pockets of the stockholders. It may be that I overstated that a little. I am not sure that it all went into the stockholders' pockets, but it was net earnings all the same.

In the next place, supposing it was all honest, or that it did not go into the pockets of the stockholders, but went into speculative enterprises, building branch lines under other corporate names, &c., and for the benefit of the stockholders, or else the money was embezzled by the officers when the stockholders ought to have had it; but year after year, I repeat, after the passage of the Thurman act, the Union Pacific Railroad Company did not obey it, and proceeded to declare dividends when the statutes of the United States said if they did they should suffer punishment, and the administration—a Republican one, too—in some way or other failed to bring them to time, as I suppose this Congress is altogether likely to fail to do anything whatever, which is exactly what all these railroads want, and we shall go on again, year by year, without taking any single step in advance.

At least three or four years ago the matter came to the knowledge of the Committee on the Judiciary that the Union Pacific was not obeying this statute, and had been for some one, two, three, four, five, or six year sdeclaring and paying dividends; whether it paid all the 75 per cent. that was left or not, I do not know; and that committee was rather disposed, Republican though it was, to see if it was possible to have the laws of the United States obeyed by a great corporation, whose president was a very eminent man, and whose stockholders were widows and orphans. We made considerable of a stir on the subject in a quiet way, and the result was, without trying to do the almost impossible thing of getting the two Houses of Congress to do anything about it, that we got a little more than three-quarters of a million of dollars paid into the Treasury, and it is there yet, I suppose, a part of the surplus or part of something. After that time it became to be a serious question whether it would be advisable for the directors of the Union Pacific Railroad Company to declare any more dividends.

A reform administration was about to come in when it was possible that a perverse disobedience of law might possibly be followed by some punishment, and it may have happened also—and that was probably the truth—that the income had fallen off, and it was not either convenient or possible to have a large amount of net earnings to be divided among the stockholders, although no 25 per cent. could be paid in, which was not to be got until all the interest upon the debt paramount to that of the United States was paid, until the road upon which the United States had any lien or mortgage or right whatever was kept up into its best condition, and all that was attended to. Whatever was left 25 per cent. of it was to be paid into the sinking fund for the benefit of all the creditors of the concern according to their rights when we should come to the end. That is where it stood.

Now what, since the time they stopped paying dividends, has become of the 75 per cent. clear net earnings, I confess I do not know. I assume that the directors have disposed of it, not having paid dividends, in some suitable and proper way. I have no suspicion to express, no inquiry to make. It is their affair, if they obey the law as far as it goes, what they did with the other 75 per cent.

Why should not this corporation out of this net income of the aided part of its lines, and no other, do something more than appropriate 25 per cent. of the net earnings for the benefit of its creditors, and advance 15 per cent. to 40, leaving them still 60 either for dividends or for enterprises as they may please, and thus accumulate and not lose but save, to meet their inevitable obligations to become due in 10 years, amounting to in round numbers $200,000,000; or are they to be left free to dispose of this clear net balance of cash in such a way as they please, and let the beast—I will not say that other individual, because nobody in the Senate would know who I meant—"take the hindmost?"

My friend from Massachusetts says it would injure the credit of the company to be compelled to save its funds for the benefit of its creditors. That is not the way we understand it in the rural country where I live. We generally think that a man who saves his funds to pay his debts is rather benefiting his creditors, but it may be different in Massachusetts. I can not say. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, this matter of an increase of the 25 per cent. is not new. It is more than two years ago—and I have got the bill before me—that the House of Representatives passed a bill that one of these companies should pay 55 and the other 35 per cent. into the sinking fund on some idea of what they thought was the different capability of saving money for the benefit of creditors.

Then they repeated it in a later session, and then when at last it came to the consideration of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate two or three years ago—I am not particular about the date—on the question of providing a final settlement of this matter with these companies, so that the contentions as to how much was net earnings, which has now been settled by the courts, as to how much should be allowed to the companies for mail transportation, there being a wide difference of opinion about that under the peculiar phraseology of the charter in one case and the general law of Congress in another, and therefore there was a continual squabble between the Department and the companies in really settling the exact sum that was to be allowed to the companies for service to the Government, and therefore as to the exact sum that was to be paid in to make up the 25 per cent. of the whole of the net earnings, and so the question of a long extension was brought forward to end it all up. They were to pay so much a year, and the United States were to have a mortgage not only on what we have now in that case, but upon everything else they should have, by a new contract that should be a mortgage they should make upon every asset of every kind.

Then the Committee on the Judiciary, so far as I remember, did not design to propose. I have no right to speak about it, and perhaps I am wrong in saying there was not any design, but at any rate I believe we passed through the Senate once a bill, or at any rate we reported it, providing that if this settlement was not effectuated then and there within the three months or the six months provided, this sum to be paid in out of the net earnings should be raised to 40 per cent., but nobody thought we were plundering anybody, or doing injustice to the widow or the orphan.

Now we have reported to this Congress, at this session or the last, no matter which, through my honorable friend from Massachusetts, a similar scheme for a settlement, which by accident—I must say in justice to my friend from Massachusetts, without any fault of his—got some words into it which made it unjust to the United States in respect of the method of computing how much was due. I repeat it was no fault of my friend from Massachusetts at all, but it was an accident, so that the computation of the sum that finally they would give their notes for was not correct.

That led my friend from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] and other people to suppose that there was some awful secret contrivance about it to aid the railroad, which was very unjust to the committee and to the Senator from Massachusetts who reported it. But in that we provided, if I am not mistaken again, that if this thing could not be accomplished and finished up so that it must run on as it was, we ought to have saved up for the creditors of these corporations during this intervening time 15 per cent. more than we did. That is the whole of the story.

I believe I am right in the statements I have made, because I have made them from these official reports, in respect to where the 25 per cent. comes from, and so on, of the Commissioner of Railroads, about which there can not as I believe be the slightest dispute, and about which I believe Mr. Charles Francis Adams, if he stood up here at the bar of the Senate to-day, would say that I have stated it truly, and that they have never paid in or the Government asked them to pay in any per cent. of the earnings of the line except from Omaha to Ogden and that part of the Kansas Pacific which was aided. Yes, they were asked to pay in on more than was aided, but they denied the right to do it and the courts decided we had no right to compel it. So that is where we stand.

I do not wish to do anything in the least unjust to these companies, but I feel bound as representing as a trustee all the creditors of these corporations, the people of the United States and all their later creditors who are below us, to say that this clear sum of net earned money which is either to be divided among stockholders or kept by the corporation or invested in new enterprises shall be saved for whom it may concern until we can come to a solution of this business.

That is where I stand.

Mr. HOAR. I am very sorry to detain the Senate even a moment at this time of night, but I think I ought to allude to what I desired to say in responding to the invitation of the Senator from Vermont to correct him if I thought he misstated anything. It is true that the sum of money upon which this 25 per cent. is computed under the Thurman act, or the 40 per cent. proposed to be computed here, is upon the earnings of the aided portion alone, and I did not mean to be understood otherwise. If I was understood otherwise I was misunderstood or inaccurately expressed myself. I did not mean to be understood otherwise.

But when you come to make the estimate, which is the important thing, what this road has got left after deducting the $2,600,000 or thereabouts, which this 40 per cent. will require of it, I took in and they take in the whole income of the road from every description whatever, subject, of course, to the payment of debts. If they have hired a piece of road on which there is a bonded indebtedness the interest on that indebtedness is deducted and the profit of that is paid into the treasury.

So when Mr. Adams says, If you make me pay this $2,600,000 I have not money enough left to pay for such repairs as are necessary to keep my road up in decent trim, and still less to build a new branch or a new and improved bridge, instead of merely repairing an old one—he takes in all the money that the road gets from every source; and that is the importance and practical importance of this point. That is what I meant to say and what I mean to say.

They have allowed certain classes of repairs, such as would be necessary to keep the road from actually breaking down, but if they put such repairs as every other railroad makes, call them improvements or whatever you call them, the kind I have described, into this construction account, and they now put it into the construction account, they do not put it into the running expense account—if they transferred it from the construction account to the expense account they would show they are operating their road at a loss and its whole credit is gone.

Then the Senator from Vermont refers to a statement I made. I did not speak of widows and orphans as objects of sympathy. I did it to show that the present ownership of this stock was an honest ownership, and to meet the cry of what wickedness was said to have been done thirty or twenty-five years ago. The Senator asks what right has a widow to wrong a creditor? She has no right, but when you are determining whether you shall compel a person who loaned to you any money for twelve years to have nothing to live on in the mean time by way of dividends, when you are asking to transfer from an investment which this Government in the end, if Mr. Adams is an honest man and not a knave, is to have the advantage of 8 or 10 per cent. where it would only have 2 per cent., and the ground of it is that somebody thirty years ago did a wrong, it is a fair answer to the Government of the country to say that that property has all been transferred since.

You might as well undertake to deal with the house of the Senator from Vermont in an unjust way, and if he complained of it say that a burglar occupied that house twenty years ago, as to deal with the present owners of this stock, which you allowed them to owe and said they might acquire in the market, and which they have paid a hundred cents on a dollar for, by making this outcry against the old owners. That is the argument.

The Senator from South Carolina said the balance of this 75 per cent. and all that comes from unaided lines goes into the pockets of the stockholders and the Senator from Vermont said yes, and stopped there, when it should have been stated that they have not been able to pay a dollar of dividend for four or five years. It does not go into the pockets of stockholders, it goes into doing what is necessary to keep the property in decent condition, and when that is done nothing is left.

Then the Senator from Vermont said, and refused to be interrupted to make the correction—he talked about their failure to pay what the Thurman act required, and left it there, until I undertook to call his attention to it, when to make the statement complete and fair—of course I make no imputation of unfairness—to have made a fair statement he should have told the Senate that there was a great sum due on transportation account to the road from the Government which was in litigation and on which the Supreme Court of the United States decided in favor of the road nearly the whole claim, and the moment that decision was rendered the Union Pacific Railroad paid up everything that was due, and there has not been for at least three years any pretense in any quarter that there is a single sixpence that they are in arrear.

It does not seem to me quite fair to deal with the Senate and simply say that this will be failing to pay what the Thurman act required, and not make this settlement.

Then the Senator from Vermont said—and there was quite a laugh in some quarters—that it was not considered in Vermont, though it might be in Massachusetts, a very oppressive thing to make a debtor put aside his property for the payment of his creditors. I think it will be considered a very oppressive thing anywhere where there are honest men and honest minds to say to a debtor, "When I have contracted with you, that you may have twelve years to make a payment, I will come in and use the strong arm of my force to say you shall take every dollar which your property yields, which can be got out of it, before taking anything to live on, before even keeping up your business; that you shall strip your business of what is necessary to make what every other person considers necessary to apply it to who is keeping a like business, and put it where it will only pay 2.2 per cent. on the dollar, and save it up to pay a debt that is not due for twelve months."

Mr. BUTLER. Will it disturb the Senator to ask him a question, because I really am doing it for my own information?

Mr. HOAR. I will answer it if I can.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator stated in criticising the reply of the Senator from Vermont that the 75 per cent. net profits left did not go into the pockets of the stockholders. I should be very glad if the Senator could inform the Senate, without inconvenience, what becomes of that 75 per cent., because it appears to be net profits. Net profits I always have understood to mean the profits over and above the entire expenses of the railroad.

Mr. HOAR. I understand; but the Thurman act describes net profits and says they shall only take out of the earnings what they pay on the interest on the first-mortgage bonds, what they pay for the operating expenses, and to keep the road in repair, and they put $2,600,000 in the year 1886 into necessary expenditure for keeping up the substance of this road from, I cannot say exactly the whole, but a large proportion of which this deduction was not made.

Mr. BUTLER. It goes into the betterments of the railroad or improvements. Now one other question, because I am not really asking with a view——

Mr. HOAR. Let me complete my statement and then I will answer the question when I get through. It is more agreeable to me when stating a thing as briefly and compactly as I can to finish the statement, and then I will hear the Senator. I wanted only to say one other sentence.

They talk about it as if the only duty of Congress was to protect this Government debt of ours. I agree that is a duty, and I am willing to concede it is a paramont duty, but they considered that the getting of this Pacific railroad through the country was a thing that they were willing to make large gifts from the Treasury for, not only to these roads but to others.

They thought having a railroad service through the prairie and through the plain and from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to enable the farmer of the West to carry his wheat to Europe in rivalry with the Caucasus and with India and the Bosphorus, was a thing that was worth doing. If that were true then it is true now, and it is a part of the duty of this Government to see that this vast country is served—which the Union Pacific alone serves, 4,600 miles of which is properly served—with a railroad service which will enable the country to grow, and which to enable the country to grow must be permitted to grow itself.

That is not putting it in the pockets of the stockholders in any improper sense, and I say that to compel this road to do business where it can not have a dollar of floating capital, where it can not meet any crisis or panic in the money market, where it can not have new cars and new side-tracks and new depots and a little spur road, and all the things that I have repeated here more than once, is not wise legislation for a government, even if it do happen to be a creditor whose debts become due in twelve years. Now I will hear the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree with a great deal that the Senator has stated in that respect, and I have not the slightest desire by my vote or action here to oppress the railroads in any way, but I have not quite understood the position of the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Vermont. It seems they have got together upon one point, and that is that the Government does not get this 25 per cent. net profits out of any other except the aided railroads.

Mr. HOAR. That is true.

Mr. BUTLER. I say the Senator from Massachusetts agrees with the Senator from Vermont upon that point. That being the case, and the Senator having counted up this 75 per cent., the balance of net profits on the aided railroads, I would be very glad, if the Senator could do so without any inconvenience, if he would inform the Senate what becomes of the profits of the unaided railroads?

Mr. HOAR. The profits of the unaided railroads and the 60 per cent. after this 40 per cent. is taken out will make together a sum of money which, after paying the interest on the subsequent obligations of the road, will leave about $1,500,000 or less than $375 a mile for such repairs as are now charged to the construction account and are not put into the ordinary repairs of the road. That is the answer.

Mr. McPHERSON. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion to him, for I do not think he is answering the question of the Senator from South Carolina with his usual clearness? If I understand the Senator from South Carolina aright he wishes to know what becomes of the surplus earnings of the Union Pacific Railroad in excess of the amount paid to the Government, the 25 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. I have stated that. It has gone into these extensions that have been made.

Mr. McPHERSON. Certainly it has gone into the extensions to the extent already of about $13,000,000. Under the Thurman act all of the income of these railroads is pledged to the payment of the Government debt. Therefore, the Government should by right be interested to the extent of the entire surplus of $13,000,000 on the branch lines.

Now, what does Mr. Adams claim? He claims these auxiliary lines give about $5,000,000 a year to the parent line, or to the aided line, in the way of business. The Government, therefore, is benefited to the extent of this $5,000,000 of business, which it would not otherwise get except for the auxiliary lines. But Mr. Adams claims that the Government mortgage does not cover the auxiliary lines at all. There is the true state of the case as claimed by the Union Pacific Railroad, and also as to the status of the Government towards those roads.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. It is true, and I ought to have said that before, when the Thurman act was passed it was a time of high railroad prosperity, and had been preceded by a time of high railroad prosperity, and these roads had then made the extensions which the Senator refers to, and also paid dividends. Will the Senator from South Carolina be kind enough to give me his attention, as I am answering his questions further?

I say the time the Thurman act was passed was a time of high railroad prosperity, before all this competition coming from the other lines, which the Senator from California referred to, and they made these extensions and they paid dividends to their stockholders, 6 per cent. per annum, I do not know whether any more or not, but at any rate a dividend.

But all that is shrunk now, and as I said the 75 per cent. or 60 per cent. is raised, and what they get of profit on the unaided roads after paying the interest on the obligation subsequent to the United States obligation (because they are only allowed by the Thurman act to pay interest on the prior ones) goes first to pay the interest on this, and then if it pays what is really necessary for repair there will be nothing left, and it will be enough to eat up the whole of it. That is the answer to the Senator. That is what came of it in the past, and that is what comes of it now.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I understand the $13,000,000 to which the Senator from New Jersey refers is clear profit, and practically went into the pockets of the stockholders.

Mr. HOAR. No; the Senator from New Jersey, I think, is mistaken in saying that. There were $13,000,000 of the earnings of the road. The stockholders have put in $10,000,000 paid out of their own pockets in new stock, paying for it a hundred cents on the dollar.

Mr. McPHERSON. I state upon positive knowledge that since the consolidation of 1880 $12,782,000.19—I speak in dollars and cents——

Mr. HOAR. Does not the $10,000,000 of new stock come out of that?

Mr. McPHERSON. Not at all. Representing the surplus earnings of the Union Pacific Railroad, $12,782,000 have been invested in auxiliary lines. The Union Pacific claim that the Government has no claim whatever upon it.

Mr. HOAR. I do not yield for that purpose.

Mr. McPHERSON. One word more. They claim that the Government has no claim upon it, but the Thurman act, as I understand it, holds that we have a claim upon it. Therefore what I wanted was the investigation to know what they owe.

Mr. HOAR. I agree with the Senator exactly; let his correctness be conceded. I supposed that this $10,000,000 went into it, but I may be mistaken on that point.

Now I want to make one other point, and then I am through. I am rather ashamed of myself for taking so much time. All the Government directors have sent separate letters expressing their opinions. They are the representatives of the Government, and they say this thing would be ruinous to the road and injurious to the interests of the Government. I also send to the Clerk's desk to have read a very clear memorial from Mr. Adams.

Mr. BUTLER. Before that is read, may I ask the Senator one other question for information?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUTLER. Can he inform the Senate what amount of subordinate obligations this company has out; I mean subordinate to the Government?

Mr. HOAR. I am not able to answer at this moment that question. I have here a pamphlet which contains it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the paper sent to the desk by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read by the Secretary.

The Secretary proceeded to read the memorial.

Mr. McPHERSON. Let me suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that that be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. HOAR. It is a very clear statement. I want very much to have it read and also the letters which I send to the desk from all the Government directors, which are very clear and strong. But I will not detain the Senate at this time. I will accept the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the memorial and the letters referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts will be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hearing no objection, the papers will be so printed.

The papers referred to are as follows:

Memorial to the Senate of the United States.

The undersigned, on behalf of the executive committee of the board of directors of the Union Pacific Railway Company, respectfully represent that there is now pending before your honorable body a measure amending the so-called Thurman act of 1878, under which this company is required to pay certain sums of money annually into the Treasury of the United States.

By the proposed amendment the said payments will be increased from 25 per cent. of the net earnings of the subsidized, or aided, portions of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, now known as the Union Division of the Union Pacific Railway Company, to 40 per cent. of said earnings; while the payments from the Kansas Pacific, or Kansas Division, of said railway company will be increased from 5 per cent. of the net earnings of the aided portion of the line to 40 per cent. of the same. Your memorialists, on behalf of themselves and all others whether directors or stockholders of this company, desire respectfully to protest against the changes proposed.

They protest on the following grounds:

First. At the time the Thurman act, so called, was passed, in 1878, the Union Pacific Railroad Company was enjoying a large and remunerative transcontinental traffic, which has since been divided among four other competing lines. Its income has been proportionately reduced. The company was then paying regular dividends to its stockholders. It has now for three years been unable to pay dividends.

Second. The company has been, and now is, in urgent need of additions to its motive power and its rolling-stock, and of extensive renewals of station buildings, tracks, and other appliances for properly doing a largely increased business, though one much less remunerative than formerly. Under existing legislation the means for making these additions and renewals can not well be derived from any source other than surplus revenue, for they are of an unusual character, and not properly chargeable to account of operating expenses.

The proposed increase in the Thurman act requirements would in the opinion of your memorialists so deplete the surplus revenue of the company, and thus cripple its resources, that it would be unable to make the additions and renewals referred to, and the interests of the company and of the communities served by it, as well as those of the Government, would thereby inevitably suffer injury and waste.

Third. Your memorialists would further represent that, relying upon the stability of the contracts heretofore entered into with the United States Government, and the fixedness of the payments therein provided for, this company has in times past, for necessary and legitimate purposes, borrowed money on mortgage and otherwise, the interest of which must be met, if at all, out of its surplus revenue. By the proposed amendment this surplus revenue will be so reduced as to make it at least difficult for the company to meet the interest and other fixed charges on the obligations thus entered into.

Fourth. Should the company, contrary to all recognized rule in such cases, in order to reduce the amounts payable to the Government, charge to its operating expenses the cost of all unusual outlays, though the same properly belonged to construction, it must by so doing swell its apparent cost of operation out of all precedent or reason, and consequently reduce its apparent surplus revenue to a point so low that it would not suffice to meet the fixed charges above referred to.

The surplus earnings of the company would be reduced $3 for each $1 retained from the sinking fund through this process. The stockholders would thus meet three-quarters of such improperly increased cost of operation, and the road would apparently fail to earn its fixed charges. The result would manifestly be destructive to the financial standing of the company.

Fifth. Your memorialists further submit that the entire surplus revenue of the company for some years past has been wholly invested in such a manner as to secure the further profitable development of the property, thereby largely increasing the security of the Government. Not one dollar has been paid out in the form of dividends. The sums, aggregating over $6,500,000, which have, under the provisions of the Thurman act, been paid into the Treasury of the United States, draw interest but little in excess of 2 per cent. per annum.

If these payments, already large, are now to be more than doubled, and the money to meet them—estimated at three millions for the current year—withdrawn as heretofore from profitable investments to be locked up in a barren investment, it will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for the Union Pacific Railway Company to meet its subsidy liabilities to the Government when the same shall mature in 1897.

Sixth. If such a financial policy is forced upon the company, it will render the payment of dividends on its capital stock impossible for an indefinite period of time, thus inflicting great injury upon the present holders thereof, and taking from them all inducement to a conservative and prudent management. The stock being deprived of investment value, will retain only a speculative value, as representing the temporary control of an important property, thus gravely jeopardizing its safety by offering temptation to waste. That under such circumstances the stock of the company should remain in the hands of the six thousand investors now owning it, the vast majority of whom bought their holdings since the year 1880, is not to be expected. It will inevitably drift into the hands of those who will in some way derive an immediate profit from it.

Seventh. Heretofore, and especially of late years, the surplus revenue of the Union Pacific has been largely invested in the improvement of the subsidized lines, and in the building of auxiliary railroads which brought traffic to the subsidized lines, thus making good the loss of traffic which those lines suffered through the construction of competing transcontinental roads. This investment of surplus income the management has heretofore looked upon, and now looks upon, as a provision voluntarily made by the company to meet its obligations to the Government when the same shall mature.

The profits derived to the company from this investment of its surplus revenue is believed to be at least sixfold what it has derived, or can derive, from equal sums paid into the sinking fund created under the Thurman act. But for the revenue from the traffic of auxiliary roads thus built, the original subsidized lines of the Union Pacific would even now have little value in excess of their first mortgage bonds underlying the Government lien, and that value would continually hereafter diminish.

The present directors of the company wish to pursue the conservative course in the management of its affairs which has heretofore been pursued, especially of late; but they will be wholly unable so to do if the Thurman act is amended in the way now proposed. The control of the surplus revenue of the company will then be taken from them to an extent which must materially affect their power to influence results, or make adequate provision for the future.

Eighth. Your memorialists, on behalf of themselves and all the directors and stockholders of this company, would respectfully represent that it does not seem to be legal nor just nor reasonable, that, as a debtor, this company should be held to a strict liability for the payment of all it owes to the Government at maturity if, during the interval prior to maturity, the Government deprives the company of the management of the funds out of which alone what it owes can be paid.

In other words, by force of the Thurman act, and yet more by force of the legislation now proposed, the creditor takes from the debtor the management of his own affairs, and after managing those affairs for a long series of years regardless of the debtor's protests, in a way inconsistent with his interests, then finally holds the debtor to the strict payment of his debt according to the letter of the original contract. We respectfully submit that as between private individuals such a course is not, and never could be, tolerated under any government of law.

Ninth. All the facts herein stated by your memorialists are well known to the present representatives of the Government in the company's board of direction. Whatever has been done by the present management has met with the unanimous approval of the Government's representatives, especially as respects the disposition made of the company's surplus revenue. They have so stated in their recent reports. Their approval, we submit, we had a right to assume was the approval of the Government.

Furthermore, the amendments now proposed to the Thurman act commend themselves, so far as we are advised, to the judgment of none of those directors, being regarded by them as both impolitic and unjust. But they are all men of character, intelligence, and standing. They are specially informed as to the matters referred to in this memorial, and, if called upon by your honorable body, they would, we feel assured, confirm each and every statement herein made. Let them speak for themselves.

On behalf of the executive committee,

CHARLES F. ADAMS, President.

BOSTON, MASS., February 12, 1887.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, February 14, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 11th instant with copy of the memorial to the United States Senate. I heartily approve every word stated therein and authorize you to append my signature thereto as Government director.

Truly yours,

M. A. HANNA.

CHARLES F. ADAMS, Esq.

SAVANNAH, GA., February 14, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have just read your memorial addressed to the Senate on behalf of the executive committee, of date February 12, protesting against the proposed amendment to the Thurman act by which the annual payments to the Government sinking fund would be raised from 25 per cent. to 40 per cent. of the net earnings. In your letter transmitting the copy of this memorial you ask me to state whether I concur in the correctness of the statements made therein.

As I have so recently resigned from the position of Government director, which I had held upon the board, that my successor has probably had no time to familiarize himself with the subject, I feel bound to answer as frankly and fully as though I were still charged with the duty of representing the interests of the Government. I do concur most fully and entirely in the statements and arguments set forth in your memorial. Similar ones have been urged by every Government director and every railroad commissioner or other official of the Government connected with the matter, for several years.

I do not believe that any intelligent and unprejudiced person can understand fully the present situation of the road, the demands of the country which it serves, and the existing relations of the road to the Government, without condemning utterly any proposition to even continue in force the present requirements of the Thurman bill, and still more the proposed change to increase its annual requirements. Such a change will only gratuitously magnify the present evils, which have been fully set forth in the two last reports of the Government directors.

Very respectfully,

E. P. ALEXANDER.

CHARLES F. ADAMS, Esq.,
President Union Pacific Railroad Company.

FEBRUARY 15, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have no hesitation in indorsing your memorial of February 12, to the Senate of the United States, against the increase of the requirements of the Thurman act to 40 per cent. If anything has seemed perfectly clear to me, as a Government director of the Union Pacific, it is that it is equally to the interest of the Government and of the company to end this restless legislating about the debt by a final funding measure such as is pending in the House of Representatives.

I fail to see how any one can be so satisfied with the working of the Thurman act as to wish to see it perpetuated and extended. I had supposed that everybody who had studied the subject admitted the failure of the sinking-fund policy; and as a business man it is quite beyond me to suppose that when you are a creditor in a second class and your security is dependent upon the prosperity of the property you ought to cripple your debtor in order to insure your debt. The real interests of the Government are nothing more and nothing less than the real interests of the company, and it is therefore quite inconceivable to me that the policy of the Government should be one of hostility or of crippling.

I believe that the money that is to become due to the Government can be paid—every dollar and every cent; that the Government need not lose even a penny of its interest if it should but act with the self-control and prudence that an ordinary business man would exercise in the same circumstances, and it would then have as its profit on this great transaction the vast savings upon its mails and army transportation, the settlement of the Indian wars, and the enhanced value of the public lands.

Nobody at present threatens the security of the Government debt but the Government.

Very truly, yours,

FRANKLIN MACVEAGH.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS, Esq.,
President Union Pacific Railway Company, Boston.

OMAHA, February 17, 1887.

DEAR SIR: I have read the memorial to the Senate concerning the proposed amendment to the Thurman act, and it seems to me excellent both in argument and tone.

The dissenting justices in the "sinking-fund cases" argued that if the power contended for by the majority was legitimate it would justify the trebling of the annual sum to be paid, or a behest for the immediate deposit of the whole amount, or the subjection of the company to burdens which if foreseen would have thwarted the effort to build the road entirely. To this the Chief-Justice answered that "the alterations must be reasonable and be consistent with the object and scope of the act of incorporation. Sheer oppression and wrong can not be inflicted under the guise of amendment or alteration."

It seems to me that the act proposed will come within the exception above suggested, will, while not benefiting the Government, inflict irreparable injury upon the company and its stockholders, and will deprive the people along the line of the road of improvements and extensions which they have a right in the rapid settlement of the country to expect.

I give my hearty adhesion therefore to the suggestions of the memorial, and authorize you to sign my name to it, or to use this letter in any way you may deem fitting.

Very truly yours,

JAS. W. SAVAGE,
Government Director Union Pacific Railway.

Hon. CHARLES F. ADAMS.

NEW YORK, February 18, 1887.

MY DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 10th instant, inclosing copy memorial to the Senate of the United States touching proposed legislation now before that body.

It is hardly necessary to say that I heartily indorse the statements therein contained against the expediency of such action. The measures and recommendations proposed, after mature deliberation, by my colleagues and myself for the adjustment of the claims of the United States against the road plainly show their views on the subject to be inconsistent with the imposition of further burdens and additional exactions.

The great difficulty which seems to underlie the attempt at harmonizing the difficulty between the Government and the Union Pacific appears to proceed from a vague, ill-defined, but yet discernible feeling in many quarters that no arrangement should be made unless it were more or less punitory in its character. Indeed, I have found this sentiment to exist to such an extent as to render calm discussion practically out of the question. If the former history of the road were obliterated from its record and the transgressions—real or imaginary—of its former management could be forgotten, I do not think that there would be any serious impediment in the way.

The simple suggestion of saving the Government claim would be understood to involve a prudent regard for the existence and credit of the debtor institution. The road requires above all things liberty to expand, which means liberty to live. Even a superficial examination must convince a disinterested observer that to put shackles upon the Union Pacific while its active, energetic, pushing and untrammelled rivals are taking advantage of its embarrassments to divert its resources of healthy activity, is simply to sentence it to death. The Government directors assumed at the outset that it was to the interest of the United States to let the debtor live. If they were wrong in this, their whole plan is based upon a fallacy. If not, I quite agree with the memorialists that such additional burdens as are proposed by the pending bill must result disastrously.

Believe me, dear Mr. Adams, to be very truly yours,

F. R. COUDERT.

CHARLES F. ADAMS, Esq.,

BOSTON, MASS., February 21, 1887.

The following is just received. Have sent a copy by mail Omaha, Nebr., February 17. I have read the memorial to the Senate concerning the proposed amendment to the Thurman act, and it seems to me excellent, both in argument and tone, the dissenting justices in the sinking-fund cases argued that if the power contended for by the majority was legitimate it would justify the trebling of the annual sum to be paid, or a behest for the immediate deposit of the whole amount, or the subjection of the company to burdens which, if foreseen, would have thwarted the effort to build the road entirely. To this the chief-justice answered that, "the alterations must be reasonable and be consistent with the object and scope of the act of incorporation; sheer oppression and wrong can not be inflicted under the guise of amendment or alteration." It seems to me that the act proposed will come within the exception above suggested—will, while not benefiting the Government, inflict irreparable injury upon the company and its stockholders, and will deprive the people along the line of the road of improvements and extensions which they have a right in the rapid settlement of the country to expect. I give my hearty adhesion therefore to the suggestions of the memorial, and authorize you to sign my name to it or to use this letter in any way you may deem fitting.

Very truly, yours,

CHARLES F. ADAMS.

MOORFIELD STOREY,
Wormley's Hotel, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I want to state to the Senate the reason why I do not agree with the Senator from Massachusetts and I do not agree with the Senator from Vermont——

Mr. HOAR. I have not yielded.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I know I am right, but they will not believe me. Therefore I want to leave this thing to a commission, and I agree to the commission.

Mr. HOAR. I have yielded to the Senator's suggestion and foregone the reading of these documents. I wish to say one thing more in answer to the question of the Senator from South Carolina, that I am informed the subsequent debt to the Government, that which of course the interest has to be paid on out of this surplus, amounts to nearly $60,000,000. I have a pamphlet here which states it exactly, but the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], if I may be permitted by him to refer to it, tells me that Mr. Starrow, the counsel for the road, a gentleman whom I will vouch for as a man of absolute integrity of purpose, tells him it cost nearly $60,000,000. I have the pamphlet here which will answer the Senator's question.

Mr. EDMUNDS rose.

Mr. COCKRELL (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes a. m.) I ask the Senator to yield until I can make a motion that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Let us close the bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have no quorum, I fear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. HOAR. To adjourn will defeat this whole proposition.

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not want to defeat it.

Mr. HOAR. Let us have a vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. We have no quorum. However, I shall not insist on the motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As to what becomes of this money, this 75 per cent. of clear net earnings, after paying all operating expenses and paying the interest on the first-mortgage bonds, my friend says that part of it is invested in new enterprises, auxiliary roads, in respect of which the creditors of the Union Pacific proper have no claim at all, because they set up an independent corporation in which the United States has no interest in the way of any security, and a part of it, as he says, has to be used to keep up the road. I do not understand that to be so.

As to the part invested in new enterprises I can understand if they do not pay it out in dividends. That is easily understood. They have a right to do what they like with it, but when you come to keeping up this line on which we have a lien, the statutes of the United States say that they may pay all operating expenses and pay for keeping the road in a proper state of repair before you strike the balance, the net income out of which 25 per cent. is to be taken to go into this sinking fund.

Therefore, the idea that this money is to be used by this corporation to improve the property in the same way that a private owner would improve his own property, to make it better and better, to build new bridges, and new rails, and a better road bed, will not stand the test of an investigation for a moment. They have a right to apply all the money that is necessary to keep this road up to its highest pitch of perfection, but I suspect that the real trouble is—I am merely speaking to you, Mr. President, beceuse nobody else cares about it——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair experiences a good deal of difficulty in hearing the Senator, and he will ask him to suspend until he requests other Senators to resume their seats and cease conversation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not mind, Mr. President. This little matter of a hundred million dollars for the tax-payer of the United States is of very small consequence.

The real trouble, as hinted at by the Senator from Massachusetts, about what comes of this supposed surplus, running the operations of this road in all its other branches and other corporations that it controls now, is found illustrated by what the Commissioner of Railroads says about this Kansas Division, where the United States is entitled to 25 per cent. of the net earnings on 300 miles out of 500 miles, I will say, for round numbers.

The Commissioner of Railroads tells us officially that the 300 miles earns all the money, in round numbers, and that the 200 miles does not pay—I will state it strongly in order to illustrate my position—and that the railroad company just prorates per mile, or whatever, and therefore compels the aided part of the line, whose net earnings, if it was running alone or the accounts were kept by themselves, would be a great deal more, to make up the losses on the unaided part of the line.

Now, then, if the Union Pacific Railway Company, being ambitious and fearing the opposition and competition, and wishing to get custom, has been building railway lines where there was not anybody and any traffic, and where some time or other I hope there will be, and has to run them, it has got to run them out of some money; it must pay for its coal, its locomotives, its laborers, and all that sort of thing. Where is it going to get it, if that particular line it has built up does not furnish the traffic to do it? It takes it out of the 75 per cent. after the 25 per cent. is paid in. That will account for a part of the money, as it is accounted for in this Kansas Division business.

But that had nothing to do with the question that we have in hand, and that is to apply the net earnings of this property on which the United States has a lien, and on which the first-mortgage creditors have a lien, to a fund to secure the payment of those debts, and that is all that there is to it. The Senator says that the company has to pay out of these net earnings a lot of interest, &c., on subsequent incumbrances. What are the subsequent incumbrances? Here they are stated in the report of the Commissioner of Railroads; you will find them all. There is, beginning at the beginning, the first mortgage ahead of ours.

Mr. HOAR. They are stated in the Thurman act, to be accurate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, the second mortgages are not stated there.

Mr. HOAR. Yes, they are. They say the United States debt, $20,000,000, the whole debt in 1881.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we have them all here stated just what they are, and I should like to have it known to the public, to anybody who reads the RECORD, and I will ask to have put into the RECORD, this statement of the Commissioner of Railroads, which shows the whole indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroads as they purport to represent it to the Commissioner of Railroads from top to bottom: the first mortgage, the United States subsidy mortgage, then the second one, and the land-grant mortgage. Now I will stop here a moment in my comments.

The land grant mortgage is a mortgage on the land granted by the United States, and out of which I have stated the number of millions of dollars in cash that they have already got, and the number of millions of dollars that they are yet to get out of that land. That land grant mortgage and the sales of those lands that have been made by the Union Pacific have made a fund out of which the interest of this land grant mortgage is provided for, and I believe a sinking fund, too, to pay it off. This land grant mortgage, amount of bonds outstanding on the 30th of June, 1886, $2,325,000. They have decreased the debt in a year $651,000. How? Out of the net earnings of these added lines?

In my opinion not a bit of it, but out of the investments and funds that they had accumulated from the sales of these lands, just as wise and good operators and traders would do. I am not complaining of it, but stating it. The earnings of the company are not devoted to that thing as I believe, but the income and the interest and the investments in the $25,000,000 or so that they have already got in cash from the sale of lands they have sold, and the income arising out of them that is yet to come in of $13,000,000 or $14,000,000 more. So the land-grant mortgage has left here, if it were to be paid off to-day, more than $10,000,000 in the lands and assets belonging to the land-grant mortgage.

Now you may go on to the others. There is a sinking-fund mortgage, which is a mortgage based on the sinking fund and on the "road and franchise, Omaha to Ogden, third mortgage; granted lands, a second mortgage," and so on, and a sinking fund provided out of the income of the sale of these lands, &c., to meet that. Then they have got a collateral trust, which is simply the bonds of branch lines held by trustees, as it is stated in this report. Then they have the Omaha bridge, in respect of which there are separate tolls, &c. Then there is a statement as to the Kansas Pacific Railroad, that division of the same. I will not take up time to go through the table on page 10, but I ask leave to have it printed in the RECORD because it is very useful public information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be so ordered, there being no objection.

The table referred to is as follows:

Comparative statement of the funded debt of the Union Pacific Railway Company, June 30, 1886 and 1885.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So (for I do not want to occupy your time about this little matter of a hundred million or so for the people of the United States) we come back to the simple proposition as to whether it is fit that these people shall save up for the benefit of their creditors 15 per cent. more of their clear net earnings on these aided lines, and no other, after paying the interest on their first-mortgage bonds and after keeping the road up to the tip-top pitch of fitness for operation, for the benefit of their creditors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment propsed by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], to strike out the fourth section of the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. I am informed by his colleague [Mr. GORMAN] that he would vote "yea" on this question, and therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. COCKRELL (when Mr. VEST'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. VEST] is unavoidably detained from the Senate Chamber to-night, and is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] are both engaged on committee work, and are paired with each other.

Mr. BUTLER (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, forgetting that I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], being indisposed, has been called from the Senate Chamber, and I have been requested to pair with him. While I should like exceedingly to record my vote "nay," I withdraw it, and announce the pair. If he were present, he would vote "yea," and I should vote "nay."

Mr. ALDRICH. My colleague [Mr. CHACE] is detained from the Senate by illness, and is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

The result was announced—yeas 19, nays 27; as follows:

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The Secretary will now report the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD].

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 139, section 2, of the amendment reported from the Committee on the Judiciary it is proposed to insert——

Mr. MCPHERSON. The amendment has been already read. Is it worth while to read it again? It will only take time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment was read for information a short time since. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the amendment of the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I can see no possible objection to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is all right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to add to the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which I am for as far as it was made, what was section 5 of the committee's amendment, which is the 40-per-cent. section. It is not necessary to have it read; everybody understands it; and on that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont, on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GEORGE. If we are in favor of the 40-per.cent. section we vote "yea." Is that the proposition?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those in favor of retainlng section 5, will vote "yea."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is it.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I wish to make a statement of only a few words.

I voted as in Committee of the Whole to strike out the fifth and sixth sections, which provide for the payment of 40 per cent. instead of 25 per cent. as is now provided by what is known as the Thurman act, and I did it for this reason:

It is well known that the Judiciary Committee of this body and a committee elsewhere, after two or three years' consideration of this question, reported to both Houses of Congress a measure to adjust the affairs of the Union and the Central Pacific Railroads, bills that were well considered with the best lights that the committees of Congress could possibly have. They were thought to be perfect. Up to the very hour when they were to be voted upon there was scarcely a member of either body who was not prepared to follow the recommendations of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

But upon a resolution of inquiry, offered, I think, by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], information was sought from the accounting officers of the Treasury as to the effect of that measure, and it resulted in a communication found in Executive Document No. 34, of this session, showing conclusively that the recommendation of the committee was at fault, and if the bill had been enacted into a law as reported the condition of the Government would have been infinitely worse.

Pending that, and upon the eve of a vote, the press of the country brought to the attention of the Congress and of the people a condition of affairs in these aided roads by the Government that startled the whole nation. The House of Representatives halted in the consideration of its measure for adjusting these affairs, and sent to us a simple resolution appointing a commission by the Secretary of the Interior to bring to light the facts which had been charged, if they be facts.

I have voted to-night steadily against every proposition except the one to appoint a commission to investigate the affairs of these roads, so that Congress may hereafter legislate intelligently. I have not been prepared to-night upon the information that we have obtained from the Senator from Vermont and the Judiciary Committee to impose upon these roads any further or greater conditions than were imposed by the act known as the Thurman act.

If we had time to consider all the affairs relating to these roads I should vote for 40 per cent. or any other amount that I believed their revenues would warrant us in imposing, but I think it is unwise; I think it has a tendency to obstruct the investigations to incumber this measure with anything beyond the mere investigation; so I think of the amendment offered by the Senator from California. They are not so intended, probably, but the effect of all these amendments is to postpone any consideration and to prevent any proper legislation in any reasonable time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Maryland has paid a very kind compliment to the Committee on the Judiciary in its conduct hitherto. I am sorry he has lost confidence in it just now.

The Committee on the Judiciary, and the House of Representatives as well, sending over bills to us, did provide, certainly we did, for the settlement of all the questions between the companies and the United States, and all of those questions were simply the amount of the sums of money that they earn from year to year and how net savings were to be computed.

The amount that these companies owe the United States is clear and was clear, except that they deny that they are bound to pay any interest on the money that we are advancing on coupons, simply going to more than the face of the original advance during all the years that we are to pay it.

Some members of the Committee on the Judiciary at least insisted that they would be bound in the end to pay interest at 6 per cent. on every dollar of money that we advanced that was not reimbursed by these coupons, but they deny it, and it is a question capable of fair argument on either side.

In the bill that was first considered and reported by the Committee on the Judiciary that dispute was compromised by taking it at half, in round numbers, which would save to the United States if the company was right in its pretensions, and there was good ground to argue that way, a good many million dollars, ten, a dozen, or fifteen, or whatever it may have been, certainly several millions if the matter had then been disposed of as we reported it.

It was the simple question, ascertaining upon the simplest principles that a school-boy understands, how much money they would pay to us to-day if they had the cash to settle it all up and pay in advance before 1897, and we get it right, and if we were willing to give them time at 3, 3½, or 4 per cent., or whatever the sum was. That was a question which the Senate and House might choose to do, whether willing to give time at one time or another, as a creditor on good security and taking a blanket mortgage on everything they had and requiring the absolute payment of so much money each year.

There we stood. The Judiciary Committee was not happily able to get the thing into a law. We provided in that act, as the House had in whatever act they had passed, that if we did not come to an immediate settlement it would be right to everybody to add 15 per cent. to the 25 per cent. that was already provided for in changing the terms or regulations or the methods of the computation.

Mr. TELLER. You say you put that in?

Mr. EDMUNDS. We put it in the bill we reported before the general bill, as the House did in their bill, that unless the thing was to be terminated now and here, and a fixed sum paid each year, out of these net earnings 40 per cent. ought to be saved for the general benefit of whom it might concern rather than 25 per cent.

Mr. HOAR. It was a penalty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. My friend from Massachusetts says (and the company state it in that way, and in one sense it is) that it was a penalty. That is one way of putting it. It is not my way. Unless we could settle in this way and arrange this business, it was to go on as it stood and then 40 per cent. instead of 25 should be saved of the sinking fund for the benefit of the company and its creditors.

That is what we proposed. Both Houses appeared to be willing to do that thing; nobody but the companies questioned it. They said, "We want this money; we want to have the advantage of it for dividends, if we can make them, or for other enterprises, or for whatever we may choose to do with it of clear assets above all expenses." We said, "No; unless we come to an end of this thing and while the thing is going on, if you do not end it so much more ought to be saved for the benefit of the creditors."

Now, we come at the end of this session to a bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, which, as I said before, without the slightest fault of my friend from Massachusettss, and without his knowing it, from a mere slip in the arrangement of phrases, the sum which would be now due in cash was not the one that we had before, and was unjust to the United States. That was a mere accident.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator from Vermont will pardon me for saying——

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I discovered that long before any newspaper or any other human being, and stated publicly in the Senate that when the bill came up it would have to be amended in that particular. I do not know but that other people discovered it independently long before the Senator from New Jersey said anything about it. I had made the discovery and called the attention of the Senate to it, and whenever that bill would have been reached the Senate would have had an amendment reported from our committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly, the thing would have been put right in three minutes by everybody's consent, and therefore there is nothing in that part of it.

Now we have got a state of things where the House of Representatives, instead of proposing any scheme to end this business, to ascertain how much money would be now due to-day, if they were ready to pay in cash, which I say is the simplest possible proposition, has chosen to leave the thing open and to proceed to investigate. Investigate what? To find out how much is due to the United States?

Not a bit of it. We all know that. To find out whether the law will authorize us to get interest on the advances, we are making on coupons?

Not a bit of it; they could not help us on that at all. The Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, or the Committee on Railroads of this body, or the Committee on Enrolled Bills would be just as competent to determine that question as this commission, or any other commission, to get the information of gentlemen learned in the law who have no interest in it one way or the other any more than the Committee on the Judiciary, and gentlemen learned in the law might differ, because it is a fairly debatable question as to whether, in point of law, if we were down to 1897 now and brought an action to recover it, whether we could or not. I think we could, and therefore I insisted in the bill that we first reported, and the railway companies agreed to it, that we should get half, and a little more, I believe, of this disputed question of interest on coupons that we were paying.

What, then, is the object of a commission for that purpose? Nothing. Do we know now what our security is? Are we to have a hunting commission to find out what security we have? The statute tells us what security we have. We know what the property is, and if we are obliged to foreclose and are not to give an extension and put a blanket mortgage on everything, so that we shall know we have got a security on everything they have, there is no use in making the inquiry, because if we are to foreclose and come to a test of our rights as mortgage creditors, it will be for the judicial establishment of the United States to determine what our security is, and no report of a commission will help that, because the companies are willing, if time is given to them, to give a blanket mortgage that shall cover everything that they may possess or acquire, whether in their own name or anybody else's, coming up manfully and fairly to say, "We are willing to do justice by the United States and all our other creditors, and if we can have time so that we can pay this year by year, everything we have, directly or indirectly, is at the service of the United States and all our creditors; we are not trying to embezzle anything."

Then, what are you going to investigate about that? Nothing. What, then, is the ground for putting off their getting some addition into this sinking fund if we are to put it off or put off a settlement of this question by determining the time we will give or what rate of interest we will take? It is simply to find out whether these companies or some of their officers have been misconducting themselves hitherto. What if they have? What have we to do with them in respect of the question of what kind of security we can get for the debt to the people of the United States, and what time we are willing to give for it with payments year by year in definite sums? Nothing at all.

And if, therefore, this mere commission goes on with no provision for saving any more to the sinking fund, it will be impossible before December for this commission to do half the work that the House proposes, or a quarter of it, with any kind of sense or inquiry. It will be years, if they do their duty, before they can explore all that they are commanded to explore, and if they make a half report we shall be just where we are now. If they make a full report we shall be so as to any possible aid to anything that we can do.

Therefore I submit, with great respect to everybody who differs with me, that by the passage of this bill without the provision for an increased payment to the sinking fund and without the provision, which I am glad to say the Senate has put in by a strong majority, for giving the United States a chance to protect itself if the worst comes to the worst in the mean time, we shall find ourselves at the end of one year, or two years, or three years, exactly where we stand now, and we shall have to meet the same question over again with nothing discovered which affects the question of what security we have got or that we have not got, and how we can get our debt.

If these companies have employed any part of their funds, whether they are the funds on which the United States or any other creditor has a lien or not, or their private funds, to corrupt you or me, or to lobby you or me, that is a question which it is beneath the dignity of either House to repose in a commission to inquire into. That belongs to us if it affects any Senator, and belongs to the House of Representatives if it affects any member of that body.

So, with great respect, as I say, to the House of Representatives and to everybody else, it does appear to me that so far as this investigation goes as a business investigation of how much is due to us and what security we have got, it is utterly useless, because we know it now. So far as it relates to misconduct of the officers of these companies hitherto, it is of no possible consequence to the end we have in view.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, when this question was up in Committee of the Whole I voted to strike out these two sections; the one that the motion applies to now and the next one. I feel constrained to change my vote on that question, and I wish to state very briefly the reasons for it.

I am informed that the net income of this company upon which the Thurman bill acts is calculated, not upon the proceeds of the particular sections of road that are under the mortgage contained in the charter of the company, but calculated over a very much larger area of railway, and that the receipts and expenditures over the entire length of road under the control of these companies are pooled, and that a percentage is allowed out of these receipts and expenditures corresponding to the mileage, or something of that kind, and upon that basis the net proceeds are estimated, of which 25 per cent. goes into the Treasury of the United States.

I believe I am correct in that statement, that there is a very much larger amount of railroad property, the receipts of which are carried into this account, than that which is covered by the mortgage contained in the charter of the company, and the expenses, of course, over that larger area of railroad are carried into the same account.

My investigation of the fifth section of this act of incorporation brings me to the conclusion, which I can not avoid, that that fifth section constitutes a mortgage upon all the property that has been acquired by the company up to this time, all of its property upon which the calculation is based in respect to the net proceeds to which I have just been referring. I believe that that is a plain statutory mortgage, and that to the extent that it has not been retired beyond a second mortgage, as it was originally, it is now and has been all the time a first-mortgage lien upon this property, so that when the debt falls due and the Secretary of the Treasury finds it necessary, if he should find it necessary, to take possession of this property under the authority of the act of incorporation, he will be empowered by the terms of this statutory mortgage to take all the property that belongs to the railroad company at the date of the default.

It is a matter of indifference to me why this property has been kept out of the ostensible ownership of this company. I am convinced from the manner of stating these accounts and from all that I have heard about this question that the property in equity and in good faith, and in truth does belong to the company, and if they would bring in the proper allowance of the proceeds of this corporation with the additions that have been made to it of other lines, spur lines, connecting lines, or whatever you please to call them, the amount of 40 per cent. of the net earnings upon that vast system of railway, with all its income, would be a mere bagatelle for this company to put up in the way of security under the provisions of the Thurman act.

I, therefore, feel constrained to vote to increase the provision made in the Thurman act from 25 to 40 per cent.

Several SENATORS. "Vote!" "Vote!"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move to amend the bill by striking out on page 11, section 2, lines 157, 158, 159, 160, and 161.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are those lines a part of the section that the Senator from Vermont proposes? ["No!" "No!"] Then the amendment of the Senator from Virginia is not now in order.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I hear Senators calling for a vote who have been consuming most of the day in talk. I want to know whether we are to vote before the rest of us have a chance to read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BUTLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY].

Mr. CULLOM (when Mr. HALE'S name was called). The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] is paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], both of them being engaged in committee work.

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. STANFORD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. COCKRELL (when Mr. VEST'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. VEST] is paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If here, my colleague would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. EUSTIS (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN]. He would vote "nay," if present, and I should vote "yea."

Mr. MCMILLAN (after having voted in the affirmative). I have been requested to pair with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If present, he would vote "nay." I voted "yea." I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 15, nays 26; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move to amend the report of the Committee of the Whole by adding what is section 6, on page 13, about the investment of the sinking fund, and on that which was stricken out in committee I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do not suppose any Senator here knows what that amendment is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read if the Senator desires it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I do desire it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to insert as section 6:

That the sinking funds which are or may be held in the Treasury for the security of the indebtedness of either or all of said railroad companies may, in addition to the investments now authorized by law, be invested in any bonds of the United States heretofore issued for the benefit of either or all of said companies, or in any of the first mortgage bonds of either of said companies which have been issued under the authority of any law of the United States and secured by mortgages of their roads and franchises, which by any law of the United States have been made prior and paramount to the mortgage, lien, or other security of the United States in respect of its advances to either of said companies as provided by law.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). I am informed that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON], with whom I am paired, would vote "yea" on this question, if present. I therefore vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 37, nays 9; as follows:

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I move to strike out on page 11, section 2, lines 157, 158, 159, 160, and 161.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out in section 2, lines 157 to 161, inclusive, as follows:

The claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is a ravishment of the Constitution of the United States, and a violent assault on the common law of this country, and I care not whether it proceeds from what is called the Judiciary Committee or not. On the preceding page there is given to this commission, not the right to compel the attendance of witnesses, but to invoke the power of a court to compel the attendance of witnesses, and it says that they shall be required to testify even though their testimony may criminate themselves.

When you attempt to sell out the liberties of this country for the few thousand dollars you may possibly get from this kind of legislation, then you will be ready to enact the legislation proposed in the five lines I have moved to strike out from this bill. I have heard of judiciary committees before and I know how they are surrounded by dignity; but I claim that, when you enact these five lines in this bill, what money you may get from it, estimating by the figures that have been given us to-night by the Senator from Vermont, will not compensate the people of this country for the loss of their personal liberty and their right to protect themselves by refusing to give evidence that will criminate themselves.

It is not a question of giving evidence before a committee, because this bill says that the court shall compel the attendance of the witnesses and that they shall give this evidence and that it shall not be used against them subsequently in a criminal trial; but we know how verdicts are made. We know that verdicts are made up by public opinion in matters of this sort. If it were not so, why should the Congress of the United States be appealed to in order to settle matters of this kind?

It is public opinion, it is representative action that is sought here now, and when they seek representative action here they are seeking public opinion; and when they get a witness before a committee that is brought there by the process of a court and make him testify, even though he shall criminate himself, they make up the verdict of public opinion, and that is violative of the spirit of our institutions, and I repeat that it is a ravishment of the Constitution and a violent assault upon the common law of this country.

Now, let us convert ourselves into a Senate of demagogues afraid of public clamor, and say that we will enact this kind of thing, or else say that we are a Senate that defies any assault upon the bulwark of the personal liberty of the citizen and the common law and the Constitution of this country. I care not what committee it may have proceeded from, I care not who may have been the chairman of it, I care not for his age, I care not for his reputation, I care for nothing but what I see before me as a Senator, and here it is. You invoke the power of a court to make a man testify to criminate himself, and then say his testimony shall not be used against him.

It is, sir, just like the laws of those States which say that an accused person may be permitted to testify even in a case of homicide, but if he shall fail to testify that failure shall not be used against him in the argument of the case. And yet we all know, all lawyers know, that where a man accused of crime fails to testify where he is allowed to do so, notwithstanding what appears in the statute, the jury take it and say, "Why did he not make his own statement in this matter?"

If we want an investigation of this matter, if it be the policy of this Government to have it, let us have it under the Constitution and the laws of the country. If you invoke the power of a court to bring witnesses before this commission, then let the commission have no authority that is not given to the court itself, and do not compel witnesses to do that before the commission which you would not compel them to do before the court whose power you invoke to bring them before the commission. I ask, therefore, that the Senate strike out these five lines.

Mr. President, in discussing these five lines it seems to me that I may diverge a little to say that I do not like this bill from beginning to end. I look upon it as the merest, cheapest piece of demagogy which was ever promulged before or in a legislative body. I never owned a share of railroad stock in my life, and I can scarcely say to-day that I own a dollar of anything else. [Laughter.]

This bill comes here in response to what? To a demand of the people for something like an investigation? No, no, no. It is more probable that it is intended to cover up the tracks of somebody who does own railroad stock.

Sir, this is a company that is indebted to the United States for a certain amount of money. What constitutes the United States? Sixty millions of people. Here it is represented, and over yonder it is represented, and every time that we convene we are asked to do something that reduces the value of the stocks of this company, that reduces the value of the road itself, that all the time hinders and obstructs it, so that its ability to pay is crippled; and here, eight years in advance of the falling due of any of the bonds of this company, we are asked again to do something—eight years in advance to do something looking to the payment of what will be due to the Government of the United States by this company. You propose to cripple it every time that Congress meets, and then you expect it to pay its debts. Is there any Senator here who is looking forward to 1895 for the payment of a debt that is due to him who would go to work and cripple his debtor?

It was said to-day that three or four of the railroad kings do not own any of this stock. With great particularity it was asseverated that Jay Gould does not own any of it. I do not suppose it could have occurred to anybody that any of these gentlemen own any of the stock, but why did it occur to Senators to mention the fact that those gentlemen do not own it? Legislate for the reduction of the value of that stock, and then see whether your Jay Goulds or your railroad kings will own it. I know so little about this matter that I am only able to discuss it from the general business standpoint.

I say again that every time you attack these companies you cripple them, and you impair their ability to pay what they owe to the Government of the United States. I repeat, sir, that this is the merest piece of shyster legislation that has come into the Senate since I have been here, let who will defend it, upon the general principle of right and justice. Where is the prophet here who is to legislate for 1892 or 1895? How many of the Senators here are so long-lived as that they can calculate that they will even be here in 1892?

Take them in alphabetical order from A to Z, and see how any of them has a right even to expect that he will be politically alive in 1892; yet such men come here to prophesy and to legislate in advance. Why, sir, if I were to vote for this bill I would not expect my constituents to keep me here until 1889, on the 4th of March. I would feel as if they would ask me to resign if I voted for a bill containing a paragraph like this.

These stocks are reduced by legislation proposed here every year. There has been legislation of this sort attempted every year since I have been here. The depreciation of this property goes on every year to keep it on the market in Wall street, to make it go up and down, to be bulled and beared, and the gentlemen whom we have been told to-day do not own any of this stock have all the time endeavored to use Congress to make it go up and down, to put it in their hands to make money.

Whose constituency asks for this investigation? Has there been a man here from any State in the Union asking for it? Ah, yes, I can tell you the only State from which they come, and they come here as hired lobbyists of a Wall street brokerage concern, not to save the Government, but to work for the men who hired them and sent them here, and who have been the consistent plunderers of the Treasury of the United States; but they come here and ask Congress to make itself the pliant tool of low gamblers and Wall street brokers.

I know it is said by Senators that this will militate for or against one or the other of the political parties, and it has been kept prominently forward that we have the interest of the Government of the United States at heart. You take away from the corporation the power to make money, and you take away from them the ability to pay the debt they owe us. We have in all the States what is called a poor debtors' law, which forbids that you should take away from any man the tools and implements of his trade, because when you do that you deprive him of the ability to pay.

By this bill you do nothing but say that this company have done something wrong, without any man of responsibility making any specific allegation or charge against it. I would like those Senators who have been to-day advocating this bill to tell me what they propose to investigate. Even a drum-head court-martial in time of war, when it was trying the most miserable deserter, would require that there should be charges, and not charges alone, but specifications.

Here is neither a charge nor a specification, but a miserable editorial of an alien, and I might almost say a seditious editor, hurled into the Senate of the United States, and like curs we propose to investigate charges emanating from a man who does not hesitate to denounce any Senator on this floor in language unbecoming a gentleman, and scarcely fit to emanate from the throat of a blackguard. Why not investigate the charges that he has brought against me and other Senators on this floor without specifications.

What is the Senate of the United States coming to if it is to pick up this little, miserable editorial squib business and appoint a commission at $7,500 a year, or $750 a month, to investigate the affairs of a great corporation that is in debt to the United States Government and is to pay the debt from its earnings, and at the same time so that an editor may grow rich, because you advertise him here within the walls of the Capitol of this Government, where every man ought to be a man.

I have no fears for the vote that I shall cast on this matter. When there shall be some charge made, some specifications furnished, something to investigate, I shall vote for an investigating committee composed of Senators and Representatives, responsible each to their own House; but on the mere accusation of a man who writes an editorial squib or a communication for a newspaper so as to direct my attention to it, I shall never vote for an investigating committee. The people do not expect it.

I do not care how much the railroad companies may owe; I do not care what their ability is to pay; all that is an old question. But I say you can so continue to cripple them as that they never will be able to pay, and you do it by continually listening to the men who gamble in the stocks, and thus you interfere with those who are trying to conduct honestly the business of the railroads, and are endeavoring to relieve themselves of the obligations resting upon them by reason of the fact that the Government indorsed their bonds and loaned them money.

I have heard much to-day of Mr. Adams and his connection with railroads. When I first heard it I thought there was possibly some resolution pending that Mr. Adams was dead and this was eulogy day; but I ascertained that he was still living. I have made it a rule of my life never to name a child after a living man. I do not care whom the commission may be composed of, it does not become the Senate to pick up an editorial in a newspaper and appoint an investigating committee upon that.

I do not know who will be the members of the commission that is to investigate this matter. I understand they are to be experts. Mr. President, you have been a practitioner in the courts and you know what expert testimony is. You bring it into the Senate and carry it over to the other House, and then they examine the experts again, and you will find that they have been much more expert in collecting the testimony than they have been in getting only that which ought to have been evidence in the matter that they were sent out to investigate.

Why, sir, it will be a mere question of politics, and nothing but politics. One hundred thousand dollars is to be given to three men to go out and investigate what? Not a charge, not a specification, but to take testimony outside of the Constitution and in violation of every principle of the common law. Two Senators and three Representatives, or three Senators and five Representatives, having no right or claim on the Government for a cent in addition to their salaries, can be made a committee to go and investigate this matter and report to either or to both Houses of Congress.

No $100,000 would be required then. They would not be entitled to anything but their annual salary of $5,000. Give them, if you please, the sum of $50,000, with the privilege of sending for persons and papers, and to pay all necessary expenses, and you will have $50,000 saved; and if we can not trust three Senators and five Representatives, whom are we going to trust? Are we going to concede that only the worst men get office and all the best men are relegated to private life and must be made commissioners to investigate and report, instead of selecting Senators and Representatives for that duty? That, sir, is a theory on which we have been proceeding here too long.

Mr. CULLOM. Let us vote.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The Senator from Illinois says "let us vote." I do not want this bill to pass in this shape. I love the Senator from Illinois, but I can not consent to quit just yet. As soon as I see that there is no quorum here, I will yield. I wish Senators would all go now. I would like to be accommodating; but I come back to this section and I say again that these five lines ought to be stricken out. If they shall pass in the bill they will be a disgrace to the statutes of the United States. At least, that is my opinion.

If the committee themselves were clothed with the authority it would be a different thing, but they invoke the power of the court to compel the attendance of these witnesses, and, as it were, these witnesses are before the court. They are responsible to the court. They are answerable to the court, in other words, and here they are required to testify, in the language of this bill, even though their testimony may criminate themselves.

Mr. President, it is mighty hard to have to yield the floor just when you think you are becoming interesting, but I shall do it, sir, in deference to the wish of the Senator who sits in front of me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HAWLEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the absent Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON]. His colleague [Mr. GORMAN] says there is no objection to my voting. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. My colleague [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—18.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Blair, | Hawley, | Mitchell of Pa., | Teller, |
| Bowen, | Hoar, | Ransom, | Vance, |

| Conger, | Harrison, | Payne, | |

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to insert between lines 113 and 114 of section 2 a separate paragraph, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, between lines 113 and 114, it is proposed to insert:

Said commission shall also inquire into and report upon the relations of said railroads to the interests of the communities through which they pass, and all questions concerning the payment of taxes, especially upon lands granted by Congress, and the delay of said companies in taking out patents for such lands, the rates of fare and freight charged, discrimination, differential pools, and other devices, and the facilities and accommodations furnished to the patrons of such roads, and their report shall embrace a consideration of the interests and rights of said communities as effected by whatever plan of settlement the payment of the existing debt may be proposed.

Mr. PLUMB. The President of the United States when he came to consider this question for the purpose of communicating his views thereupon to Congress in his last annual message says what I will read:

The Secretary of the Interior suggests a change in the plan for the payment of the indebtedness of the Pacific subsidized roads to the Government. His suggestion has the unanimous indorsement of the persons selected by the Government to act as directors of these roads and protect the interests of the United States in the board of direction. In considering the plan proposed the sole matters which should be taken into account, in my opinion, are the situation of the Government as a creditor and the surest way to secure the payment of the principal and interest of its debt.

I read that for the purpose of saying that the President has totally misconceived, in my judgment, the situation, and in fact the most important part of the situation relating to these Pacific railroads, and to say further that when this question comes to be settled I have perfect confidence that those who represent the communities which are served by these railroads will have something to say from the standpoint of the self-interest of the communities which are directly interested in the questions of transportation, and so on, as a matter of as much importance and to some extent apart from the mere interest of the Government as a creditor of these companies.

I do not desire to detain the Senate at this late hour, nor to do anything which will impede the passage of the resolution, but I wanted to call attention briefly to this matter for the purpose of saying that while the Government might well say under certain circumstances that it has had a large return in the way of cheapened transportation for its Indian supplies, for its mails, for its munitions of war, and so on, which might induce it to forego something of its legal right in determining what it could claim, or the method of its claim against these companies for money payments, the people who live along the line of these roads are entitled to be taken into account in this settlement, and the Government ought to take into account whether the settlemen that it makes, or proposes to make, will put unusual and unnecessary burdens upon them.

I think that is a matter of a great deal more consequence than the mere question of obtaining the debt which these companies owe, and justly owe, to the Government, either at the time of maturity or at any other time, and for the purpose of getting this matter properly before Congress in connection with the report of the commission, I move the amendment which has been read.

Mr. HOAR. There is no objection to the amendment.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should like to know what is the necessity for that amendment? Under the interstate-commerce act which has been passed, commissioners are to be appointed, and I should like to know whether they are not to take charge of the interests of the people living along the lines of the roads? What is the necessity to put a provision on the pending measure which looks to the protection of the people living along the line of the road when the object of the bill, if the truth has been told on this floor, is to secure the debt that is due to the Government of the United States, or will be due in 1892, 1895, and 1897?

The interstate-commerce act protects the people, if there shall be protection for them at all, and this but verifies what I said before, that this is not a bill designed here so many years in advance to collect what will be due the Government of the United States, but to make records for men who expect to meet their political graves before the debt that the railroad companies owe the Government shall fall due.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB].

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on the Judiciary report to amend the title. The amendment to the title will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend the title so as to read "A bill (H. R. ——) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of railroads which have received aid from the United States, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title will be so amended, there being no objection.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and request a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. HOAR, Mr. EVARTS, and Mr. PUGH were appointed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 55 minutes a. m., Saturday, February 26) the Senate adjourned until Saturday, February 26, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 25, 1887.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JOHN HOW.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I herewith return without approval House bill No. 7648, entitled "An act for the relief of the estate of the late John How, Indian agent, and his sureties."

John How was appointed Indian agent in July, 1878, and upon such appointment gave a bond to the Government in the penal sum of $10,000 conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as such agent, and to protect the Government from loss by mismanagement or malfeasance in his official conduct. The parties named in the bill were his sureties on said bond.

On the 23d day of December, 1881, upon a report of inspectors connected with the Indian Bureau, suggesting frauds and mismanagement in the conduct of this agency, Mr. How was suspended from his office, which suspension was approved by the President in January, 1882.

After such suspension the accounts of the agent were examined, and various explanations offered by him in relation thereto. It is stated, however, in a report from the Indian Office now before me, that such explanations were deemed by that office sufficient to remove only a small part of the items in the accounts which were questioned. The matter was thereupon referred to the Treasury Department for further examination and adjustment.

The Second Comptroller reports that the final settlement of this agent's accounts was pending before the accounting officers for upwards of eighteen months, affording ample opportunity for any explanation which might be deemed necessary and proper, and that on the 21st day of July, 1885, a final adjustment was made of the said accounts, by which a sum very much in excess of the penalty of his bond was found due from said agent to the Government.

A suit was afterwards instituted against the agent and his sureties to recover the amount thus found due, so far as the bond covered the same.

This suit is still pending.

The object of the bill now under consideration is to wholly release and discharge these sureties from any liability upon said bond.

It seems to be the opinion of all the officers of the Government who have examined the matter at all that a debt exists in favor of the Government upon this bond. It is reported that a large amount of evidence has been taken and that in the opinion of these officers the amount due the Government can not be reduced to a less amount than the penalty of the bond.

The Second Comptroller states, as results of examinations made in his office, and by the Second Auditor, that it appears that many of the vouchers presented by the agent were fictitious, the persons in whose names they were given testifying that services and supplies therein mentioned were never rendered or furnished; that in other cases parties denied the genuineness of vouchers purporting to be made by them; that a large voucher apparently given for cattle was actually given for money loaned, and that supplies bought with Government funds were appropriated for the agent's personal benefit.

I do not suppose that it was intended by the Congress to entirely relieve these sureties, if a condition exists such as is above set out, which results in an indebtedness to the Government. The proposed legislation, judging from the report of the House Committee on Claims, seems rather to proceed upon the theory that no sum is due the Government in the premises.

I think it will hardly be claimed that the patient investigation of the accounting officers should be lightly discredited in this case; and it seems to me that justness to the Government and fairness to the sureties seeking relief will presumably be secured by the further prosecution of the suit already instituted, in which the truth of all matters involved can be thoroughly tested.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 24, 1887.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the bill and accompanying message be referred to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL VETO—THOMAS S. HOPKINS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the Senate; which was read:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 23, 1887.

The President of the United States having returned to the Senate, in which it originated, the bill entitled "An act for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers," with his objections thereto, the Senate proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the same, and resolved that the said bill be passed, two-thirds of the Senate agreeing to pass the same.

Mr. MATSON. This bill originated in the Senate, and has been passed there, notwithstanding the objections of the President. I think it unnecessary to refer it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to refer the bill and accompanying message to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY FOR PRINTING SILVER CERTIFICATES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Treasurer recommending an appropriation in the deficiency bill for printing silver certificates for the fiscal years 1887 and 1888.

PETER KEMP AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of War to pay demands of Peter Kemp, I. Bassett, and Michael Olt against the Soldiers' Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEWIS ROTHERMEL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the opinion of that court in the case of Lewis Rothermel against the United States; which was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 5190) to enlarge the powers and duties of the Department of Agriculture, and to create an executive department of agriculture and labor, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The bill and amendments will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture. The Chair also lays before the House the bill——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, what becomes of the bill in relation to the Department of Agriculture?

The SPEAKER. It is referred to the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. HATCH. I do not understand that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] objects to my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman demands the regular order.

Mr. HATCH. That is the regular order.

The SPEAKER. A request for unanimous consent is not the regular order. The regular order is the presentation of bills to the House for reference under the rule.

Mr. HATCH. After the Chair had recognized me, and I had made my request?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MORRISON. There is.

The SPEAKER. The Chair so understood. The demand for the regular order is an objection.

CANADIAN NON-INTERCOURSE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3173) to authorize the President of the United States to protect and defend the rights of American fishing vessels, American fishermen, American trading and other vessels in certain cases, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 24, 1887.

Resolved, That the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill of the Senate, 3173, and ask a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. FRYE, and Mr. MORGAN be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as managers of the conference on the part of the House Mr. BELMONT, Mr. CLEMENTS, and Mr. RICE.

LAWS FOR IMPROVEMENT OF RIVERS AND HARBORS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following Senate concurrent resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 24, 1887.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed the usual number of copies of "a compilation of the laws of the United States relating to the improvement of rivers and harbors," including the laws of the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress; and that there be printed in addition to said usual number 1,000 copies for the use of the War Department; said compilation to be printed under the direction of the Secretary of War. And said compilation shall be accompanied by an appendix containing a tabulated statement of each annual appropriation and allotment for each improvement, by States when practicable, together with a statement giving the total amount for all the improvements, by States, and also the aggregate of all the appropriations.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 372) which I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the Chair recognize that motion?

A MEMBER. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. HATCH. This is the regular order.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, let us have the rule in relation to motions to suspend the rules read.

The SPEAKER. The rule will be read.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

No standing rule or order of the House shall be rescinded or changed without one day's notice of the motion therefor, and no rule shall be suspended except by a vote of two-thirds of the members present, nor shall the Speaker entertain a motion to suspend the rules except on the first and third Mondays of each month after the call of States and Territories shall have been completed, preference being given on the first Monday to individuals and on the third Monday to committees, and during the last six days of a session.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, Mr. Speaker, I concede that the rule gives it to the discretion of the Speaker to make these recognitions; but in that connection I want to say that I shall ask for the right of way from now on for the appropriation bills; and I hope until those matters are considered the Chair will not recognize gentlemen for motions to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks——

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, just one word in reply. The Chair will observe that under the rule just read motions to suspend the rules are in order during the last six days of the session at any time after the Journal is approved. There is not fixed any time during the day at which the rule takes effect.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was about to state that the construction heretofore put upon this rule is that during the last six days of the session it is in order at any time when the House is not actually engaged in some other business to move to suspend the rules if a gentleman gets the floor for that purpose; and the Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri. But the Chair desires to say that this matter rests entirely in the discretion of the Chair; and at this stage of the session the Chair thinks it would be his duty to give the preference to general appropriation bills, which must be passed to avoid an extra session of Congress. But the gentleman from Missouri having been recognized, the Chair will allow this motion to be made, but accompanies this recognition with the announcement that the business of moving to suspend the rules will not be entered upon generally until the appropriation bills are disposed of.

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say that the friends of this bill will not occupy a single moment in its discussion. It is the bill known as the experimental station bill.

The SPEAKER. The bill is not debatable now.

Mr. BURROWS. Under the statement of the Chair, then, all that is necessary to wipe out the rule allowing these motions for suspensions of the rules is for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to withhold some important appropriation bill, and force it upon the House in the last six days of the session.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not said that no gentleman will be recognized for motions to suspend the rules, but simply that the Chair would not, immediately after the reading of the Journal every morning, enter upon the general practice of entertaining motions to suspend the rules, the result of which would be necessarily, as there are a great number of applications for that purpose, to prevent the transaction of any other business in the House during the remaining six days of the session.

Mr. RANDALL. I only wish to say in reply to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] that no appropriation bills have been "withheld."

Mr. MORRISON. I desire to make a point of order. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] was recognized upon another question, to make another motion; and that did not give him the floor for this motion. He can not hold the floor and make one motion after another as long as he pleases.

Mr. HATCH. I beg the gentleman to remember that the matter upon which I first sought the floor had been disposed of five minutes before this motion to suspend the rules was made.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The Chair understands now for what purpose the gentleman from Missouri takes the floor, and recognizes him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri obtained the floor and made his motion. The Chair will put it. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to make a further point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. My point is that there are six days of the session after to-day; that this is not one of the days included within the rule.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks this is one of the last six days of the session, as this Congress will by law expire on the 3d day of March.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. At noon on the 4th.

Mr. RANDALL. At the end of a Congress the 4th of March is never entered upon as a legislative day.

The SPEAKER. The Congress expires by law on the 3d day of March. It is true that under the practice Congress actually remains in session until 12 o'clock on the 4th of March; but that is by a continuation of the legislative day of the 3d.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. It is all the same thing.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. DIBBLE. I make the point of order that the last six days do not begin until 12 o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. That has been already settled.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That in order to aid in acquiring and diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects connected with agriculture, and to promote scientific investigation and experiment respecting the principles and applications of agricultural science, there shall be established, under direction of the college or colleges, or agricultural department of colleges, in each State or Territory established, or which may hereafter be established, in accordance with the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, entitled "An act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts," or any of the supplements to said act, a department to be known and designated as an "agricultural experiment station:" Provided, That in any State or Territory in which two such colleges have been or may be so established the appropriation hereinafter made to such State or Territory shall be equally divided between such colleges, unless the Legislature of such State or Territory shall otherwise direct.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the object and duty of said experiment stations to conduct original researches or verify experiments on the physiology of plants and animals; the diseases to which they are severally subject, with the remedies for the same; the chemical composition of useful plants at their different stages of growth; the comparative advantages of rotative cropping as pursued under a varying series of crops; the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation; the analysis of soils and water; the chemical composition of manures, natural or artificial, with experiments designed to test their comparative effects on crops of different kinds; the adaptation and value of grasses and forage plants; the composition and digestibility of the different kinds of food for domestic animals; the scientific and economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese; and such other researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States as may in each case be deemed advisable, having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States and Territories.

SEC. 3. That in order to secure, as far as practicable, uniformity of methods and results in the work of said stations, it shall be the duty of the United States Commissioner of Agriculture to furnish forms, as far as practicable, for the tabulation of results of investigation or experiments; to indicate, from time to time, such lines of inquiry as to him shall seem most important; and, in general, to furnish such advice and assistance as will best promote the purposes of this act. It shall be the duty of each of said stations, annually, on or before the 1st day of February, to make to the governor of the State or Territory in which it is located a full and detailed report of its operations, including a statement of receipts and expenditures, a copy of which report shall be sent to each of said stations, to the said Commissioner of Agriculture, and to the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 4. That bulletins or reports of progress shall be published at said stations at least once in three months, one copy of which shall be sent to each newspaper in the States or Territories in which they are respectively located, and to such individuals actually engaged in farming as may request the same, and as far as the means of the station will permit. Such bulletins or reports and the annual reports of said stations shall be transmitted in the mails of the United States free of charge for postage, under such regulations as the Postmaster-General may from time to time prescribe.

SEC. 5. That for the purpose of paying the necessary expenses of conducting investigations and experiments, and printing and distributing the results, as hereinbefore prescribed, the sum of $15,000 per annum is hereby appropriated to each State, to be specially provided for by Congress in the appropriations from year to year, and to each Territory entitled under the provisions of section 8 of this act, out of any money in the Treasury proceeding from the sales of public lands, to be paid in equal quarterly payments, on the 1st day of January, April, July, and October in each year, to the treasurer or other officer duly appointed by the governing boards of said colleges to receive the same, the first payment to be made on the 1st day of October, 1887: Provided, however, That out of the first annual appropriation so received by any station an amount not exceeding one-fifth may be expended in the erection, enlargement, or repair of a building or buildings necessary for carrying on the work of such station; and thereafter an amount not exceeding 5 per cent. of such annual appropriation may be so expended.

SEC. 6. That whenever it shall appear to the Secretary of the Treasury, from the annual statement of receipts and expenditures of any of said stations, that a portion of the preceding annual appropriation remains unexpended, such amount shall be deducted from the next succeeding annual appropriation to such station, in order that the amount of money appropriated to any station shall not exceed the amount actually and necessarily required for its maintenance and support.

SEC. 7. That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair or modify the legal relation existing between any of the said colleges and the government of the States or Territories in which they are respectively located.

SEC. 8. That in States having colleges entitled under this section to the benefits of this act, and having also agricultural experiment stations established by law, separate from said colleges, such States shall be authorized to apply such benefits to experiments at stations so established by such States; and in case any State shall have established, under the provisions of said act of July 2 aforesaid, an agricultural department or experimental station, in connection with any university, college, or institution not distinctively an agricultural college or school, and such State shall have established or shall hereafter establish a separate agricultural college or school, which shall have connected therewith an experimental farm or station, the Legislature of such State may apply, in whole or in part, the appropriation by this act made to such separate agricultural college or school; and no Legislature shall, by contract, express or implied, disable itself from so doing.

SEC. 9. That the grants of money authorized by this act are made subject to the legislative assent of the several States and Territories to the purposes of said grants: Provided, That payment of such installments of the appropriation herein made as shall become due to any State before the adjournment of the regular session of its Legislature meeting next after the passage of this act, shall be made upon the assent of the governor thereof, duly certified to the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 10. Nothing in this act shall be held or construed as binding the United States to continue any payments from the Treasury to any or all the States or institutions mentioned in this act, but Congress may at any time amend, suspend, or repeal any or all the provisions of this act.

Passed the Senate January 27, 1887.

Attest: ANSON G. McCOOK, Secretary.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded? [A pause.] If not, the question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to suspend the rules and pass the bill which has just been read.

Mr. BRADY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know whether this bill is now subject to amendment?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Is not debate now in order upon the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not, because no second has been demanded.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand a second. [Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. HATCH. I make the point that it is too late to demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not too late; that the gentleman has the right to demand a second at any time before the vote is taken.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Provided I do not lose the right to occupy the floor, I have no objection to that proposition.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request that a second be considered as ordered? The Chair hears no objection, and a second is ordered. Under the rules, thirty minutes are allowed for debate. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is recognized to control fifteen minutes in support of the motion, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] to control an equal time in opposition.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURNES, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. 11234) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for prior years, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. ROGERS. I reserve all points of order.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent to supply a written report during the day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Mr. HATCH. I will reserve the fifteen minutes time to which I may be allowed, as I have no desire to take up a moment in the discussion. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with my remarks I will ask that order be preserved upon the floor.

Congress in its wisdom has blended together the two kindred subjects of agriculture and labor.

Mr. HATCH. That is not this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. You must not inject your remarks, my friend, into my speech.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But you are talking on the wrong bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I wish gentlemen would just allow me to make my own speech in my own way. The pertinence of their remarks will be apparent before I have concluded. It is a very difficult matter under the best of circumstances, especially when you are dealing with an experimental question like this; and this speech is only pertinent, being itself something in the nature of an experiment. [Laughter.]

I say that Congress in its wisdom has blended together the two subjects of agriculture and labor. Under the head of "agriculture," every bill that has been presented to this House with the "cow" brand upon it [laughter], from the moment it was brought up has been promptly considered and passed. [Cries of "Oh, no!"]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Oh, yes; whenever the committee has pressed them, while bills, so far as they relate to the subject of labor are concerned, have not been so fortunate. From the moment the present Congress assembled down to this very hour, except in one solitary instance, under a special order made on motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] in regard to the arbitration bill, when he submitted a motion compelling the Committee on Labor to make a report on that subject—I say beyond that time, outside of the brief moments when that committee happened to be reached under the call of committees in the morning hour, labor bills have never had one moment, not one minute's time in this House, except on the order made at the close of last session, when by persistent work we secured a night session through the kindness of the Committee on Rules, and you will recollect that a violent storm prevailed that night and we were without a quorum, and as a result were compelled to abandon every bill to which a single objection was made.

Under the call of committees to pass measures under suspension of the rules we obtained from this House last June a special order by the necessary two-thirds vote for the special consideration of labor bills, and up to this hour we have failed to obtain the slightest consideration, the special privileges of appropriation and other bills monopolizing the time of the House. I have even been willing to take a night session, but as yet it has not been granted.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Committee on Labor have had the same privileges accorded to them and the same opportunities that any other committees of the House have had.

Mr. HOPKINS. Do not interrupt the gentleman's flow of oratory.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I am obliged to my friend from Illinois. Wisdom is "hereditary" in your family. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have since the adoption of that special order, and especially during the last two weeks, been making repeated efforts to bring you gentlemen back to your duty. [Laughter.]. I am endeavoring to save you from the ruin to which your habits are likely to consign you. [Renewed laughter.] I want to bring you back to reason and to a recognition of your obligations to the people that you profess to represent.

There is not a man here who will dare to go back to his constituents and say that in this Congress, after adopting a rule by a two-thirds vote to give the Labor Committee the right to have consideration of its important bills, he then absolutely refused to give them even one moment of consideration. They are probably not great overshadowing measures, not ones that would startle the country, but they are the best the wisdom of this House has produced [laughter]; and we are simply the custodians of the measures sent to us by the House.

A MEMBER. Your committee originated most of them.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Our committee has originated the best of them, I believe.

Now, sir, I am compelled in this manner to enter my protest against this unfair treatment of a committee of this House—an important committee of the House—or else I would fail to do my duty; and I believe, as most of you gentlemen who do not represent entirely bucolic constituents will admit, that it is the greatest committee in the House when you get on the hustings in your district and when you undertake to explain to them how it is that you voted on this labor bill or that. [Laughter.] I have day after day stood here at my desk appealing to the members of this committee up to this time, and I hardly make the request for unanimous consent to set a time for the consideration of these bills than some crank will call "regular order;" or, more unkindly still, "move to adjourn," and I no sooner succeed in quieting or getting rid of one crank but another takes his place. There is always "Another Richmond in the field! Three have I slain already." [Laughter and applause.]

Now, sir, I have no desire to protract this visibly affected meeting. [Renewed laughter.] I have no desire to delay the business of the House, but in all good faith and sincerely I want to simply serve notice on you gentlemen that I will continue to make every effort to give each and every man a chance to go on record against taking up these labor bills by saying, "I object," or otherwise deliberately preventing their consideration, and when the gentleman returns to his people with such a record back of him possibly it may turn out that they will say to him, when he desires a re-election, "We object." I say I want to give him a chance to go on the record. And now let us be serious. I want the House to give us time to have our labor bills considered. It is simply a matter of right and justice, and the friends of labor in this House will appreciate the efforts I am making to secure just recognition for an element we all should honor.

Mr. CRAIN. Referring to the objectors, perhaps that is the only way that some of them will get upon the record.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Yes, for otherwise their record might be a blank; their name conspicuous by its absence. [Laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I have no objection whatever to the pending agricultural bill going through, especially as labor is to be a button at the end of its kite—as I understand it, agriculture and labor are twins. But I repeat, I will continue to make the request for consideration of labor bills here in season and out of season and at all times until I believe you will grant it; and I appeal to men in this House that are sensible, and some of them are [laughter], to stand by me while making the request, and above all things hold down these unfortunate, misguided, and contrary men who are ruining themselves by their objections. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, I move that the bill of the gentleman, my farmer colleague, from Missouri, be passed. I have no further objection to it. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, as this is a very important measure, in justice to the Committee on Agriculture, and as a matter of fairness to gentlemen on the floor from nearly every State who have aided in the perfection of this bill, I only want to say that the bill now presented is the House bill as it passed the Senate with certain Senate amendments. Those amendments are not entirely acceptable to individual members upon the floor or to a part of the Committee on Agriculture; but in view of the few remaining days of the session the Committee on Agriculture have instructed me to present the bill as it passed the Senate under a motion to suspend the rules that it may become a law and not take the chances of amending the bill further and sending it back to the Senate. There is no disposition to occupy any time in the discussion of the merits of the bill, for I believe every member, or nearly every member, of the House has carefully considered it.

I ask unanimous consent that members who desire to do so may be allowed to print in the RECORD remarks on this bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to suspend the rules and pass the bill.

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER stated that the "ayes" scemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 152, noes 12.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] is recognized.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to make a privileged report.

The SPEAKER. Is it a conference report?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out from said amendment the word "practicable," and insert in lieu thereof the word "possible;" and the Senate agree to the same.

R. W. TOWNSHEND,
GEO. C. CABELL,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. L. DAWES,
A. P. GORMAN,

The statement of the managers on the part of the House was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year 1888 submit the following in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and submitted in the accompanying report:

On amendment 1: The amount given for rent of offices for pension agencies is $20,000 in lieu of $15,000, as proposed by the House.

On amendment 2: The Secretary of the Treasury is required to furnish quarters in public buildings for occupancy of the pension agencies where possible.

R. W. TOWNSHEND,
GEO. C. CABELL,
JOHN D. LONG,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the gentleman from Alabama to yield to me that I may make a request for unanimous consent. The Committee on Appropriations have reported a bill providing the means for the purpose of paying Mexican war pensions under the recent law. I ask unanimous consent that that report, which comes unanimously from the Committee on Appropriations, may be disposed of. I think there will be no debate and that it will take but a moment.

Mr. HERBERT. That can be done by unanimous consent at any time.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. HERBERT. If that report can be disposed of by unanimous consent I will yield for it.

The SPEAKER. Other gentlemen are demanding the regular order.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports; and I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen having reports from committees, either public or private, may be permitted to present them.

Mr. EDEN. I object to the request so far as reports on public bills are concerned.

Mr. HERBERT. Then let the request be limited to reports on private bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. O'FERRALL. I object.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Can not we have the order allowing us to hand in reports of committees?

The SPEAKER. That was objected to.

Mr. PEEL. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL] withdraws his objection so far as the request relates to reports on private bills.

The SPEAKER. The proposition is, then, that gentleman having reports on private bills may be permitted to present them.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I desire that we may be permitted to present reports on bills of a public as well as of a private nature.

The SPEAKER. That has been objected to. Is there objection to the request that reports on private bills may be presented at the desk?

There was no objection.

The motion to dispense with the call of committees for reports was agreed to (two-thirds voting in favor thereof); there being—ayes 116, noes 4.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that private business be dispensed with for to-day.

The motion was agreed to.

Under the order above made reports were filed, as follows:

LIZZIE WRIGHT OWEN.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2797) granting a pension to Lizzie Wright Owen; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM WALLACE YOUNG.

Mr. PINDAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with amendment the bill (S. 2180) granting an increase of pension to William Wallace Young; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ALONZO B. CHATFIELD.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back the bill (H. R. 10235) to increase the pension of Alonzo B. Chatfield; which was laid on the table.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 10235, a bill (H. R. 11235) to increase the pension of Alonzo B. Chatfield; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN MOORE.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back adversely the bill (S. 1399) granting an increase of pension to John Moore; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM E. WOODBRIDGE.

Mr. TRIGG, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 221) for the relief of William E. Woodbridge; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

UNION NATIONAL BANK.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on War Claims, reported a bill (H. R. 11236) for the relief of the Union National Bank; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WHITE MOUNTAIN INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back the bill (H. R. 10636) granting the right of way to the Arizona Narrow-Gauge Railroad Company through the White Mountain Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona; which was laid on the table.

Mr. PEEL, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, also reported, as a substitute for H. R. 10636, a bill (H. R. 11237) granting the right of way to the Arizona Narrow-Guage Railroad Company through the White Mountain Indian Reservation, in the Territory of Arizona; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHARLES DE ARMAND.

Mr. SINGLETON, from the Committee on the Library, submitted the views of the minority on the joint resolution (H. Res. 223) granting a gold medal to Charles de Armand; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of continuing the consideration of the unfinished business, the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUCK. When the committee rose last evening we were discussing an amendment to this bill which provides for the appropriation of $12,000 to complete certain repairs on what is called the naval war college building on Coasters' Island. I shall be greatly obliged if I can have the attention of the committee, as it was agreed by unanimous consent that we would waive any general debate and use the little time we would have in considering this amendment and one or two other amendments, with the understanding that the debate should be practically confined to these two or three amendments. For that reason we took up no time of the committee in general debate.

Therefore I shall be greatly obliged if, during the very few moments I shall trespass upon your time, you will give me your attention.

As I said before, this amendment appropriates $12,000 to repair what is called the naval war college building, which is located on Coasters' Harbor Island, near Newport. A college to provide a course of lectures on the more advanced studies of naval warfare was established at that place in 1884, and it has been in full operation from that time to this. It has received an annual appropriation from Congress to provide for taking care of the building in which the college is located. The first time any objection was made to the appropriation was last year, when a portion of the Committeee on Naval Affairs thought it not best to make it, fearing that it might be construed into a justification finally for the establishment of a war college, with professors and lecturers to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States, and that it might entail other expenses which they were not willing or ready to justify at that time. So the general appropriation bill for the support of the Navy Department contained no item last year for the maintenance of this college. The sundry civil bill, however, did contain an item of $6,000 for the care and preservation of the building. That appropriation passed both Houses and became a law, and the money was used for the purpose for which it was intended, but it was not sufficient to complete the repairs of the building. Therefore an additional appropriation of $12,000 is asked for, and it is believed by those who are in charge of the enterprise that in all probability this will be all that will be required to keep the building in repair and in proper condition for the use of the college, so that it is not likely that we shall ever be asked for another appropriation for that purpose. Whether we shall be asked for an appropriation for apparatus can not now be foretold, but probably not, as the Navy Department will have all the necessary apparatus and can transfer it to this college for the purpose of illustrating the courses of lectures. So much for the expense.

The cost to the Government of the United States of maintaining the college proper is not one single dollar. The professors and lecturers who give the course of instruction are mostly in the service of the Government already and under pay, so that there will be no extra expense for the maintenance of this superior school for instruction in the more advanced studies of naval warfare.

And let me say here that this naval war college is not a post-graduate course of the Naval Academy at Annapolis; it is not a rival of that school, as some gentlemen have supposed, and I shall call attention in a moment to the testimony——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUCK. It was understood, and unanimous consent was given, that there should be no limit placed upon the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will rise informally to receive a message from the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 306) granting a pension to George Schneider;
A bill (H. R. 5629) granting a pension to Thomas G. Polley;
A bill (H. R. 7504) granting a pension to Larkin Delph;
A bill (H. R. 7971) granting a pension to Mary Wood;
A bill (H. R. 8205) granting a pension to J. W. Gooding;
A bill (H. R. 8469) granting a pension to John Moran;
A bill (H. R. 8486) granting a pension to Rebecca Morris;
A bill (H. R. 8720) granting a pension to William B. Eve;
A bill (H. R. 8818) granting a pension to Frederick Dierking;
A bill (H. R. 9863) granting a pension to Mary McCoy;
A bill (H. R. 10021) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Lathrop;
A bill (H. R. 6188) for the relief of John A. Fagg; and
A bill (H. R. 6712) for the relief of William N. Canady.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed House bills of the following titles, with amendments upon which conferences were requested, and conferees appointed, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 34) to authorize the East and West Railroad Company of Alabama to maintain a bridge across the Coosa River—Mr. VEST, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. KENNA;

A bill (H. R. 679) to extend the laws of the United States over certain unorganized territory south of the State of Kansas—Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. BERRY;

A bill (H. R. 3853) to authorize the Talladega and Coosa Valley Railroad Company of Alabama to erect a bridge across the Coosa River—Mr. VEST, Mr. DOLPH, and Mr. KENNA;

A bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States—Mr. SPOONER, Mr. HOAR, and Mr. JONES of Arkansas;

A bill (H. R. 9858) to authorize the Louisiana North and South Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River in Louisiana—Mr. CONGER, Mr. MCMILLAN, and Mr. VEST; and

A bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City, Miss.—Mr. GEORGE, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. PUGH.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concufrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 2898) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island;

A bill (S. 2930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North;

A bill (S. 3039) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same;

A bill (S. 3095) granting to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company the right of way through a part of the Crow Indian reservation, in Montana Territory;

A bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.;

A bill (S. 3160) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge by the Chicago, Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway Company across the Missouri River at Sioux City, Iowa, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North.

It also announced that the Senate had non-concurred in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 2997) granting a pension to Mrs. M. E. Woods, asked a conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SAWYER, Mr. BLAIR, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards in the United States Army, and to fix their pay and allowance.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. BUCK. I wish to be heard a short time longer. It was understood the debate on these amendments would not be limited by the five-minute rule, in consideration of the fact that no time was occupied in general debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Connecticut to say that it was understood debate should not be limited on this amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. The Chair will recollect that when I asked consent to dispense with general debate, I said that full debate would be allowed on this question. I do not know whether the gentleman understood that the debate was to be limited or not.

Mr. BUCK. A reasonable time, as we supposed, was to be allowed.

Mr. HERBERT. Does the gentleman thinks that half an hour on his side will be sufficient?

Mr. BOUTELLE. The understanding was that there should be reasonable opportunity for debate.

Mr. HERBERT. I understand that; and I propose to abide by the understanding. Will half an hour on that side be regarded as reasonable time for debate? On this side I think we shall not occupy more than ten minutes.

Mr. BUCK. I think that half an hour on this side will be ample.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I propose that there be thirty minutes allowed on the other side, and ten minutes on this.

Mr. BOUTELLE. That is satisfactory.

Mr. HERBERT. But I hope gentlemen on the other side will get along with less time if possible.

Mr. BOUTELLE. There is no disposition on this side to delay.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition is to allow thirty minutes in support of the amendment and ten minutes against it. If there be no objection that order will be made.

Mr. BUCK. It is understood that the time which we are to occupy commences now.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the arrangement suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] is agreed to.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call attention to a very few points in addition to what have already been stated, and will then yield the residue of my time to other gentlemen.

The last term of lectures at this naval war college commenced September 6, 1886, and closed November 20, 1886. It was attended by twenty officers of our Navy. The course comprised lectures on naval gunnery, on which there were sixteen lectures; on maritime defenses, on which there were five lectures; military strategy and tactics, on which there were four lectures; naval history and marine international law, on which there were several lectures; and seacoast defenses, on which there were five lectures. I mention these lectures for the purpose of showing what is the course of instruction at this naval war college; that it is not a post-graduate course of the Naval Academy at all but is a course in the higher branches of the science of naval warfare, in which all the officers of our Navy ought to be instructed. They ought to have the best and most advanced theories presented to them, and also the practical tests of those theories, which they do have at this naval war college under the supervision of its instructors.

We have similar schools in the Army. Some have objected to this naval war college because they thought we ought to have but one school connected with the Navy. Now, in the Army we have a school at West Point; we have an artillery school at Old Point; we have an infantry school at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; and we have just appropriated $200,000 for the cavalry and light artillery school at Fort Riley, Kans. We have also torpedo instruction at Willets Point, N. Y., for the Engineer Corps of the United States Army.

In England there are several schools in the naval department. First there is a school-ship, the Britannia, for cadet midshipmen. This corresponds to our Naval Academy, but instead of having a building for the school they have it on board a school-ship. Second, there is the Vernon, for torpedo instruction; then the Excellent, for gunnery instruction, this being a very valuable school indeed, for which we have no equivalent whatever. The only thing similar to it at all in our country is this war naval college, where the science of gunnery has been to some extent taught. England has also the Marlborough, on board of which is a school for cadet engineers. She has also the Engineers' College, which is modeled after our Naval Academy. Then there is the Royal Naval College at Greenwich; and last, making seven different naval schools, high and low, in the English navy, they have the Lion, Saint Vincent, and other large ships for the training of boys.

Now, in our own Navy we have first, our Naval Academy at Annapolis, with which everybody is familiar; we have the torpedo station for the manufacture of gun-cotton fuses and torpedoes and for instruction in torpedo work. We have also this naval war college, unless this House should wipe it out by refusing any further appropriation for the buildings. We have also a training school for boys. These are all we have: The Naval Academy, the torpedo station for the manufacture of torpedoes, and the training school for boys—if we leave out this naval war college. I think it would be a very serious mistake indeed to refuse to appropriate for the preservation of these buildings.

By the way, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] yesterday, in a very facetious and indeed contemptuous manner, said that this is a mere poor-house for which the Government of the United States is asked to appropriate. I wish to say that it is, on the contrary, a very fine building indeed, situated on high ground on Coaster's Harbor Island. I hold in my hand a picture of it. It is a very fine, substantial building, as shown by this picture, although it was taken when the building was in its most dilapidated condition. It has since been repaired; the lower and second stories have been put in order, and in other ways it has been improved out of the appropriation made by Congress last year.

It is a very substantial building, built of stone; yet it is the building which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] characterizes as a miserable poor-house which it is proposed the Government is to repair and take care of.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Was it not an almshouse? Was it not abandoned for a time?

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; it has not been abandoned at all.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Its condition was such then that no Christian community would allow it to be used as a poor-house.

Mr. SPOONER. It is entirely incorrect.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. It is entirely true.

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. BUCK. Let every member of the House judge for himself. Here is the photograph of this building. It is of stone. The walls of the lower story are 3 feet in thickness. It is a substantial structure, and all this appropriation seeks to do is to put it in repair so these war-college lectures may be delivered there.

I want to call the attention of my friends on the other side of the House to what is said by Mr. Whitney, the Secretary of the Navy. That gentleman, who is a member of the present administration, and whom the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] delights on all occasions to praise. He delights on all occasions to say that he is a thorough and most efficient officer of the present administration. All his political associates say the same thing. Now, I wish to call his attention to the fact that Secretary Whitney in his last annual report indorses this college and suggests the appropriation of this sum for the purpose indicated. He certainly ought to be good authority on that subject. He is a man of advanced ideas. He is anxious to do what he can to build up the American Navy.

I believe that if this amount of money is appropriated it will be enough. It is estimated that it will give a suitable building which can be used for fitting our officers for command of these ships, for which we are passing statutes and for which we are appropriating money here.

But what does Secretary Whitney say? He says this:

The importance of the work to be done by the college can hardly be overestimated. Additional courses of lectures are now in preparation for the coming year, upon other subjects bearing directly upon the art of war, and embodying those results of recent investigation which are inaccessible to the service in general.

There is other testimony here from Admiral Porter, who cordially indorses the college, and also from the Superintendent of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, who has no jealousy of this institution, but, on the contrary, is as anxious for its success and permanent establishment as anybody can be.

The following testimony taken from recent official and other papers shows that the college is now an established fact and a recognized part of our naval educational system.

Captain Walker, chief of Bureau of Navigation, in his recent annual report, uses the following language:

NAVAL WAR COLLEGE.

During the past year water has been introduced into the building, a sewer built to connect it with the sea, the foundation cemented and drained, the first and second stories thoroughly repaired, and the necessary changes made to adapt them to the purpose for which the building is to be used. It was intended to put the entire building into complete repair this year, but the appropriation was only sufficient to authorize contracts to be made for the repair of the basement, work on which is now progressing.

The second session of the college opened September 6, with a class of twenty-one officers of the Navy and Marine Corps, and will close on the 20th of November. The course was begun with lectures by Rear-Admiral Luce, commanding the naval force on the North Atlantic station, explanatory of the necessity which exists for the close study of the art of war, and the advantages to be derived from the establishment of the war college for this purpose. Full courses of lectures on naval tactics, naval warfare, the practice of gunnery, marine international law, military hygiene, military science, and coast defenses, were delivered by Commander Hoff, Captain Mahan, Lieutenant Meigs, Professor Soley, and Medical Director Dean, United States Navy; Lieutenant Bliss, United States Army; Commander Goodrich, United States Navy, and Captain Bixby, United States Army. Lectures on the duties of a general staff, on the preservation of iron and steel ships, and on the deviation of the compass, were delivered by Lieut. C. C. Rogers, Assistant Naval Constructor Gatewood, and Lieutenant Cornwell, United States Navy. The course was supplemented by additional lectures from General J. C. Palfrey, and John C. Ropes, esq., who again kindly volunteered their services without compensation. General G. H. Gordon had also again volunteered his services, but his untimely decease prevented the class from meeting that distinguished officer.

The advanced course of instruction on subjects directly connected with the art of war has been this year, so far as it was practicable, illustrated by practical exercises ashore and afloat, the waters of Narragansett Bay and their proximity to the sea offering peculiar advantages not to be found elsewhere. The naval war college may now be said to be fairly established, and I beg to commend it to the earnest support of the Department.

Admiral Porter in his last annual report to the Secretary of the Navy says:

The war college has had a struggle for existence, owing to the prejudices existing against it in the Navy, although none of those who have antagonized the institution can give a single good reason why it should not be fostered, while many good reasons can be given why it should. This antagonism has tended to discourage the officers who have given much time and thought to the establishment of the college. These officers are well known for their ability and devotion to the service.

It is eminently proper that the Navy should have a higher school of education than the academy at Annapolis, where, after all, the cadets only acquire the elements of their profession, and it is very desirable that the graduates should embrace every opportunity to see these principles practically applied or made plain to the understanding by a course of able lectures, which have become so popular in Newport that visitors consider it a great privilege to be permitted to attend them.

Greater facilities than it now possesses should be allowed the war college. A gunboat should be stationed there to enable the officers to obtain practical instruction in the heaviest class of ordnance, and also to conduct some practical experiments in torpedoes, for which facilities are not afforded at the torpedo station.

I hope I may be excused for inviting your particular attention to the matter of the war college, and trust you will urge upon Congress the necessity for making appropriations for advancing the great object it has in view, namely, the higher education of officers of the Navy, such as will enable them to better perform all the varied duties incident to their profession, and cause them to feel that the Government is anxious to encourage everything that will add to their efficiency.

And the Secretary's own report contains the following:

NAVAL WAR COLLEGE.

The second session of the naval war college, now in charge of Capt. A. T. Mahan, was attended with the most satisfactory results. It is to be noticed that the college represents the first systematic attempt that has been made in the Navy to give officers a higher training in the art of war, which is the end and aim of their profession. Formerly it was perhaps hardly required, but the increased complexity of naval science at the present day, and the great variety in the operations of naval war and in the mechanical instruments by which they are carried on, make this hitherto neglected branch of professional education an indispensable element in naval efficiency, a fact which is now recognized by nearly every Government in the world.

During the last session of the college courses of lectures were given upon naval evolutions, naval gunnery, the history of naval operations, international law, military strategy, naval hygiene, the preservation and care of iron ships, and the duties of the general staff. A striking feature of the programme consisted in parallel courses upon the science of coast defense, conducted by Commander Goodrich, of the Navy, and Captain Bixby, of the Engineer Corps of the army, thus securing a presentation of the subject from its two essential standpoints. The object of the lectures, to present in a compact form the latest developments in modern war, was supplemented by practical exercises with guns and with boats.

The importance of the work to be done by the college can hardly be overestimated. Additional courses of lectures are now in preparation for the coming year upon other subjects bearing directly upon the art of war, and embodying those results of recent investigation which are inaccessible to the service in general.

As opportunity offers, applications from officers for permission to attend the college course will be granted, and it is hoped that in time its scope may be gradually enlarged in the direction of practical training with modern ships and modern guns, as far as the resources of the service will permit.

Captain Sampson, superintendent of the Naval Academy, in a recent discussion before the Naval Institute, explains the objects of the war college fully. He says:

It is needless to say that an equally particular and accurate knowledge of our own resources would be required. All this information can now be furnished by the Office of Naval Intelligence, and this knowledge of facts may be considered the tools with which the strategist may commence his work.

The accumulation of such information may be considered as the first step in the way of preparation for war. Next must follow a careful study of the whole field, to decide how most effectively to use our own force and most certainly to paralyze the efforts of the enemy. In case his fleet is scattered, we should aim to destroy it in detail. If an important port is without the necessary naval defense, it would be the time to concentrate upon it.

On the other hand, we should anticipate and provide for similar efforts being made against our own weak points. We should have exact knowledge of the internal state of the country of our enemy, as to whether the Government is likely to be warmly supported under given conditions of warfare, or whether a decisive blow against him would awaken the patriotism of the people, or prematurely discourage them. We should know what nations would prove his allies under given circumstances, and the same knowledge of the strength and vulnerability of every possible ally must be, in like manner, studied. A little consideration will show that here is a vast field for study. It is not a subject that can be solved as one would solve a problem in science or a problem in chess. The student must have the whole resources of the Government at his command. It is the grand problem of war, and the elements which enter into it are widely varied, and in number equal to that resulting from the combination of all human passions and the material forces which act upon them.

It will also be readily seen that the number of problems may be very great; the number of nations that may become our enemies, and the various combinations which might be formed against us, would make the number great.

To study and solve these problems would be the duty of the general staff, as I understand that term. At any rate, it is the duty of the naval service to concentrate upon these questions the best ability and most painstaking thought possible. It is a large question; ample means and every facility should be provided by the Government to master it. And I am confident that those who will undertake this work will receive every encouragement when their aim is understood. It was to meet this want that the war college was founded. It was for the study of the science of war that this latest naval school was established. The scheme was to assemble a class of officers and propose such a problem as I have referred to—a war between the United States and another country—and develop a plan of action to be followed in the given case. After studying the question in all its bearings, which might require months of reading and research, a perfected plan was to be drawn up and filed for future use. A plan of action in case of a war with one country having been decided, another country would be taken and studied in the same way, and a similar complete and detailed plan prepared. You may say that such plans must vary from time to time, as the factors vary. This is true; but a careful plan would provide for many contingencies, and when any arose which had not been anticipated, the plan must be revised. An able chess-player forms his plan of attack and provides for his defense while he anticipates many possible moves. Something unforeseen may decide him to change his plan, but he must never be without one.

Such study as this will be an excellent school of preparation for war, and I believe that the plans resulting from this study would supply a great deficiency in our organization. Such study had not been undertaken elsewhere, and great credit is due the distinguished officer who recognized its need, and who has done so much to establish it. This scheme is not yet in working order, for, unfortunately, it has not been understood by the service, and (through misapprehension of its aims) it has been vigorously opposed. The war college is not a post-graduate course of the Naval Academy in the sense that it is a continuation of the instruction given here. It aims to teach, or, more properly speaking, to furnish facilities for the study of, subjects that are taught nowhere else. It is not a fanciful scheme to increase the book-knowledge and add to the already endless examinations of our naval officers, but it has been evolved from the necessities of the service.

When sharp and sudden war comes upon us there should be a well-considered plan of action to cover every probable condition of affairs, and there should be officers at hand whose study of strategical questions had prepared them to supplement, if necessary, the plan in question. If these plans were ready, and there were officers whose intelligence and skill in such matters were well known, their advice would be sought and followed when war came. If the number of ships and guns were small, the greater would be the necessity for such careful preparation, and the Navy would have done its part.

Nor would it be alone in time of war that such a state of preparedness would have its influence. In time of peace it would develop in the legislators of the country such a confidence in the foresight and wisdom of those controlling naval matters that they would trust their judgment and be guided by their advice as they have not been in times past.

Thus much I have said about the war college and its functions in a proper organization of the naval service, because I fear that it has not been understood. I think it is our duty to encourage and advance it in all possible ways. It is not a rival of the Naval Academy; it has a different field; and I sincerely hope that those who have its affairs in charge will confine its work to the original plan, which comprehended the science of war, international law, and naval history. This is a course which demands mature minds for its study.

Finally, we have the testimony of Professor Soley, United States Navy, who, from his long association with the Naval Academy and the fact of his having studied the various systems of naval education in Europe, is eminently well qualified to form a correct judgment on this subject.

In a very able article which appeared in Scribner's Magazine for February the professor says:

The establishment of the war college two years ago at Newport was certainly one of the most sagacious measures of naval administration that has been adopted since the close of the war.

It is a school of application for officers.

Being an establishment of a most original character it was wisely decided not to engraft it on the Naval Academy, an elementary school with which it has nothing in common.—Extract from "Our Naval Policy" by Professor J. Russell Soley, United States Navy, Scribner's for February, 1887.

The act approved January 29, 1887, appropriated $200,000 for a permanent school of instruction for the cavalry and light artillery service of the United States Army. The war college asks for $12,000.

How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes out of the thirty which are left.

Mr. BUCK. A single other point. Some gentlemen have advanced an argument against this college which it is difficult to answer, because ridicule is always the most difficult thing to answer, and we are driven generally to answer ridicule by ridicule, as no argument will off-set it. But it has been claimed these officers who take advantage of this course of lectures at the national war college are in danger of spending too much of their time with the beauties and belles of Newport and mixing in the whirl of society and fashion to such an extent as to destroy all the benefits of any course of lectures on scientific naval warfare. The answer to that is this: This course of lectures commences after the season, so-called, is over. It is held only in the fall, after the festivities of Newport have passed away, so that if there were any danger on that score it is entirely removed by the fact the term is not held during the gay summer season.

Now, whether that time was selected for the reason suggested I can not say; but I am willing to say here that I should not think less of an officer or anybody else, in the service of the United States or out of it, who saw fit to amuse himself of an evening by dancing. But however that may be, it is a simple matter of fact that the commencement of the term of lectures at this war college does not begin until long after the season at Newport is over.

I will now reserve three minutes of my time to close this debate, and yield for ten minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, the object of this naval college, as has been very well stated by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK], is to provide for the higher education of naval officers. This is provided for at this place by lectures, delivered upon the sciences connected with and relating to naval operations, by officers of the Navy fully competent to give instructions upon these various branches, and given, as has already been said, without any additional expense to the Government. This instruction tends towards that education of our naval officers which in these times is especially necessary if we propose to keep anywhere abreast of the great progress which has been made in naval warfare, and is still being made in that direction, by other nations of the world.

We can not well afford to allow our Navy, small as it is, nor our naval officers to fall below the position occupied by the other great nations of the earth. Our Navy, small as it, has a deserved reputation, the reputation of having for its service officers who are quite equal to those produced under any other government in the world, and who only require equal facilities to those furnished elsewhere to keep our Navy and our naval affairs where it should be, in a high dergee of efficiency for any emergency that may befall.

The appropriation that is asked for this building is to be used for the necessary repairs and fitting it for the use to which it is to be devoted. I was surprised to hear my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS], refer to the condition of this "poor-house" as he stigmatizes it, which was given by the State of Rhode Island and the city of Newport to the United States Government. I want the gentleman and the committee to understand that the location of Coaster's Harbor Island is one of the most delightful locations bordering upon the delightful bay upon which it lies, near to the city of Newport, in Narragansett Bay. It was used as an alms-house up to the time it was transferred to the custody of the Government, and it was the pride and admiration of that vicinity and of our State, as well as of all visitors to that locality; and the wonder was frequently expressed as to why such a beautiful site and such magnificent accommodations should be furnished for the purpose of an alms-house.

It was the desire of the Navy and of the Government of the United States that this location should be secured for the purpose of a training-school and for a naval war college; and what I may fairly characterize as the munificent liberality of my own little State and the city of Newport, a free gift of this island and of everything that was on it, including the building which is illustrated in the photograph I hold in my hand, was presented to the United States Government for the purpose to which it has been dedicated. The old proverb is that a gift horse should hardly be looked in the mouth; but this is one of those gift horses that may well be looked in the mouth, and be examined and criticised with the utmost care and vigilance. It was a munificent gift to the United States Government.

The location is the most admirable one for the purpose to which it has been devoted. Near at hand is the torpedo station of the United States Government, where progress has constantly been made in developing that machine, the torpedo, so necessary to modern naval warfare, and the outlook for which in the future gives promise that it is to be one of the most efficient instruments for the protection of our harbors in case of foreign attack. The lectures that are there delivered can be illustrated by the torpedo, if you please, and by its manufacture, which is close at hand. The water bordering it affords ample opportunity for the maneuverings of naval vessels, for trials of speed, and for the illustrating of naval gunnery. I am only repeating what the Navy Department and the experienced naval officers of the country have said so much better and with so much more authority than I can express it when I say that the location is admirably adapted for the purpose; and if the arrangements which they have proposed are allowed to be carried out, it gives an opportunity for the higher education and practical experience of our naval officers in the very directions where they most need that education and training, and where it is to be for the benefit of the Navy and the country which they serve.

I am not sure, Mr. Chairman, that I am any further interested in this appropriation for these purposes than any other gentleman on the committee or in the House; but knowing something about this location itself, believing that I understand somewhat the necessity for the appropriation that is demanded, believing that I appreciate somewhat the necessities of our Navy, and the kind of education which our naval officers should receive to fit them for active and efficient service, I have felt that it was incumbent upon me to say something in support of the amendment and to give to the committee something if I could of information touching the question now under consideration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut has eight minutes remaining.

Mr. BUCK. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HERBERT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO].

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, in a country like ours, where the people are rightfully fearful and wisely jealous of military pageantry and display, it is a great misfortune that our military schools should be established in connection with watering places, and characterized in certain seasons of the year as scenes of social display and dissipation. These things, trifling as they may appear to some, do much to arouse popular feeling against the military and naval establishments. The Army and Navy, like all other public establishments, are subject to the people. Let them be conducted practically, with decency and proper dignity to insure their efficiency, but not made vehicles for vulgar, un-American display.

Now there was no opposition in the Naval Committee to this post-graduate course for naval officers nor to the war college proper, but there was a well-founded suspicion that this so-called munificent gift on the part of the State of Rhode Island to the United States Government was given for the purpose of enhancing the charms of her own well-known watering place, the city of Newport.

And that, taken in connection with the fact that West Point has developed into a summer resort, and that the artillery school at Fortress Monroe adds very much to the attraction of that celebrated watering-place, perhaps warranted the idea that Newport had got this naval adjunct as one among its many attractions to the summer visitors. That has been denied on the part of those having charge of the school. But I am convinced, and I have no doubt all the gentlemen here are convinced, that a vote of the wealthy cottage owners and of the great hotel-keepers at this fashionable resort would be unanimous in favor of our well-dressed naval officers spending a few months in the year there, and while no doubt they will add a great deal to their knowledge of military science, they find some time to devote to the festive dance; and the giddy maidens, who disport themselves on the rocks in sun-bonnets in the latter part of the summer season, find quite a romantic charm in sometimes strolling on the shining beach with the epauleted, embryonic admirals of our decaying and dilapidated Navy.

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman allow me to say that these giddy maidens do not trip the light fantastic toe there in those cold November days.

Mr. MCADOO. My friend represents a community near Boston where the maidens instead of tripping the light fantastic toe and engaging in giddy flirtations are more likely to spend their time in studying the works of George Sand, Joseph Cook, Ralph Waldo Emerson, and other philosophers.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MCADOO. I have only five minutes and can not yield.

The fathers of the Republic when selecting points where the youth of the country should be trained for military service very wisely selected two places, which at that time did not promise to be fashionable resorts; and we have for the Navy in the old, quiet, respectable town of Annapolis in Maryland a most excellent institution, with more than sufficient buildings to accommodate all the cadets who are there being schooled, with a building to-day which for a few thousand dollars can be put in an excellent state of preservation and answer all the purposes of a war school.

Then why should we disseminate this service all over the country; a training school here at this watering place; an alleged war college, but really a dancing school, at another watering place; and a real college located at Annapolis. Ample accommodation and the quiet which is favorable to study can be found better at Annapolis than at those fashionable resorts at Newport.

Before the committee and in the public prints the admiral who had charge of this institution sought to impress upon the country that the reason for this war college being established at Newport was because ozone was so prominent in the Newport air. He told me in answer to a question in committee that at Annapolis the cadets would become enervated; the malarial conditions of the atmosphere would interfere with their studies and break down their physical development; and intimated that the best way to train up a cadet with robust physique and powerful mentality was to send him to add to the charms of gilded society at Newport.

I hope this amendment will be rejected.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERBERT. I now yield to the gentlemen on the other side. I desire to close the debate.

Mr. BUCK. I think, as we offered this amendment, we have the right to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule is that a gentleman in charge of a bill has the right to close debate.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I should like to have this question settled distinctly. I understand the chairman of the committee reporting this bill claims the right to close debate on every amendment offered.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not pretend to be a parliamentarian, but it appears to me that the general principle underlying the rule which gives the member reporting a measure the right to open and close debate is based on the ground that he represents the measure; he is its champion and advocate, and, therefore, has the right to be heard first, and to close any general debate on the bill as a whole. If that be the case, I can not see why the same rule should not be applied when there is presented here an original proposition in the shape of an amendment. The gentleman who offers the amendment represents the affirmative of that proposition. The gentleman in charge of the bill may be absolutely opposed to it; and it strikes me it would be quite as anomalous to give the member in charge of a bill the right to close debate on a proposition which he opposes as it would be to allow a member on the floor who opposes a bill to close the debate on the bill itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not undertake to decide who would be entitled to close the debate; but he believes it is the practice in the House to allow the gentleman in charge of a bill to close general debate. The Chair will feel it to be his duty, if no other gentleman addresses the Chair, to take a vote on the amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I beg pardon. Debate is not yet closed.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless some gentleman desires to address the Chair, there is nothing left for the Chair to do but to submit the amendment to a vote.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think the Chair misunderstood the point I suggested to him. The question I raised was whether the gentleman in charge of the bill has to use his time now in opposition to the amendment or can reserve it until the affirmative has been exhausted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that, according to the usual practice where time is divided, the chairman of the committee would have the right to close debate. The Chair thinks that at this time the gentleman in charge of the bill has the right to close the debate; but in making that decision the Chair does not refer to what is to occur as the bill progresses.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the chairman claim the right to close the debate in every case?

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am in charge of the bill, and have the right to defend it against all assaults that may be made upon it. I understand that to be the usual rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand that; but the thing I do not understand is why you should be put in the position of opposing a proposition and yet closing the debate upon it.

Mr. HERBERT. Whenever an attack is made upon the bill I have a right to defend it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will take the floor now, and I ask the Chair to kindly inform me when I have spoken five minutes.

This proposition, Mr. Chairman, is a very simple one. It is an amendment to the naval appropriation bill proposing to appropriate $12,000 for the necessary repairs to a public building, the property of the United States, situated in the harbor of Newport on Narragansett Bay, and occupied and used for years past for the purposes of a post-graduate course of study for the officers of the United States Navy. This war college has been in operation for several years; it has the sanction and the approval of the most distinguished officers of the United States Navy; it is commended by the Secretary of the Navy, and I think I am justified in saying here that the functions of the college will go on just the same whether you make this immediate appropriation or not.

This institution, Mr. Chairman, makes no charge upon the Treasury of the United States for its management. The appropriation asked is simply for the proper and necessary repairs of the building in which the exercises of the college are held. The lectures and the instruction given there are furnished entirely by officers of the Government, whose pay goes on just the same whether they give this instruction in a building with a leaky roof, poorly ventilated, and imperfectly furnished, or whether the Congress of the United States makes this meager appropriation to put the building in proper repair. I believe that this post-graduate course is one of very great importance and usefulness to the Navy. I should feel a great deal of modesty in stating that so emphatically were not my position indorsed, as it is, by men whose attainments ornament the history of the Navy and furnish a great part of its prestige to-day. Such men as Admiral Porter, Admiral Simpson, the Superintendent of the Naval Academy, Admiral Luce, now in charge of one of our principal squadrons, and other officers whom I might name, are all earnestly in favor of the continuance of this institution. It fills a place that the Naval Academy can not fill. It deals with problems far in advance of the horn-book education given at the Academy. It is a school where mature officers deal with the great problems of handling ships in line of battle, and where they acquire that familiarity with the coast lines, the harbors, the channels, the modes of attack and defense upon foreign coasts, which, if we ever get into trouble, will prove of inestimable value to our Navy. It is a school for the higher education of our naval officers, and I can not conceive of any opposition to it within the rank and file of the service, unless it come from some class of officers who have a desire that no others shall acquire more proficiency or more scientific knowledge than they have themselves.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. There are three minutes remaining on that side.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HERBERT. I notify the gentlemen that it has been decided that I have the right to close the debate. I will yield now for the three minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No; that is not necessary. Mr. Chairman, I submit——

Mr. HERBERT. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that I have the right to close the debate.

Mr. BUCK. Does the Chairman rule that the chairman of the committee has the right to close the debate on every affirmative proposition?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the Chair does not decide that. The Chair decides in this instance that the chairman of the committee has the right to close the debate this time. There is remaining three minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, the first session of this naval war college began September 3, 1885. There has been some misapprehension as to when that session commenced. It was authorized October 6, 1884, and the preparations were made for lectures to be delivered the following fall. They were commenced September 3, 1885, according to the report of Secretary Whitney. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] thought that last year was the first time there had been any course of lectures at this college, but that is an error.

Both terms of the college have been held in the fall—a season of the year when dancing on the lawn or verandas at Newport is entirely out of order. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] probably had his speech prepared on the supposition that the course at this naval war college was in progress at the height of the Newport season; but his remarks about "giddy maidens" and "dancing officers" will hardly apply to a season of the year when chilly winds are blowing and the snows begin to come in that section of the country. The remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey in regard to the ball-rooms and the dancing at Newport have no connection whatever with this subject. At a proper time and in connection with a suitable subject I should be glad to hear that gentleman describe a ball-room and a dance and a flirtation, for I know of nobody on this floor who can do it better. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Is it not proposed to extend this course to six months hereafter, instead of three months as heretofore?

Mr. BUCK. I do not know what the proposition is.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Was it not so stated before the committee by the champion of this measure?

Mr. BUCK. I do not know whether it was or not.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. That was the proposition, I believe.

Mr. BUCK. I think it would be a very good thing; I hope we shall go forward and not backward in this matter.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Do I understand my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] to change his ground from an accusation in regard to the past to an indictment of what may take place in the future?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I shall be very glad to answer that inquiry when there comes up any question properly hinging upon either of those contingencies.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the highest possible education ought to be received by our young naval officers. I am in favor of a post-graduate course at Annapolis. I am opposed to the establishment of a separate college at Newport, or wherever this college is located. There can be but one reason given in favor of this establishment, and that was stated by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER]. He said that Coaster's Harbor Island is one of the most delightful locations in the country, which is true; and is near Newport, which is also true. When you have stated those facts you have given all the reasons which can be urged why we ought to have a separate post-graduate course away from Annapolis. What other college in this country, what college anywhere in the world, has a post-graduate course away from itself?

Mr. SPOONER. West Point has.

Mr. HERBERT. I can not yield. At Annapolis, as Superintendent Ramsay said to the commission which visited there last year, we have a building suitable for the accommodation of these officers; we have the water; we have the library; we have the machinery; we have all the necessary appliances and surroundings.

The establishment of this separate naval college accommodates now only about twenty men every year—no more. If the course of instruction be so valuable its benefits ought to be afforded to the young men just as they graduate. The assertion that a young man who has graduated at the Naval Academy is not competent to understand these lectures is really not worthy of a reply.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will not the gentleman state the opinion of the Superintendent on that point?

Mr. HERBERT. I can not permit myself to be interrupted. I have given the opinion of Superintendent Ramsay, which I believe to be perfectly sound.

Mr. Chairman, while an appropriation of $12,000 is now asked, this proposition in its present shape is but the grain of mustard seed which may hereafter grow into a great tree. The adoption of this proposition may eventuate in our having another great naval college, a rival to that at Annapolis, to be built upon the shores of Rhode Island, because, to use the language of the gentleman from that State, it is "the most pleasant location in America!"

Mr. SPOONER. And I might have said the birthplace and nursery of the American Navy.

Mr. HERBERT. I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will not be adopted. The Navy and naval officers have no better friend than I am. But I do believe that they are making a mistake when they make these extravagant demands on the American people. I hope that Congress will here and now nip this thing in the bud. Whenever a suitable proposition is offered to us let us make provision for a post-graduate course in the Naval Academy at Annapolis, to which every reason points as the proper location. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 85 insert the following:

"For repairs and improvements on naval war college building; heating, lighting, and furniture for same; books and stationery; freight and other contingent expenses, including facing college buildings with Portland cement, $12,000."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 70, noes 81.

Mr. BOUTELLE. No quorum. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BUCK and Mr. HERBERT were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 88.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Norfolk, Va., for one writer, at $1,017.25.

Mr. WISE. I move to strike out, in line 163, the words "one writer at $1,017.25," and in lieu thereof insert "clerk, at $1,200;" and I hope the chairman of the committee will consent to accept that amendment. If he refuses to do so I hope the House will sustain me.

I will state that this officer is a clerk, and in all the other bureaus of this yard clerks are provided for. His present compensation is exactly what I wish it shall continue to be. He receives $1,200 per annum now, and the saving to the Government is simply $182.75.

This officer has to do as much duty as any clerk in any other bureau in this navy-yard. I hope he will be continued at his present rate of compensation. The estimates from the Navy Department call for a clerk at $1,200, and I can see no reason why he should be reduced when others are continued as at present.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the estimates under the head of Bureau of Ordnance. It will be found the gentleman from Virginia is mistaken in his statement in regard to the other navy-yards. You will find for the navy-yard at Portsmouth, N. H., one writer is provided for. Also, at the navy-yard at Boston, Mass. At Mare Island, California, only one writer is provided for according to the estimates.

Mr. HOLMAN. New York the same—$1,000.

Mr. WISE. No, it is above; it is $1,400. Washington is $1,600.

Mr. SAYERS. Take the ordnance proving-ground and you have one writer. The object of reducing the salary of this writer or changing it from clerk to writer was to place such employés upon the same footing to that of the other navy-yards except that of New York.

Mr. WISE. I will not detain the committee but a moment. The gentleman has not answered my statement at all. I stated for the other bureaus in the Norfolk navy-yard the other clerks are paid at the rate of $1,200 per annum. If the gentleman will look at the provision for clerk for the bureau of provisions to the Norfolk navy-yard, it will be above this, $1,200. In every other bureau these clerks are paid $1,200. In New York they are paid higher.

The gentleman makes the comparison between the writer at the navy-yard at Portsmouth and at Mare Island, in California, with this clerk in the navy-yard at Norfolk. Now, the gentleman knows the duties of this officer at the Norfolk yard are much more important and onerous than the duties of the writer at the Portsmouth navy-yard, New Hampshire. It is not a question as to whether this officer shall be raised in salary, but whether you shall reduce him; and I ask you to give this committee one reason why this officer, this clerk in the bureau of ordnance in Norfolk, should be paid less than clerks are paid in the other bureaus in this and other yards throughout the country for the same service.

Now, at the Washington yard provision is made for two clerks, one of whom receives $1,600 a year, and in addition to that you provide two writers. I want to state to this committee that for nearly twenty years this officer at the Norfolk yard has received the pay of $1,200 a year; and it does seem to me that in this hunt for economy you are playing rather a small game when you want to deprive a meritorious and hard-worked officer of the little sum of $183 a year.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me ask the gentleman from Virginia what clerk he refers to at Portsmouth, or the clerk of what bureau there who receives $1,200 a year?

Mr. WISE. I did not refer to the clerk; I referred to the writer at Portsmouth to show that he had no duty to perform.

Mr. HERBERT. He only gets $500.

Mr. WISE. But he does nothing whatever. His duties are very insignificant. It is well known that no work is being performed at the Portsmouth yard. Norfolk, New York, and Washington are the principal yards of this country where the most of the work is being done, and under the new arrangement, Washington being exclusively for ordnance purposes, Norfolk and New York are the only yards where repairs can be made, and hence the necessity for the employment of such an officer at these places. They are the principal yards of the country, and consequently the gentleman's comparison as between the work done at Norfolk and Portsmouth, and the pay of the clerks at those places, has no application whatever here.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in reference to the pay of this clerk in the ordnance department at the Norfolk yard. I know that there attaches to this proposition a great deal of responsibility. The duties incumbent upon him are numerous and important, equally so to the duties attaching to any other officer of the yard. There are a number of shops under his control, and stores; and unless I am mistaken the pay of the clerk at this yard in that department instead of being $1,200 a year has been $1,400 a year for years past. I see no reason for the reduction of the salary.

Mr. SAYERS. Let me say to the gentleman from Virginia that this is a reduction all along the line and not particularly applied to Norfolk.

Mr. BRADY. I understand that; but there is no reason for the reduction here.

Mr. WISE. I thank the gentleman from Virginia for his support. He understands the necessity for this service.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, a word on this question. This is a very small matter, but in order to vindicate the committee I desire to say that the reason for the reduction is that the duties in the ordnance department at Norfolk are much less important, as the gentleman from Virginia himself indicates, when he says the ordnance business has been taken away from that yard and the other yards of the country, and is hereafter to be done almost exclusively at Washington.

Mr. WISE. Why do you not reduce the pay at New York for the same reason?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not care to be interrupted now; let me get through.

The Washington navy-yard does that business nearly entirely. Now, we reduce the pay of the writer from $1,200 down to what the majority of the writers or clerks get elsewhere; and we saw no reason to believe that that compensation was not ample for the service.

So far as Portsmouth is concerned we appropriated but $500 for a clerk when required, but only then. It is not expected by the committee that even the $500 will be expended unless an occasion shall arise to render the expenditure necessary.

Mr. BRADY. But it should be remembered that at the Norfolk navy-yard vessels can go right up to the yard to receive their stores. At Portsmouth this is seldom done, and hence the writer there has little to do.

Mr. HERBERT. But it should be remembered also that ordnance work is being consolidated at the Washington yard, and so there is less need for clerical service in the ordnance bureau to do the duty at the various yards where it has been heretofore done. It is manifest these clerks will have less to do in the future.

Mr. BRADY. But the Government has expended a large amount of money to open the river and establish an ordnance depot or magazine at the Norfolk yard. The building for the storage of ordnance supplies is there, and the Government can not well remove that; and since the stores are there I see no reason whatever for this proposed reduction.

Mr. SAYERS. Does my friend from Virginia know that a large proportion, I may say nine-tenths, of the business of the bureau of ordnance has been transferred from the various navy-yards of the country to Washington?

Mr. BRADY. I understand that is contemplated.

Mr. SAYERS. It is already being done.

Mr. BRADY. But I say that the magazine which is already at Norfolk to receive the stores can not be removed, and these stores are in the magazine and must be cared for until removed.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask a vote upon the amendment.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. WISE; which was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph.

BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT AND RECRUITING.

Equipment of vessels: For coal for steamers' and ships' use, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling; hemp, wire, and other materials for the manufacture of rope and cordage; iron for the manufacture of anchors, cables, galleys, and chains; canvas for the manufacture of sails, awnings, bags, and hammocks; water for steam-launches; heating apparatus for receiving-ships; and for the purchase of all other articles of equipment at home and abroad, and for the payment of labor in equipping vessels and manufacture of equipment articles in the several navy-yards, $600,000.

Mr. GOFF. I offer an amendment to the paragraph just read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 196, strike out "$600,000" and insert "$800,000."

Mr. GOFF. I find in the Book of Estimates that the amount required during the coming fiscal year for the various purposes set forth in this paragraph is $800,000. The sum appropriated for the present fiscal year is $782,200. The amount recommended by the committee for the coming fiscal year is $600,000, a reduction of $200,000 from the estimates.

Now, there must be some reason for this other, at least, than appears in the Book of Estimates, for the action of the committee is certainly a reflection upon the department. After carefully considering all of these items, after, as required by law, making the most economical calculations of the sum total required, the Secretary informs us the least sum he can do with for these purposes—and they are very material and essential, especially when we are now engaged in the construction of a new navy—that the least sum for those purposes is $800,000. And, as I have said, the sum of $782,200 was appropriated for these purposes for the present fiscal year.

I may be permitted to remark here that all through this bill these seemingly at least arbitrary reductions have been made, and I suggest to the chairman that by this and by this alone has he been enabled to state to this House that the sum appropriated in this bill is several hundred thousand dollars less than the amount appropriated for the present fiscal year. In the instance that my friend from Virginia just cited, where there was a reduction in the wages of a subordinate officer, my friend was fortunate enough to secure a reinstatement in the particular case he alluded to. But all along the line and in all the navy-yards and in all the departments of the Government where naval matters are administered, the same reduction has been made for the men who are doing the hard work of the departments, for the clerks and the writers; they have been razeed in the manner the gentleman has alluded to.

Now, I say, Mr. Chairman, this is not true economy. It is not economy always to save a few dollars, nor is it right that we should have a deficiency thrown upon this House to be considered hereafter instead of our meeting this matter now fairly in the face and making the appropriation when it is proper to be made. Only to-day we had a general deficiency bill reported containing items that should have been cared for in the last session of this Congress, and which were then omitted.

I know there can be and that there will be a reason shown from the standpoint of those who support these reductions why they should be made. But I insist that in this matter we should treat the department fairly. We should consider that the department at least understands its business, and that it is not likely to ask $200,000 more than is absolutely essential for carrying on the business of the department in this branch of the service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] evidently is not informed as to the facts developed before the committee with regard to this particular item. The appropriation for the present year was $782,000; and it was testified before us that of that amount there would probably be a surplus of $125,000—that there was likely to be that much over—bringing the amount to be expended down to about $650,000. And yet, in the face of that testimony, the gentleman from West Virginia asks us to raise the appropriation to $800,000.

The gentleman also speaks about these estimates as coming from the Secretary of the Navy. Does he not know how they are made? They are made generally by the heads of bureaus. Last year the estimate was $860,000. We cut this down to $782,000, and with that appropriation there is growing up this surplus of $125,000; so we cannot go upon these estimates. If we had appropriated according to the estimates last year the surplus would have been a great deal more than it is.

The gentleman speaks of the deficiency. I have the figures here at hand which show that outside of the deficiency for the new ships, the Chicago, the Atlanta, the Boston, and the Dolphin, for which we gave every cent estimated, the deficiencies in the appropriations for the naval service will amount to only about $25,000. In other words, our bill of last year in which we made such great reductions from the estimates was so carefully considered and so justly apportioned among all the different bureaus that the amount of deficiency was less than it ever was before. We have framed this bill on the same idea, giving everywhere just what we believed was necessary and withholding money where it was not necessary.

The gentleman from West Virginia speaks about there being no economy in this. There is no better illustration than is presented by this particular bureau. I speak of the past, not of the present chief, Commodore Schley, who deserves all praise. When we examined last year into that bureau we found there was enough canvass on hand to clothe the whole British navy, and there were anchors on hand, and are now, to the number of over two thousand.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Sixteen hundred and fifty-seven.

Mr. HERBERT. My colleague on the committee says sixteen hundred and fifty-seven, a great many of which are useless. That is to say, in times past much more money was appropriated to that bureau than was necessary. With the unnecessary money thus appropriated unnecessary purchases were made, unnecessary goods were manufactured, and so the Government was subjected to great loss. We propose to give now just what we believe is right, just what we believe is needed. That is what we have done. A careful examination by the subcommittee into this whole matter brought us to the conclusion that we could get along with $600,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to page 14 of the report of the Secretary of the Navy, where he will see that for the year ending June 30, 1886, there was a surplus of $380,125.19, the only surplus that has occurred in the management of the ordinary expenses of the Navy Department for the last fifteen years?

Mr. GOFF. If the gentleman will permit me, does it not seem extraordinary that, in the light of the information which he cites (and of which I am well aware), the Secretary should, nevertheless, send in the estimate for $800,000 to which I have called attention.

Mr. SAYERS. We are discussing the question whether the appropriation as reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs is correct; not the question whether the Secretary ought to have returned such estimate as he has returned to this House.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Chairman, I simply desired to call the attention of the House to this discrepancy and to the manner in which I anticipated it would be accounted for. If gentlemen are satisfied with the amount I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk continued the reading of the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to move to strike out the paragraph commencing on line 255. Will it be read first?

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For two timber dry-docks, to be located at such navy-yards as the Secretary of the Navy may indicate, each dock to be not less than 480 feet in length, the cost of the two docks not to exceed in the aggregate the amount herein appropriated, $1,100,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation proposes——

The CHAIRMAN. What is the motion?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to strike out the paragraph. It is proposed by this paragraph, Mr. Chairman, to construct—[a pause]—I will make a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. I intend to make the point of order upon this paragraph, and I desire to know whether I shall lose the point of order by discussing the paragraph beforehand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that it is too late now to make the point of order.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman has waived his point of order by moving to strike out.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it is now too late to make the point of order, after the gentleman has moved to strike out the paragraph and has proceeded to discuss it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The paragraph has only been read. We have not entered upon any debate.

Mr. HERBERT. When the gentleman moves to strike out, that treats the paragraph as properly in the bill. The motion is based upon the supposition that the House must strike it out in order to get rid of it. Therefore the gentleman has clearly waived his point of order—if there be any point. I do not believe there is.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that it was necessary for the paragraph to be read before the point of order could be made. I made no motion. I rose in my place and stated that I intended to make a motion to strike out, and then I asked the chairman whether the paragraph must first be read or not. The paragraph was ordered to be read and was read. I then, in order to save my rights, rose to a parliamentary inquiry as to whether I could make the point of order after discussing the paragraph, or whether I must make it before the discussion. I contend, therefore, that the point of order has not been foreclosed, and that there is no motion pending. I have made no motion. I simply intimated an intention, and I asked instruction of the Chair because I am not so well versed in parliamentary rules as my friend the chairman of the committee, who seems disposed to take advantage of the technicalities of procedure here in regard to this bill.

Mr. HEBBERT. I desire to have read these words, which the gentleman from Maine used, "I move to strike out the paragraph."

Mr. BUCK. I submit that neither a motion to strike out nor a point of order can be made upon a paragraph until the reading has been finished.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has refreshed his memory by reference to the notes of the stenographer, and finds that before the paragraph was read, the gentleman from Maine, as stated by him, asked whether he should wait until the paragraph was read before making his motion. The Chair informed him that the paragraph should first be read, which was thereupon done. Then the gentleman hesitated a moment, and seemed about to begin some debate. The Chair asked him what motion he desired to make. He thereupon stated that he desired to move, and did move, to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I asked the Chair a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman then proceeded a moment to speak, and then asked the parliamentary question as to when the point of order should be made.

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the Chair please, I said I intended to make a motion to strike out, and then asked the Chair what would be the effect in regard to the point of order if I should enter upon the discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. That was at a time after the motion to strike out had been submitted and was pending.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think the Chair did not make the inquiry as to what motion was made, but that inquiry occurred in a colloquy between the gentleman from Maine and the gentleman having charge of the bill. That is my recollection. And if that was the case, there was no "debate" in the proper sense intervening between the reading of the paragraph and the time when the inquiry was made as to what effect the motion to strike out would have on the right to make the point of order.

Mr. HERBERT. I am very sure the record will not sustain the recollection of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Possibly not.

Mr. REAGAN. The report will show that the gentleman from Maine moved to strike out and was proceeding to discuss that motion.

Mr. WISE. I distinctly asked the gentleman from Maine, "What is your motion?" and he said, "To strike out the whole clause."

Mr. BOUTELLE. I said I intended to move to strike out the paragraph. But, Mr. Chairman, the very fact that I did not proceed to argue any motion, but presented a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair in regard to the proper time when the point of order could be made, ought to establish conclusively, it seems to me, the status of this question before the House. I did not undertake to argue any motion; I was not on my feet to support any motion; but I asked the Chair to instruct me whether I could proceed to discuss the subject without losing the right to make a point of order on the paragraph. Thereupon this discussion began; and the question now before the Committee of the Whole is just where it stood then. The question before the Chair is whether, the paragraph having been read for the information of the House, it is incumbent upon me to make a point of order now or whether I can go on and discuss the subject and then make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the statement to which the gentleman now refers was made after he had submitted the motion to strike out. The Chair distinctly asked the gentleman what motion he desired to make. He said he moved to strike out the section; and after that, hesitating for a time, he asked when he could make a point of order. The Chair was of opinion that it was then too late to make the point of order, for the rule provides that "this point of order may be made at any time before the consideration of the paragraph is entered upon." A motion to strike out a paragraph is in the nature of "consideration" of it; and after such a motion is made, and has been entertained by the Chair, it is too late to raise the question that the paragraph is out of order. The Chair thinks, therefore, that it is too late to entertain the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Does the Chair rule there is no parliamentary inquiry now before him?

The CHAIRMAN. There was a parliamentary inquiry before the Chair, but it has been answered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I wish to know whether the Chair does not recognize that there is a question before him as to whether a member must make a point of order before proceeding to discuss a measure, or may have a right to make it after the discussion has begun. I submit that is the question before the Chair. I can not be precluded from making a point of order because I have sought the instruction of the Chair as to when the proper time will arrive for making the point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the motion to strike out the paragraph was in the nature of consideration of the paragraph. The motion having been submitted, and having been entertained by the Chair, it was then too late to raise any question of order upon the paragraph. The Chair entertains the motion to strike out.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, if it is proposed to take advantage of this sort of procedure to legislate $1,100,000 out of the public Treasury, I think I can afford to let the responsibility for that kind of legislation rest upon the gentlemen who resort to that kind of tactics. Here is a proposition that every member of the committee knows has no proper place in an appropriation bill. There is no law providing for the construction of such docks. There is no law providing for the construction of that kind of docks. It is proposed here under a snap judgment, obtained by what might well be styled parliamentary pettifogging, to smuggle into an appropriation bill a proposition to spend a million and over of dollars to construct timber dry-docks somewhere, at some place presumably within the territory of the United States, but not indicated by the gentlemen who framed this bill. Two timber dry-docks are to be built at such navy-yards as the Secretary of the Navy may indicate. No opportunity for Congress to decide where such docks are needed, where it is most expedient, where the interests of the United States would be best subserved by building the docks. But these great public works costing over half a million of dollars apiece are to be built wherever the Secretary of the Navy in his whim or caprice may see fit to locate them.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, it is a novel proposition, within my recollection or reading of the proceedings of the Congress of the United States. We can not pass a bill here to construct a little post-office in any part of this country without indicating in detail the location, the specifications, the purpose for which it is to be built, and even then the chances are the bill, after passing Congress, will be set aside by the scrutiny of the Executive; yet here is a proposition to vest the Secretary of the Navy with discretionary power to carry on great public works in this country at some indefinite and unknown place—to commence the digging of a great dry-dock basin, not where Congress may say the interests of the public demand it should be, but possibly where the exigencies of a Presidential election may suggest to the gentleman now presiding over the Department of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if he proposes to hold members strictly to the five-minute rule in this debate?

Mr. HERBERT. I do. The gentleman can get the floor again.

Mr. WISE. It is difficult to know where the gentleman from Maine does stand.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am sorry you have any trouble in that respect.

Mr. WISE. I have no trouble in that regard. He is first on one side of the line of economy and then on the other. A moment ago we heard from him in favor of an appropriation to build an additional naval college, and now he is opposed to providing the necessary docking facilities for our ships. While the education of our officers is a subject of great importance and should not be neglected, it seems to me to be also in the line of a wise policy to provide the means for the construction and repair of ships to be officered by them.

It is a sufficient answer to make to the gentleman from Maine to read the report of the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, one of the most accomplished officers in the Navy. I will read, Mr. Chairman, what he says, because it gives in small space the whole argument in favor of building these dry-docks:

> I beg especially to call your attention to the inadequate facilities existing in our navy-yards for docking our vessels. The modern vessels just constructed and authorized will be mainly without sheathing for their bottoms, and will require periodical docking to keep them in proper condition and to maintain their speed. In addition to this, the increase in length and breadth in vessels of recent design and construction require docks of greater dimensions than those now existing on the Atlantic coast.

You have not a dry-dock which can receive vessels of modern design.

I will say to the gentleman from Maine that, having the object in view of building up a navy, which your party did not do when it was in power, we propose to have dry-docks adequate to that purpose. I will read further from this report of the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks:

> At present there are but three dry-docks belonging to the Government on this coast, and, as it will be seen when the yards are treated separately, they are not in proper condition. When the dock at New York will be closed temporarily for the repairs authorized at the last session of Congress there will be but one—at Boston—with sufficient capacity to dock the vessels of the first rate now borne on the naval list.
> Our own experience, as well as that of all other naval and maritime countries, places beyond reasonable dispute the superiority of excavated dry-docks over any other means of docking, and the greater cost and length of time formerly required in building these docks has been very materially reduced in the wooden dry-docks on the Simpson plan, which have been successfully in use in several ports on the Atlantic coast for a number of years.

Now, I ask this House on both sides not to make this a political question as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] wants to do. While we are building ships we should have some docks of sufficient capacity to receive them. This is a proposition to build two wooden dry-docks on the Simpson plan, to cost, the two, only $1,100,000. Some years ago, when the gentleman's party was in power, $3,000,000 were appropriated to build one at Mare Island, California.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to get excited about this dry-dock matter. It is too dry a subject.

This is not a question as to whether dry-docks should be provided for our war ships. The question I raise is as to the method by which it is proposed to provide them. If the Naval Committee—and I say this to the chairman—if the Committee on Naval Affairs will bring before this House a distinct proposition for an appropriation to build a dry-dock at some point where it has been determined it is needed then we should have something definite before us for consideration. But I submit if the Secretary of the Navy and the Committee on Naval Affairs have not yet made up their minds that we need a dry-dock at all with enough distinctness to say where we need it, then I say it is asking the House to go ahead rather recklessly to put $1,100,000 in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy to be expended for this purpose. I want to know where the docks are to be built. I claim that I have the right to know it and that the Congress and the people have the right to know it.

Is there a proposition made here that the great dry-dock at Charlestown, Mass., should be enlarged? Not at all. Is the proposition that the great navy-yard at New York should be fitted or provided with a dry-dock of adequate size? Not at all. No information is vouchsafed us on that point. We are to put the money in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy, and he is to build the dry-docks if he sees fit, wherever he may choose. Now, if that is the kind of legislation that approves itself to the Democratic party I have either misunderstood a great deal of the oratory that has been indulged in on that side of the House or most of that oratory has had very little meaning behind it.

This matter is one that touches the very vitals of naval administration in this country. I am perfectly astonished when I find gentlemen who have inveighed here, in season and out of season, against the tendencies of centralizing power now coming in here with a bill which in this paragraph, and two or three others to which I will call the attention of the committee later, invests the Secretary of the Navy with a power never before thought of being wielded by any officer of the United States Government. The Secretary is to build the dry-docks where he sees fit. The Secretary is to decide in his own judgment and discretion whether the magnificent plants at the Boston navy-yard, that have cost this Government millions of dollars, shall be absolutely abolished, wasted, thrown away, turned over to the junk-dealers by a mere official order written at the Navy Department.

He is to determine whether that great navy-yard, at which to-day there are machine-shops equal to the best in any part of this world, where there is a bureau of construction fitted out for the building of ships second to none in this country—to determine whether it is to be turned over, as it is being turned over to-day under the personal, individual authority of the Secretary of the Navy, into a mere bureau for the manufacturing of anchors and chains and cooking-galleys for our ships. I think the people of this country have a right to know something about these appropriations. I think we have a right to demand that the Secretary shall indicate first where he proposes to carry on these great improvements before he asks for such appropriations as this bill contemplates.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I shall not attempt to answer that part of the argument of my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], in which he refers to questionable means adopted by the committee for securing this sort of legislation. It needs no answer.

A dry-dock is simply one of the tools employed by the Department in building and repairing vessels and no more requires a special act of Congress to authorize its construction or building than it does to buy a hammer or a hundred pounds of oakum. That the dry-docks we now have are unfit for the service every one who has investigated this subject knows full well. The dry-dock at the Boston navy-yard, spoken of so eloquently by the gentleman from Maine, is totally out of repair, is too short by 30 feet to take in even the Tennessee, to say nothing of the Boston, the Atlanta, and the Chicago. No heavy modern vessels can be put in that dock, even if in repair; but we found it so much out of repair that it was necessary to make an appropriation in this year's bill for that purpose.

I regret exceedingly that the committee did not indicate the points at which it was thought best to build these docks. A majority of the committee thought, however, that it would be better to have the Department determine these questions than for Congress to undertake to settle them.

Mr. HOLMAN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. In a moment.

The Secretary of the Navy is supposed to know where he needs tools most for the building and repair of vessels. It is supposed that he knows better than we do after the cursory examination we are only able to give to the subject.

We know that these timber dry-docks cost less than one-third the granite or stone dry-docks built heretofore; that they are used to-day universally in every country, having been adopted in preference to stone docks, and found to be practically as durable as stone, and requiring infinitely less expense to keep in repair.

Mr. SAYERS. They will last from fifty to seventy-five years.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I yield now to my friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. I only wished to ask one question. Is it not practicable to enlarge some of our present dry-docks instead of constructing new ones?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. It would cost more to enlarge the New York dry-dock, to put the necessary length on the Boston dry-dock, to extend the Norfolk dry-dock, than it would to build either one of these new dry-docks. It would take a greater length of time to make the repairs and would cost almost double the money. The dock, when completed, would not be worth as much as the dock built upon the plan proposed. A desire for economy, a desire to guard the Government against extravagant expenditures, and a desire to provide what is absolutely necessary now for the Government has governed the committee, and a charge of extravagance I repel as unworthy any one who seriously considers the subject. These dry-docks ought to be built. I have no objection to Congress selecting the place. Every one knows that New York is the place where one of these dry-docks should be built.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Why not say so in the bill?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I have no objection to Congress designating the point. I would willingly vote for the proposition if it was proposed to designate the New York navy-yard as one of the places, and the Norfolk navy-yard as the other. As every one knows, those two navy-yards are the great navy-yards on the Atlantic coast and the best locations for these dry-docks.

Mr. BOUTELLE. "Everybody" means the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I do not mean that. I mean everybody who has considered the subject free from prejudice.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And you have investigated it in that way?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I have investigated it thoroughly.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I wish to ask my colleague this question. Is it supposed the Secretary has the idea of building these docks at any particular places?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. What are those places?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. New York and Norfolk.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Then my colleague states that those are not only the proper places, but are the places which the Secretary proposes. Will he say why those are not designated in the bill?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. It was thought best by the majority of the committee not to raise the question on the floor of the House. For myself I have no objection to designating the places. I was in favor of that in the committee, but was voted down.

[Here the hammer fell].

Mr. TOWNSHEND was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I think I have said all that is necessary to be said. There were no political considerations governing the committee. I will not allow the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] to go beyond me in his Republicanism or his zeal for the good of that party which started this modern American navy, my friend on the left to the contrary notwithstanding.

The first steps taken to rebuild the American navy according to modern ideas and upon a modern basis were taken by the Forty-seventh Congress, the only Republican Congress there has been in the last ten years. The Chicago, the Atlanta, the Boston, and the Dolphin were authorized and directed to be built by that Congress, and that was the first step taken toward building modern men-of-war. I am proud of that fact, and do not intend, although agreeing with Democratic members of the committee in this instance, to have the Republican party robbed of the honor it enjoys of having inaugurated this patriotic movement for rebuilding the American navy.

Mr. GOFF. The gentleman from Virginia evidently misunderstood the objection that was suggested by my friend from Maine. No one is opposing the construction of dry-docks. As has been remarked, every one who has investigated this subject will concede that new dry-docks should be constructed, and that those now in use should be repaired. That is not the objection. The gentleman suggests it is, where should these dry-docks be erected? We are appropriating $1,100,000 for their construction—but where? I say Congress should determine that matter. I say the Committee on Naval Affairs should ascertain the facts, call competent witnesses before them, hear all the evidence, and determine the location. It should not be left to the ipse dixit of any man to determine this question. Personal interest might intervene; the interests of localities might come in; and the overpowering interests of party might step in.

I say this is a matter that should not be left to the determination of any one man. It should be determined by law. If we leave it to the Secretary of the Navy, how will he settle this question? If we are to judge of his future action by his past conduct, what will he do? We find that the Secretary of the Navy has already given the country to understand, and by his solemn order has declared—what? That at Portsmouth and League Island and Pensacola, the navy-yards shall be closed. He has declared that Norfolk, where my friend from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] says one of these dry-docks will be located, shall in the future be used only as a yard for outfitting, for boat building, and for furniture construction. He has also declared that the great navy-yard at Boston or Charlestown shall be used principally for equipment purposes.

He has declared also that the Washington navy-yard shall be used only for ordnance purposes, and he has declared that the Mare Island navy-yard shall be used only for purposes of storing and taking care of condemned ships. Now, then, where will he locate this great dry-dock? Will he put it at Brooklyn, as has been suggested? Why, no; because the Brooklyn yard is to be used—for what? Not construction in all of its details, but simply for construction as it comes under the bureau of steam engineering and construction. He will send the ship to Boston or Charlestown for equipment; then take it down to Norfolk for the purpose of receiving its outfit; or, if he wants to store it, then, according to his order, he must send it to Mare Island. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that they are doing that which will rise up in judgment against them if the order of the Secretary of the Navy is to be carried out. You will construct these dry-docks, gentlemen, and you will construct them where we shall have no use for them. The whole theory of naval construction, and naval organization, and naval outfit is to be reorganized, we are told, and the Secretary has already told us how it is to be done.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRADY. I move to amend, in lines 255 and 256, so as to make the provision read:

For two timber dry-docks, to be located at the Brooklyn navy-yard and the Norfolk navy-yard, &c.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, there is pending a motion to strike out, and the gentleman's amendment will not be in order until that motion is disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY] that the motion now pending is to strike out, and when that is acted upon a motion to amend will be in order.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call attention to the fact that any motion to perfect the pending section takes precedence over the motion to strike out.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is very clear.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. So that the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY] is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was in error. The motion of the gentleman is in order. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 255 and 256 strike out as follows: In line 255, the words "at such," and in line 256, the words "as the Secretary of the Navy may indicate;" making the paragraph read:

"For two timber dry-docks, to be located at the Brooklyn, N. Y., and Norfolk, Va., navy-yards, each dock to be not less than 480 feet in length," &c.

Mr. BUCK. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BUCK. Is it in order now to offer another amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. An amendment to the amendment would be in order.

Mr. BUCK. Then I offer the amendment which I send to the desk as a substitute for the two, and ask to have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph so that it will read:

"For one timber dry-dock, to be located at the navy yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., to be not less than 480 feet in length; the cost of said dry-dock not to exceed in the aggregate the amount herein appropriated, $550,000."

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that to build one dry-dock with all the modern improvements at a cost of $550,000 is all that we ought to do at this time. In the minds of some gentlemen the building of these dry-docks is an experiment. It is not so in my mind. I am heartily in favor of it; nevertheless I think the construction of one is sufficient at this time in view of the present condition of our Navy. When we have built more ships we may need another.

Mr. SAYERS. Do I understand the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK] to say that the building of these dry-docks is an experiment?

Mr. BUCK. No; I say it is not an experiment in my judgment, but in the minds of some gentlemen it is an experiment.

Mr. SAYERS. Is it an experiment in the judgment of any shipbuilder of well-established reputation in the United States?

Mr. BUCK. I have heard various criticisms upon this system of dry-docks. I do not share in that view. I approve of these dry-docks, and I believe it is perfectly safe to construct those that are provided for in this bill; but I also think that one is all we need at present. I do not think we need two at this time. Construct one, construct it well, use it, and then another year construct another if you need it. When we appropriate a half million of dollars for this purpose in my judgment that is all we ought to appropriate at this time. I do not care to argue the question further, because I am with the gentlemen upon the question of the value of these docks. I think, however, that this dry-dock ought to be located at Brooklyn. The Brooklyn navy-yard is the great navy-yard of the country, as everybody knows, and I do not think there is a member of this committee who will not say that if you are to have but one dry-dock Brooklyn is the place for it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat surprised at my colleague on the committee [Mr. BUCK]. I thought this provision was satisfactory to him. As to the statement made by my other colleague on the committee that the understanding is that these two docks are to be located at Brooklyn and at Norfolk, respectively, I can only state that I know of no such understanding as that with the Secretary. There was conversation between members of the committee upon the subject, and some of us said that Norfolk and Brooklyn would probably be the proper places for these docks, but there was no other understanding than that; and I feel fully warranted in saying that there is no understanding with the Secretary on the subject.

Before I sit down I wish to answer the question of my friend from Indiana as to whether it would be cheaper to repair and extend the docks we now have than to build these. The committee examined into that question carefully, and I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact, which I have no doubt is fresh in his mind, that the stone dry-dock recently completed at Mare Island, California, cost over two millions and a half of dollars. The interest on that sum at 3 per cent. would be $75,000 per annum, and in the course of seven years that interest alone would build one of the dry-docks proposed in this bill. We found in the course of our investigation that these timber dry-docks are now being built everywhere. One is building ot Newport News, where an effort is being made to establish a city; and docks of this kind are being constructed all over the world. There is no doubt in the minds of the committee that it is economical and wise to build these timber docks in northern latitudes where they are not exposed to the ravages of the teredo.

Now, as to the form of the provision. We thought two docks were needed. It was strongly urged that we should have three, but we concluded to authorize only two. We put the provision in the form in which it stands, because we foresaw the very difficulty that is arising here—local contests between different places wanting these docks. We do not propose to appropriate money for the benefit of any particular locality. What we propose is to give to the Navy two dry-docks, which it needs, and to make this provision in the cheapest and best manner, giving the Secretary of the Navy power to locate them wherever, looking over the whole field, he may think best for the interests of the country.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Is there any other place than New York or Newport or Norfolk where the gentleman from Alabama thinks it possible the Secretary of the Navy would decide to build these docks?

Mr. HERBERT. I think it possible he might decide to build them at other places.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. What other places?

Mr. HERBERT. Possibly Boston; I do not know.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Any other place?

Mr. HERBERT. Perhaps at League Island. I know that there is a great necessity for a good dock in the South, somewhere on the Gulf; but I do not expect one of the docks authorized in this bill to be put there. I do think, however, that a good navy-yard ought to be built up somewhere on the Southern coast; and I hope we shall appropriate money for this purpose at the very next session of Congress. But the intention of this provision was to avoid all these local contests which seem about to arise here between different places.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I would like to know whether the general preponderance of sentiment, inside and outside of the committee, would not be in favor of building the two docks, if you have two, at New York and Norfolk.

Mr. HERBERT. I can only speak for myself. I think I should build them there; but I do not know what the Secretary will do.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I want to know what the general preponderance of opinion in the committee is.

Mr. WISE. I will state to my friend from Illinois that the chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks has recommended that they be built at Brooklyn and Norfolk as the most suitable places.

Mr. BUCK. Who recommended that? I would like to hear what officer made that recommendation.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. Chairman, before we reached the clause now under consideration, I consulted with one of my colleagues from Virginia, and suggested to him an amendment providing that one of these dry-docks be located at the Norfolk navy-yard. Upon consultation it was deemed best that I should not introduce that amendment. I understood from him, in withdrawing the proposition, that the Secretary of the Navy would certainly locate one of these dry-docks at the Norfolk navy-yard.

In this debate the gentleman from Maine, as I understand, rests his opposition to the provision principally upon the fact that in the bill as proposed by the committee the discretion in this matter is left to the Secretary of the Navy. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS], and also the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF], speaking for the Republican side of the committee, if I may use that expression, indicated that the New York navy-yard and the Norfolk navy-yard were the two most accessible points for the location of the docks. I have understood from members on the other side who, I have reason to believe, are quite near the Secretary of the Navy, and who in this matter might feel authorized to speak privately for him, that he is in favor of having these dry-docks located at the New York and Norfolk navy-yards. This being so, it seems to me the amendment I have proposed should be adopted without any opposition.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Chairman, it has been conceded on all hands, after a very thorough examination, that the Simpson dry-dock is unquestionably a success. It is said that a dry-dock of this description will last over one hundred years. These docks can be readily repaired, while their cost compared with stone is merely nominal.

Mr. SAYERS. The cost of keeping one in order is only $200 a year.

Mr. LORE. So I am informed. Now, after as careful examination as was possible, the Committee on Naval Affairs thought at least two dry-docks necessary. When they came to consider the location of these docks it was deemed best that the location should be left discretionary with the Secretary of the Navy. After the most careful examination we could give this subject, it was ascertained that it would be almost impossible for us, with the knowledge we then had, to locate these docks with the same certainty of making a proper selection that there would be if we should allow the Secretary of the Navy to take into consideration the whole field and to determine just where vessels would probably be congregated and where repairs calling for these dry-docks might be necessary.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I wish to ask a question; and it is not my purpose to participate in this debate, because I am not a member of the committee. If, as suggested in this debate, it is the opinion of people "inside and outside of the committee" that these two dry-docks should be located in New York and Virginia, why should the matter be left to the Secretary of the Navy? Who knows where he is going to locate them?

Mr. LORE. For just this reason: there was not entire unity in the committee on the subject; very far from it. There was a good deal of diversity of sentiment. It was realized that we had not sufficient light to determine with accuracy where these dry-docks should be located. Hence it was concluded that the Secretary of the Navy, who must, in the exercise of his official duties, learn just where repairs will be most needed, and who will know the advantages of respective localities, is the officer in whom we can safely vest this discretionary power. It is not certain that these dry-docks will be located at Norfolk and Brooklyn. One may be located at League Island or at Boston. It would certainly be best that the officer upon whom the responsibility rests should be intrusted with the discretion of determining where these dry-docks can be located so as best to subserve the interests of the Government.

I do submit to the committee to do the wise thing, will be not now to put an iron-clad rule about the Secretary of the Navy but to leave the responsibility on him to select such places as are for the best interest of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GOFF. The discussion here is as to why the committee did not ascertain the point where these dry-docks should be located. It discloses even in relation to certain points they thought to be the proper places it might endanger the construction of the docks to mention any particular places; that if they mentioned Norfolk the friends of other points would take offense, or if they mentioned Charlestown or any other point then other places would bring their influence to prevent any such location. Now, I submit that is not a good reason why there should not have been any definite action. We should ascertain what was right to be done, and then dare to do it. We should determine where the interest of the nation should be best enhanced and protected, and then maintain our ground whatever may be the contention as to other points.

I desire to say a word in reply to some of the gentlemen who have spoken on this proposition. It is not universally conceded that Brooklyn and Norfolk are the places for the construction of these dry-docks. There is a diversity of opinion on that question. I submit, if we are only to have two, the proper place, would be Boston and Norfolk. I call attention of the committee to the fact that the Boston navy-yard to-day is the best equipped navy-yard, I may say not only on this continent, but in the world. I call attention to the fact we have in machinery at the Boston navy-yard two dollars to one invested in Brooklyn. We have the finest machinery in the world at the Boston navy-yard. We have all the modern appliances there. We have spent $1,100,000 in placing machinery alone in that Boston yard. Yet all that valuable plant, all the magnificent machinery, under the order of the Secretary of the Navy, is to be sold at auction. I submit it is a great mistake to permit the Secretary of the Navy to carry out that order, and it would be shameful for this House to select these docks in such manner as to render this vast expenditure of the Government absolutely a waste, for it would amount to that. I hope the proposition of the gentleman from Maine will prevail and that the paragraph will be stricken from the bill.

We want to construct dry-docks, but let it not be put as new legislation upon an appropriation bill. There is not a gentleman who will take issue as to the value of the navy-yards as I have alluded to them. I know if this dry-dock be constructed at Brooklyn it will be placed at a point which is, for naval and dry-dock purposes, infinitely inferior to the Boston navy-yard.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It is evident the location of these navy-yards carries with it something more than the mere expenditure of the appropriation; a great deal more than the mere location of the dry-dock. A dry-dock of adequate capacity is essential to a naval station where construction is to be carried on to any large extent, and of course wherever the Secretary of the Navy shall locate these dry-docks, in the exercise of any kind of judgment and system, there the great construction works of the United States Navy are to be placed.

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the whole issue of this debate has hinged on the point whether the Congress of the United States or the Secretary of the Navy is best qualified to decide at what point in this country the great work of naval construction and repair shall be carried on. The gentleman from Illinois tells us in the committee where this bill was formulated there was an express understanding that no locality should be mentioned, because if they named localities it would bring on discussion, because if the question was raised the Representatives of the people might have some desire to have something to say about where these great public works should be located.

Why, Mr. Chairman, this proposition is calculated to enable the Secretary of the Navy to fix for all time, so far as we can see, the changes that he is now engaged in arbitrarily making in the naval establishment of this country. My mail comes to me daily laden with protests from New England against the action of the Secretary in striking down and dismantling one of the great naval establishments of the country, one of the most valuable plants belonging to this Government, at the Boston navy-yard. By a simple order he has decreed that that great yard, from which, in the past, have sailed out some of the noblest specimens of naval architecture that ever carried our flag, that great naval depot which during the very last period in which a navy was of great practical use to us was an instrumentality of service beyond calculation to the Government, shall be stricken down by an order written at the Department, and relegated to the work of making cook-stoves and twisting hemp cables.

As to the value of this property of the Government at this Boston navy-yard, I quote from the Boston Commercial Bulletin:

> The value of the grounds, buildings, and wharves, docks, machinery, stores, and supplies, &c., of the Charlestown yard is estimated at nearly $30,000,000. The plant in the engineering department alone is worth about $675,000. This department includes a very large foundry, containing two cupolas, of a capacity of 12 and 15 tons per hour; two large pits, one 16 feet deep and 16 feet in diameter, and the other 16 feet deep and 30 feet in diameter; two furnaces for either iron or brass, of 9 tons capacity each, and four large cranes of 30 tons capacity, and with pits, cranes, &c.
> The machine-shop consists of three large rooms, plentifully supplied with the finest machinery and tools, ranging in value from $100 to $100,000. There are lathes, borers, and planers and other tools in profusion, of the largest as well as the smallest size. One planer cost $100,000 to build and is unequaled in the world. The bed weighs 40 tons and the planer will work a piece of iron 16 feet square, and can be regulated to do some of the finest work. This machine can also be adjusted to drill, cross-plane, spline, and bore. This is also a brass-finishing shop, which is well supplied with tools. The blacksmith-shop is large and finely equipped with double forges blown by steam, a lot of steam-hammers (some 12 tons), furnaces, steam-cranes, and bolt and nut machines.
> The boiler-shop has all the tools and appliances necessary to build compound boilers for three steamers at one time. It has steam shears, steam-rivetting drills, steam-punches, &c., with forge and flange fires blown by steam. The forge-shop is well supplied with excellent tools and machinery, and there is a rolling plant consisting of two sets of rolls with four furnaces, which will work iron ¼ x ¾ up to 1½ x 7 inches. There is also a fine pattern-room in which are stored valuable patterns, and a fine draughting-room. The department of construction in this yard is in its way as fully equipped with valuable machinery as the engineering department.
> It has an iron-binding mill, an iron-plate mill, joiner-mill, saw-mill, timber sheds, mould lofts, &c. Chief Engineer Robie reported in 1883 that the facilities of the Charlestown yard were sufficient with an expenditure of about $25,000, for portable engines, to build and fit out the finest ships in the world.

Yet the Secretary of the Navy proposes to send that valuable property to the auction block, or to junk warehouses, and establish there, on his own theory of naval establishments, a bureau of equipment. And then he is going to New York, as his order declares, to establish there, for the Navy Department, a supply station; and thence to Norfolk to build the ships; and then, I suppose, over to the Pacific coast to build the engines!

Mr. BUCK was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And, Mr. Chairman, in direct line with this revolutionary system of tactics, with this new idea that Congress has nothing to do with legislating for the Navy except to provide the money, the Naval Committee come in here and ask the House not only to put $1,100,000 in the hands of the Secretary of the Navy to build dry-docks on a pattern upon which a patent is held by somebody, but that he shall be authorized to locate these docks and fix the great constructing centers of the Navy for the next quarter or half a century at his own sweet will. I say it is a remarkable proposition.

The question as to the character of dry-docks proposed to be constructed has not been foreclosed in this country. I do not pretend to be an expert; I only claim the ordinary knowledge that comes from observation and the obtaining of such information as I have been able to acquire upon the subject. But I say, Mr. Chairman, whatever may be the economical advantages to a private ship-building concern in building a cheap dry-dock, to enable them to take advantage of temporary contracts, with the expectation that they may abandon their works within a limited time, it seems to me a most remarkable proposition for the Government of the United States, starting out upon permanent works, to spend more than a million of dollars in the construction of wooden dry-docks. I would as soon think of proposing to put cedar posts under a Government building as an underpinning, on the ground that cedar is good to last for fifteen years. I undertake to say that in the judgment of the best civil engineering talent in this country masonry and cement are the proper materials for a great Government hydraulic work like a dry-dock.

I have here on my desk plans and specifications of stone and cement dry-docks that have been built in England and in Russia and in the Canadas within the last two years, permanent works, works that will stand as the pyramid of Cheops stands, for all time, if properly built, works of a character fit for a great government to enter upon.

I am assured that a dry-dock of ample capacity for a larger ship than we contemplate the construction of can be built in the best manner, of masonry and cement, with all of its appliances complete, for a sum inside of $700,000; and yet you gentlemen come in here, assuming the question to be foreclosed, with the argument that timber docks have been used and that they answer very well for a while, that they will last quite a number of years, perhaps, and that we shall make the appropriation of more than a million of dollars in block to build dry-docks out of wood when we have stone quarries in this country and facilities for constructing them of masonry unequaled in any part of the globe. There is a dry-dock [exhibiting a photograph] large enough to float a great deal larger ship than we have ever authorized to be built, a dry-dock of stone and cement that will stand until the very recollection of a Democratic administration in the United States shall have faded away like a nightmare vision of the past.

Mr. MILLIKEN. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Certainly.

Mr. MILLIKEN. I wish to ask if he considers that any evidence that his dock will last a great while?

Mr. BOUTELLE. My experience has been that Democratic memory is a very tenacious thing.

And that dock, Mr. Chairman, was built for a sum hardly in excess of what is now demanded here for a wooden dock. I might cite in detail the evidence I have in regard to this matter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CONGER. If I am recognized I will yield my time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the gentleman from Maine how much more time he desires.

Mr. BOUTELLE. About three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER] is recognized, and yields his time to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I have adverted to this branch of the discussion not, as I have said, because I claim to be an expert in the construction of docks, but because I believe that Congress should consider that matter. I believe that before an expenditure of over a million dollars is authorized we ought to go into the discussion of the ways and means; we ought to consider the relative merits of the different classes of works and act intelligently.

We have had criticism, and protest, and denunciation ad nauseam of the extravagance and folly of expending money upon wooden ships because we have gone beyond the age of wooden vessels; and yet here we are going back to start in upon new expenditures for what ought to be permanent works, works that should last as long as the Government stands, and the proposition is to build them of wood instead of masonry. I submit that that question is one that can not, or ought not, to be decided by a subcommittee of three in secret session. I submit that the Congress of the United States ought to deal with that matter, and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] has voiced my belief, and has expressed the very motive of the motion that I have made here when he says——

Mr. LORE. I hope the gentleman does not mean to say that the entire committee did not approve of these wooden docks.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I mean to say if the entire committee has focused its intellect on that dry-dock question it was for but a very short time.

Mr. LORE. It did come to a focus, however.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not want to betray the secrets of the committee. But the impression on my mind is not that the matter of construction of these docks ever occupied the time of the whole committee for many days, or many hours, or many moments.

This proposition has been brought in here by the committee with the express purpose, so declared, of precluding discussion upon the floor of the House. It is brought in here for the purpose of taking the matter out of our hands, and, as I said before, the gentleman from West Virginia has expressed the whole scope and motive of my amendment when he says this proposition ought to be brought in here on its own merits and not smuggled in under a tricky advantage taken of parliamentary practice, not by any pettifogging with the rules of the House, but brought in here openly on its merits as a proposition for the consideration and action upon the deliberate judgment of the members of this House.

I am in favor of supplying dry-dock facilities. I am not persuaded that the great seacoast of New England is necessarily precluded from having anywhere along its coast line the opportunity to build or to repair a ship of war. I do not understand the geographical distribution which would count out from the beginning that great section of our country where ship-building has been a recognized art for centuries; and if the gentlemen from Massachusetts on this floor fail to raise their voices and protest I raise my feeble protest in behalf of their constituency and their State.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERBERT. There are only six days remaining of this session. If we go on at this rate, spending an hour and a half on a proposition like this when there are eleven appropriation bills that have not gone to the President, an extra session is inevitable. I hope we will have a vote on this question now. I think this debate shows the wisdom of the committee in leaving this question of location to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I hope my friend will admit that whatever delay there has been rests on the shoulders of the committee, because of their improperly bringing this matter into this bill.

Mr. HERBERT. I admit the delay is chiefly due to the course here of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will let the country judge of that.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. WILKINS took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, informing the House that the President had approved and signed a bill ofthe following title:

An act (H. R. 6393) to authorize the Fort Worth and Denver City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. BUCK], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph so that it will read:

"For one timber dry-dock, to be located at the navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., to be not less than 480 feet in length, the cost of said dock not to exceed in the aggregate the amount herein appropriated, $550,000."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 20, noes 107.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is next on the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend the paragraph so that it will read:

"For two timber dry-docks, to be located at Brooklyn, N. Y., and Norfolk, Va., navy-yards, each dock to be not less than 480 feet in length, and the cost of the two docks not to exceed in the aggregate the amount herein appropriated, $1,100,000."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 24, noes 77.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] to strike out the paragraph.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 73.

So (further count not being called for) the motion to strike out the paragraph was not agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairs and preservation at navy-yards, $450,000.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in at the end of line 266, which is rendered necessary by the omission of the appropriation for the naval school at Coaster's Harbor Island.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Add, after line 266, the following: "Naval training station, Coaster's Harbor Island, Rhode Island: Extending wharf and dredging, repairs to main causeway, sea-wall roads, buildings, and grounds, and the necessary labor and implements required for the proper preservation of the same; for repairs and improvements on building, heating, lighting, and furniture for same, books and stationery, freight and other contingent expenses; purchase of food and maintenance of horses and mail-wagons and attendance on same, $14,000.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to make any remarks about this amendment, except to say that the appropriation is the same as the amount in last year's bill.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. It was left out of this bill by accident.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Brooklyn, N. Y.: For one clerk to civil engineer, at $1,400; one writer to captain, at $1,017.25; one foreman-laborer, at $4.50 per diem; one mail-messenger, at $600 per annum; one messenger to commandant, at $2.50 per diem; one messenger to captain, at $2.25 per diem; one messenger to yards and docks, at $2 per diem; one draughtsman, at $5 per diem; one quarterman, at $4 per diem.

Mr. HERBERT. In line 296, in the paragraph just read, I ask unanimous consent to strike out the words "to captain."

Mr. JAMES. I wanted to know why those words were there, and I ask that they be stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Washington, D. C.: For one clerk to civil engineer, at $1,400; one messenger, at $1.76 per diem; one foreman-laborer, at $3.50 per diem.

Navy-yard, Norfolk, Va.: For one clerk to civil engineer, at $1,400; one writer, at $1,017.25; one foreman-laborer, at $4 per diem; three messengers, at $2 per diem each; one pilot, at $2.26 per diem.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by inserting "$4" in place of "$3.50" as the pay of the "foreman-laborer" at the Washington navy-yard. I make that motion because I find that the pay at the Boston yard is $4, at the Norfolk yard $4.50. At every other yard the pay is at least $4, and I do not see why discrimination should be made against the Washington yard.

Mr. THOMAS. I make the point of order that the gentleman is too late, as we have passed far beyond the point where his amendment would come in.

Mr. COMPTON. I addressed the Chair before the Clerk had passed from that paragraph, and it was not my fault if the Chair did not hear me.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I will state for the information of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. COMPTON] that the estimate, as furnished to the committee, calls for one foreman-laborer at $3.50 per diem.

Mr. COMPTON. I find that there is a discrimination in this respect against the Washington yard, or rather against the employés of that yard. I find, by reference to the bill, that employés of the same grade, or a similar grade, have higher pay at the other yards, and I wish the committee to tell us if they can why this discrimination is made. If they have no good reason for it—and certainly none appears upon the face of the bill—it seems to me to be an unjust discrimination.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman asserts that the grade is the same without knowing the fact. There are several different grades of laborers in the different yards. In this case we gave just what was estimated, and there has been no complaint heard by the committee, and I hope the amendment will not prevail. That is all I have to say about it, for I have no time to discuss it at length.

The amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee rose informally to receive a message from the Senate, and Mr. TAULBEE took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the House amendments to the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler, asked a conference with the House, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. SAWYER, Mr. WILSON of Iowa, and Mr. PLATT.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed the bill (S. 3296) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in the Congress upon the late John A. Logan; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed a resolution to provide for printing the report of the Smithsonian Institution and of the National Museum for the year ending June 30, 1886; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair, and continued the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery, rights of patented articles, and tools for use in shops; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat, and for general care, increase, and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses, such as advertising, freight, foreign postages, telegrams, photographing, books, plans, stationery, and instruments for drawing-room, $900,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repairs of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 20 per cent. of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall sell the New York, under the laws and regulations applicable to the sale of condemned property in the Navy Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of line 457.

The amendment was read, as follows:

At the end of line 457 add:

"For repairs on the Hartford, Kearsarge, Trenton, Swatara, Thetis, Richmond, Nipsic, and Enterprise, $200,000, to be made available."

Mr. BOUTELLE. In support of that amendment I desire to have read a letter from the Secretary of the Navy and the accompanying statements, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, February 4, 1887.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of January 28, transmitting a copy of a resolution of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House, asking my views "as to the advisability of an immediate appropriation of $300,000, or a like sum, for repairs on the Hartford, Kearsarge, Trenton, Swatara, Thetis, Richmond, Nipsic, and Enterprise, or any of said ships; also, to furnish the committee with a tabulated statement showing how the $900,000 appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for construction and repairs has been applied."

Herewith you will find a statement of the expenditures of the current year asked for, and the balances on hand.

My view with regard to any large expenditures upon these boats is that if the question were to be considered entirely separate from the conditions prevailing at the present time, the expenditures should be considered as wasteful and foolish, for the ships will be of little or no value in war.

Under the special circumstances which obtain at the present moment I am not prepared to advise against the appropriation of such sum as is necessary to keep afloat these ships. They perform a function in time of peace important to our commerce, and it is not unlikely that they may be needed within the next six or eight months for purposes of observation and for such slight security as they may be able to afford at points where our commercial interests may require them.

I do not refer to the use of these vessels for any fighting, for that would only be to invite national humiliation; but in time of peace vessels of war are a very important moral force to prevent and harmonize differences, and act as peacemakers. They carry men trained in the knowledge of international law and international rights, and become advisers and protectors of the citizens of the country engaged in commerce throughout the world. It is lamentable that we should be obliged to spend money upon implements of war which have no real value except in time of peace, but such seems to be the necessity at the present time.

I think the sum of $200,000 would cover all that could be judiciously expended between now and the 30th of June.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. H. A. HERBERT, M. C.,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, House of Representatives.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, BUREAU CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR,
Washington, D. C., January 21, 1887.

SIR: The resolution of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House of Representatives relative to making an additional appropriation for this bureau, referred by you to this bureau, is herewith respectfully returned. You will please find herewith a statement showing the amount required under the deficiency bill, and a statement showing the amount of expenditures to date under the appropriation for construction and repair in 1887. It will be found from these statements that the estimated deficiency for the remainder of this fiscal year is $234,292.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

T. D. WILSON, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. W. C. WHITNEY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Amounts required to complete—

|---|---|
| Trenton | $20,000 |
| Swatara | 6,000 |
| Nipsic | 15,000 |
| Kearsarge | 47,792 |
| Enterprise | 14,000 |
| Hartford | 65,000 |
| | 167,792 |
| Repairs of training squadron on the return from winter cruise | 10,000 |
| Fitting out and repairs to Naval Academy school-ships | 10,000 |
| Thetis and Richmond, about completed | 1,500 |
| Ship-keepers | 15,000 |
| Miscellaneous expenses and freight | 30,000 |
| Total deficiency | 234,292 |

Mr. BOUTELLE. It appears from the communication just read that, according to the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy, $234,000 would be required to complete the repairs now in progress and necessary, if the wooden vessels named are to be kept afloat.

Mr. WISE. How does the estimated cost of the repairs of these ships compare with the estimated cost of new ships?

Mr. BOUTELLE. According to my understanding, it has been decided not to continue the repairs of these ships, the estimate as to the amount of repairs required being outside of the limit; and therefore a special appropriation by Congress is necessary to secure the repair of these vessels.

The Secretary in his letter sets forth very clearly the peculiar reasons existing at the present time for putting upon wooden vessels repairs which might not be put upon them if we were already supplied with fleets of iron and steel. He recognizes the fact that our new vessels will not be available for some time to come.

During the intervening time it is of the very highest importance that we should be represented by our Navy in the waters of different parts of the world—not necessarily by fighting ships of the first class, because those we have not yet—but by cruising ships that can carry our flag, that can furnish headquarters for our naval representatives, and can perform all the manifold functions of the Navy in connection with our diplomatic intercourse. In that view, the Secretary recommends this appropriation.

It does seem to me that while we have so few ships, while it is so difficult for us to send our flag to those important points in Europe where we ought to be represented by our Navy, it would be a great mistake if we should allow to go to wreck these ships which, although they may be considered obsolete as fighting vessels in this new era of high-power guns, are the representatives of the very finest type of naval architecture that was ever put afloat up to the time when we commenced the building of iron and steel ships.

And, Mr. Chairman, although I do not know how much effect an appeal to sentiment may have upon this House, I submit that every American citizen ought to feel some little pride in keeping afloat, in keeping out of the hulks, in keeping in commission, two such magnificent representatives of the glories of the United States Navy as Farragut's old flag-ship, the Hartford, and that grand gunboat, the Kearsarge, which won a victory for American arms, within the view of the people of two nationalities of Europe, that stands unrivaled in its brilliancy in the naval history of the world. It does seem to me, Mr.

Chairman, that it would be a shame to us as a people, if, from the failure to appropriate a few paltry thousands of dollars, we should turn over to be broken up, to be sold for old iron, or cut up to make firewood, two vessels which will stand pre-eminent in our history as types and representatives of the glorious prestige of the Navy of the United States.

In the olden day, Mr. Chairman, it was not so. The old Constitution was not permitted to be sold at the auction-block and turned into a barge for carrying coal; but she was preserved; her timbers were from time to time renewed; she was kept in commission as long as possible; and she lives to-day, tenderly preserved as a shrine of American patriotism and a legacy of glory.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word with reference to this amendment, which, it seems to me, the Committee of the Whole should well understand before voting upon it. In the first place, as we know, the vessels of the United States to-day on the naval list are almost entirely built of wood. Under a law of Congress, whenever the repairs to be done on any one of these vessels amount to 20 per cent. of the cost of the vessel she must be condemned, instead of being repaired. Last year there was, as there is this year, $900,000 appropriated in this bill for the Department of Construction and Repair. The present fiscal year ends on the 30th of next June, and of that appropriation there now remains but a very small portion. . As appears by the statements of the Secretary of the Navy and of Mr. Wilson, the chief constructor, $200,000 is needed immediately to repair the vessels which are at present in the navy-yards awaiting action.

Now, of these vessels, there is the Hartford at the Mare Island navy-yard, and there are the Enterprise, the Nipsic, and the Richmond at New York. Some of these vessels have been partially repaired, and others have just arrived at the yards and have had no repairs yet put upon them. Now, I submit this point to the good sense of the House: In the first place, it is absolutely necessary that we should have some vessels to float the personnel of the Navy; and, in the second place, if we delay making this appropriation of $200,000 these vessels by the 30th of June next will have deteriorated beyond the 20 per cent. limit, and will be taken off the naval register. Hence the failure of Congress to make this appropriation of $200,000 means just this: You are voting off the naval register of the United States the vessels in the navy-yards which have been partially repaired or just ordered there for repair. With the large personnel of enlisted men and officers who will be kept on the list no expense will be saved to the Government by the failure to appropriate. You merely leave these men without any vessels upon which they can be floated and exercised; and you leave the country at foreign ports without any representation of the flag.

If, as the Secretary of the Navy has so well said, the question were the naked one whether we should repair wooden ships or build wooden vessels, I, for one, would be found opposing the expenditure of a dollar upon a wooden vessel. But the question is not whether we shall continue the construction of wooden vessels. The question is one of emergency—whether we shall lose these vessels to the Navy, or whether, while we are building up a modern and respectable navy, we shall have old vessels to float the present personnel of the service. There is no doubt in my mind in case the Hartford comes now within the 20 per cent. list, the result after two or three months will be to take that vessel out of commission.

While, Mr. Chairman, a question of dollars and cents is not one of sentiment I can not but have some sympathy with what has been stated by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. It has been the policy of all naval nations with a view to the naval glory which belongs to them to preserve the great historic vessels of their service. The old Victory of the British navy is still kept in commission, her flag still flies from her peak, and she is commanded by officers and manned by a crew. I think it is wrong on our part that the Kearsarge or the Hartford should be allowed to go out of commission for want of this appropriation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, a communication has been read as to what will be the cost of the repair of these vessels in case they are kept in commission. This bill as presented to the House contained no item for the preservation of these ships mentioned in the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE]. After it was reported the committee called on the Secretary for some information on this subject, and that communication from the Secretary in reply to the committee has been read to the House. It is in effect that about $200,000 will be required to preserve these historic ships in the condition in which they now are. Everybody will recognize at once what these ships are in the history of our country. The Hartford was the flagship of Admiral Farragut. The Thetis was engaged in the arctic expedition. The Kearsarge was engaged in one of the grandest naval conflicts of modern times, and won imperishable renown for our Navy. They all bear glorious names in the naval history of the United States.

The Secretary of the Navy says they can be made useful in the transportation of troops and supplies; that they can be made useful in various ways along the coast; that they can be turned into training schools for our Navy.

But if there were no practical use to which they could be put, as the Secretary of the Navy suggests, they should be preserved and kept in commission for the grand scenes and victories in which they have participated. We should preserve the Hartford and the Kearsarge for the great deeds which they have done, and which have made them historic names. They should be preserved upon the same principle that we preserve the old family Bible—for the sake of the memories connected with it.

Think of it, only $200,000 to preserve the ship that sank the Alabama; to preserve the Hartford, that distinguished itself so much at Mobile, and to preserve the Thetis, that participated in the arctic expedition! For this purpose, to preserve all these vessels as provided by the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, the Secretary of the Navy tells us it will take no more than $200,000. It seems, if we have any patriotism left in our natures, we ought at least to vote this small sum of money to preserve these ships that future generations will be glad to look upon. It will be the best object-lesson in the cause of freedom which could be given. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to two facts which should be considered before passing on this amendment. During the present Congress, at its first session, there was voted to the Bureau of Repairs the sum of $900,000. That amount of money was intended to cover the entire fiscal year. There is no war pending; there is not the slightest danger of any hostility with any foreign government whatever, and yet we find a subordinate officer of the Navy Department, charged with the duty of using only $900,000 in his particular bureau, no emergency pressing upon him, consumes almost all of that $900,000 in the short space of six months. And now he comes into this House and asks Congress to give him $200,000 more to spend on these old worn-out vessels.

The other fact is this, and it is to that fact I desire to call attention. The Trenton was built in 1873. Her original cost was $1,200,000. Repairs, including the original cost, up to the 13th of June of last year, make the expenditure of this one single wooden vessel since it was constructed in 1873 amount to $1,883,880.32. Over $600,000 were expended out of the treasury of the people and placed in repairs upon a wooden vessel built in 1873. I hold in my hand a list of the expenditures upon the vessels named in that communication of the Secretary of the Navy, and from this tabulated statement it will be discovered that the expenditures upon them in the way of repairs have largely exceeded the original cost of construction. It is not wisdom, it is not economy, in the light of the fact that we are now building vessels of an entirely different type, to continue work upon ships of this character. These vessels are unable either to fight or to run away. They are too weak to cope with the great vessels of any European nation; they are too slow in speed to get away from one of the fast cruisers of modern build belonging to any maritime power. I do not believe that this $200,000, as embraced in that amendmentt, should be used upon these old vessels. It can be used to much better advantage in the construction of our Navy in other ways.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENLEY was recognized.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to ask the gentleman who proposed the amendment if we can not agree upon some reasonable limit to this discussion; say ten minutes on that side and five on this.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have no objection.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I assume that is agreed to, there being no objection on the part of the mover of the amendment.

Mr. HENLEY. No agreement can be entered into to the prejudice of my right to the floor now.

Mr. HERBERT. It does not refer to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the fifteen minutes now allowed for debate to be in addition to the time occupied by the gentleman from California.

Mr. HERBERT. No, sir; the understanding is that it includes that time.

Mr. HENLEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have some views in respect to this amendment which I sincerely hope will prevail. These views I have impressed upon my distinguished friend from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO], and accordingly make him my mouthpiece for the remainder of the time allotted to me.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I feel very highly complimented by being made the mouthpiece of the gentleman from California in this discussion.

I want to refer, sir, for a few moments, to a remark made by the gentleman from Texas, who has just taken his seat, which may be misleading. He said that we gave to this bureau last year, mainly for the purposes contemplated in this amendment, $900,000. That is true; but the gentleman from Texas should also state to the committee, in justification of the bureau, that that sum was not the amount of the estimate, but was a large reduction upon it. They asked for $1,700,000; and while I believe it is proper in an economical committee not to give the full amount of the estimates, because they are generally in advance of what public sentiment would probably approve for such works, still the House should reflect that it is a very serious cut from $1,700,000 to $900,000; and besides that these estimates for $1,700,000 were very carefully drawn. They gave dollar for dollar of estimate as to what was required, and as to how this money was to be expended; and therefore it is not so very surprising, as the gentleman would make it appear to the committee, that there should be now a deficiency of $200,000 on the part of the bureau that asked this large amount of money and got but little more than half of it.

What, Mr. Chairman, has been the practical result of this tremendous cut in the estimates of the bureau? To-day in the navy-yards of the United States the Bureau of Construction and Repair is closed out for want of funds. I know whereof I speak, especially as regards the navy-yard at New York.

There is yet another point: Even if the deterioration in the vessels now awaiting repair does not reach in the interim the dead line of 20 per cent. the amount necessary will be largely increased by July, for the deterioration is still going on.

The gentleman from Texas argues as if the question was before us de novo, whether we should build wooden ships or not; but, as I stated before when I had the attention of the committee, that is not the question at all. I agree with the gentleman from Texas that thousands of dollars, millions of dollars in fact, were in my opinion unwisely and unwarrantably expended on wooden vessels. But for that neither the gentleman from Texas nor myself are called upon to make excuse or offer any defense. The simple question for the committee to determine now is, with the construction and repair departments of the navy-yards closed to-day, with your large enlisted personnel, with your officers waiting duty on the high seas, with your flag to be floated, with your wooden vessels on the stocks waiting repairs, whether you will repair them or take them off the naval register altogether, allowing them to lie there and decay until the 1st of July. That is the only question before the committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, aside from the practical argument which may be advanced here on the question presented to us, whether the vessels at present in the yards, not those prospectively to be sent there, but those now on the stocks, shall be completed—aside from that practical proposition, there is one that I was endeavoring to enunciate a little while ago when your unrelenting hammer forced me to desist. Aside from that practical proposition there is a question of sentiment which enters into the discussion.

Among the vessels on this list awaiting repairs to-day on the docks of these yards are historic vessels—vessels with well-known historic names—that no matter how modern your Navy may be the people of the United States will not begrudge the $200,000 proposed to be appropriated to keep in commission as mementoes of the chivalry and bravery and heroism of the Navy of the past. I think, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that on a question like this, which has so divided the Naval Committee itself, upon which the best men in that committee have divided, and men, too, who on this floor and in the committee-room are always conservative about expenditures—and I claim to belong to that class myself—but who advocate this amendment and say that such a question is one which should address itself to the business sense of the House, that therefore this emergency appropriation should be made.

I might appeal to the members of this House for the men who have been working on these vessels who, to-day, in the presence of this emergency appropriation, find themselves in the cold winds of winter without the yards and without employment. But I have never advocated, I want to say to my friend from Texas who smiles, I have never advocated, and I never will advocate the expenditure of a dollar of the people's money to employ any man unless it is a wise and a just expenditure; and if I did not believe this was such, I should not make the additional argument as to the discharge of these men from the navy-yards.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. I shall vote for this amendment. If we do not repair these ships we will be without any. We have no new ships to take their places. I am as much opposed as the gentleman from Texas to making useless expenditures for the repairs of old ships, but I tell him if these go out of commission very few will be left on which the flag of our country can float anywhere.

I want the members of this committee to understand that this question has been submitted to the Secretary of the Navy, who, I will say to the gentleman from Texas, is of our political persuasion. And he tells this House that these ships are necessary to perform useful services for the Government. With this declaration from our own Secretary of the Navy, how can we refuse to vote the necessary appropriation to keep these vessels afloat?

As has been said by my friend from New Jersey, put these ships out of commission, and we have not one upon which you can send to sea your personnel. Why make this large appropriation for the support of a naval establishment if we are to have no ships for the Navy? I hope my friends on this side of the House will not forget that the purpose of this amendment is to carry out the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy and the bureau officers of the Navy Department.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has seven minutes remaining.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem to me that there ought to be any need for further argument upon this proposition. Some of the gentlemen who have declared themselves very strongly in favor of rehabilitating our Navy, strengthening it, and building it up, seem to forget in the consideration of this matter that we need a navy to-day, and that we can not have at a moment's or a month's or at six months' notice first-class armor-clad ships or the swiftest class of steel cruisers. We yet need a working navy, we need flagships upon our foreign stations; and, as I said before, these vessels for every purpose of a navy in time of peace are perfectly adapted to the needs of the Navy Department.

With the sole exception of adaptability for warfare they are excellently adapted to the uses to which we propose to put them. Those uses are just as essential, Mr. Chairman, just as honorable, and they have been in many cases quite as glorious in their sphere as the achievements of the Navy in war. I will not stop to enumerate here, but any person familiar with the history of this country must be aware of the fact that the Navy of the United States in time of peace has occupied a large space in the affairs of this country, and that the usefulness of the naval service has not been circumscribed simply by its achievements in time of war. If we are to have vessels afloat, as we must have vessels afloat to carry the flag, to serve as headquarters, certainly we could not select vessels that would carry with them more of respect abroad, or that would carry with them more of the essence of American pride of nationality or American patriotism, than these great war ships, the Hartford, the Kearsarge, and these other vessels that stand to-day as the type of all that is glorious and patriotic in the service of the Navy in the past.

Mr. HERBERT. I believe I have five minutes and that I close debate. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE].

The CHAIRMAN. Four minutes remain to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] if he desires to use that time.

Mr. HERBERT. I will wait till that time is used by the other side.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Let us have a vote.

Mr. HERBERT. Does the gentleman from Maine desire to discuss the question any further?

Mr. BOUTELLE. I am ready for a vote.

Mr. HERBERT. Then I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Delaware [Mr. LORE].

Mr. BOUTELLE. I understood the gentleman was ready to vote. If the question is to be further discussed I reserve what time we have.

Mr. LORE. The sharp question for the committee to decide to-day is this: Whether we will expend more money on these old wooden ships or apply this $200,000 additional to new vessels. If it is admitted these old vessels will go out if money is not immediately expended upon them, there will be still left enough to float the personnel of the Navy and to answer all immediate purposes which the Navy will be called to meet. Therefore the question is, will we let more money go on these painted sepulchers, which in case of war would go to the bottom at the mouth of any almost of the guns of any of the modern navies in the world; or whether we will save that money and hurry up our iron-clad and other vessels that will meet the exigency, and expend the money judiciously in a way to give us a navy and not a mere remembrancer or suggestion of one?

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let me ask the gentleman whether the Secretary of the Navy does not say that this additional appropriation is necessary if these repairs are to be made?

Mr. HERBERT. My impression is that the Secretary of the Navy is not clear about that.

Mr. BOUTELLE. He states so distinctly in his letter.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not so understand it; but without reference to that I desire simply to say that I am sick and tired of appropriating money for these rotten, worthless old ships. The money we do appropriate for the Navy ought to go to the construction of new vessels of modern style. The Committee on Naval Affairs is considerably divided on this question, as this Committee of the Whole can see; but, sir, the extravagant statement of my enthusiastic friend from Virginia ought to be corrected. He says that unless we repair these three vessels we have not a ship to send abroad. There are now afloat more than thirty ships.

Mr. HOLMAN. Thirty-eight.

Mr. HERBERT. Thirty-eight. The gentleman said, further, that we would have no new ships coming in, but if the small appropriation required to complete be made the Chicago, the Boston, and the Atlanta will all come in during the present year to take the place of vessels going out. It has been said that we made a very heavy cut in this appropriation last year. So we did. The reason was that we had begun to build a new navy and that the old ships were going out.

In 1885 the Rose, the Wanchusett, the Pilgrim, and the Dale were condemned. In 1886 there were condemned the Powhatan, the Lackawanna, the Tennessee, the Shenandoah, and the Saugus. Besides these, the Naval Register for 1887 says "the Franklin and the Wabash are not recommended for further sea service." Will any gentleman say that when ships are going out in this way we ought to expend as much for repairs upon our old navy as has been expended in the past? Does any gentleman say that when we are building new ships of steel, we ought still to appropriate as large amounts as formerly for these old hulks, the expenditures upon which for the last ten years or fifteen years have been, I do not think I overstate the case when I say, disgraceful to the country?

Mr. BUCK. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman says that he is not in favor of the preservation of these old hulks. I ask him whether he is in favor of selling the Hartford and the Kearsarge at public auction for whatever they will bring, and blotting them out of our Navy?

Mr. HERBERT. I am in favor of taking a business view of that question. I would sell the old ships that are not worth keeping. If we want to keep any of them as mementoes, let us put them in glass cases or otherwise preserve them. Let us stop expending large sums upon them uselessly every year.

Mr. BUCK. Why not preserve them as the Secretary of the Navy wants you to preserve them, and says you ought to preserve them?

Mr. HERBERT. If he meant to say that, I should not agree with him. I do not think they ought to be preserved in that way.

Mr. BUCK. The Secretary thinks they ought.

Mr. SAYERS. That is where we differ.

Mr. HERBERT. These old ships, some of them, have cost two or three times as much for repairs as they cost originally to build. I think we ought to stop that policy, and for that reason I, for one, am opposed to giving more than the amount recommended in the bill for the repair of these ships. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BOUTELLE; and there were—ayes 90, noes 59.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Mare Island, California: For one clerk to naval constructor, at $1,400; two writers, at $1,017.25 each; in all, $20,989.75. And no other fund appropriated by this act shall be used in payment of such services: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may employ and pay out of appropriations for new ships such additional draughtsmen on the designs therefor as may be necessary.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "draughtsmen," in line 490, the words "writers and model-makers." This amendment is offered at the instance of the Department, and with the approbation of the committee.

Mr. HERBERT. That is all right.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Academy:

Pay of professors and others, Naval Academy: For one professor of mathematics and one of physics, at $2,500 each, $5,000; three professors (assistants), namely, one of chemistry, one of French and Spanish, and one of English studies, history, and law, at $2,200 each, $6,600; five assistant professors, namely, one of English studies, history, and law, three of French, and one of drawing, at $1,800 each, $9,000; one sword-master, at $1,500, and two assistants, at $1,000 each; one boxing-master and gymnast, at $1,200; one assistant librarian, at $1,400; one secretary of the Naval Academy, at $1,800; three clerks to the Superintendent, at $1,200, $1,000, and $800, respectively, $3,000; one clerk to commandant of cadets, at $1,200; one clerk to paymaster, at $1,000; one dentist, at $1,600; one baker, at $600; one machanic in department of physics and chemistry, at $730; one cook, at $325.50; one messenger to Superintendent, at $600; one armorer, at $529.50; one gunner's mate, at $469.50; one quarter-gunner, at $409.50; one cockswain, at $469.50; one seaman in department of seamanship, at $349.50; one attendant in the department of astronomy and one in the department of physics and chemistry, at $300 each, $600; six attendants at recitation-rooms, library, store, chapel, and offices, at $300 each, $1,800; one band-master, at $528; twenty-one first-class musicians, at $348 each, $7,308; seven second-class musicians, at $300 each, $2,100; in all, $52,119.

Mr. LORE. I move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after "Superintendent," in line 550, down to word "one," in line 552, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Two at $1,200 each, and one at $800, $3,200;" so that the clause will read:

"Three clerks to the Superintendent, two at $1,200 each and one at $800, $3,200."

Mr. LORE. The bill as reported provides for three clerks to the Superintendent, one at $1,200, one at $1,000 and one at $800. By this amendment, if adopted, the clerk receiving $1,000 will be put upon an equality as to pay with the one now receiving $1,200. As a member last year of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy, I will say that upon examination we found these two clerks had precisely the same duties, were in fact clerks of the same grade; and the Superintendent stated that their salaries ought to be exactly the same. Some of us took the trouble to examine their work and were thus satisfied of the correctness of the Superintendent's opinion.

Mr. HOLMAN. You propose to "equalize" by paying each of these clerks $1,200?

Mr. LORE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not "equalize" by giving each $1,100? Then the amount of the appropriation will not be increased.

Mr. LORE. The gentleman asks me why not make the compensation of each of these two clerks $1,100. I answer, because the salary of $1,200 is barely commensurate with the amount of work done. We found on examination that their work is of precisely the same grade, and it was conceded by every one that their pay ought to be the same. Their services are such that they could command anywhere a salary of $1,200. That amount is only a fair compensation.

Mr. SAYERS. How long have they been there?

Mr. LORE. I do not know; but I see no earthly reason, if they have been there twenty years——

Mr. SAYERS. And have been working on that salary?

Mr. LORE. And have been working on that salary.

Mr. SAYERS. And are satisfied with it?

Mr. LORE. They are not satisfied.

Mr. SAYERS. Then let them resign.

Mr. LORE. I submit that this injustice ought not to be done. There was but one opinion on this question among the members of the visiting board, including my friend from Georgia and other gentlemen. They all agreed, I think, that this amendment ought to be made. The amount involved is only $200, and the granting of this small increase is a simple act of justice. I desire to impress upon the committee that these men ought to be put upon an equality in pay, inasmuch as their labor is of equal grade.

Mr. HERBERT. "I desire to impress upon the committee" that this is simply the old, old story—grading salaries by giving increased pay—grading up.

Mr. HOLMAN. Always up.

Mr. HERBERT. Nobody ever attempts to grade downward when there is found what is claimed to be an "inequality."

Mr. Chairman, look at it. One thousand dollars, the salary proposed to be increased, will purchase now twice as much as it would purchase twelve or fifteen years ago. Yet, notwithstanding the prices of commodities have fallen, and money has become more and more valuable, we have these applications on all hands for increased pay. I am opposed to this policy. What was pay enough for this clerk under former administrations, ten or fifteen years ago, is pay enough now.

The gentleman form Delaware [Mr. LORE] says this clerk could earn $1,200 anywhere. The mere fact that he accepts a salary of $1,000 is a refutation of the gentleman's statement, or else it would turn out on examination that there are other considerations, such as fewer hours of labor perhaps, that make this position more desirable than a clerkship elsewhere. You may depend upon it this clerk would not be there at that salary unless he was doing better than he can do elsewhere; and, if so, why raise the salary?

Mr. LORE. The chairman of the committee [Mr. HERBERT] has not touched the real point of this case. Congress has fixed $1,200 as the measure of the value of the services of one of these men. This other man does precisely the same work and receives only $1,000. Would there be justice in allowing to my learned friend a salary of $6,000 as a member of this House, and to other men doing precisely the same work only $5,000? Congress having fixed the measure of compensation for one of these clerks, the other, doing precisely the same labor, ought to receive the same pay. The point I make in this case is not met. I am urging the injustice of paying only $1,000 to a clerk who does the same work for which another receives $1,200.

Mr. HERBERT. My idea of justice in a matter of this kind is illustrated by the Saviour in a parable. The complete reply to the gentleman's argument is contained in the language of the master of the vineyard to the laborer who, like the clerk here, was complaining about what another laborer received, "I do thee no wrong; didst thou not agree with me for a penny?"

Mr. LORE. Well, Scripture does not apply in this House.

Mr. HERBERT. No, Scriptures do not apply to your side of the question.

Mr. BURROWS. Do these clerks in fact render the same service?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not know whether they do or not. Whether they do or not, there is no reason why we should increase this salary.

The question recurred on Mr. LORE'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The course of study of naval cadets at the Naval Academy is hereby changed from six to four years; and the academic board of the Naval Academy shall, on or before the 30th day of September in each year, separate the first class of naval cadets into two divisions, in the proportion which the aggregate number of vacancies occurring in the preceding fiscal year, ending on the 30th day of June, in the lowest grades of commissioned officers of the line corps of the Navy and Marine Corps, shall bear to the number of vacancies occurring during the same period in the lowest grade of commissioned officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy; and the cadets so assigned to the first division of the first class shall thereafter pursue a course of study arranged to fit them for service in the line corps of the Navy, and the cadets so assigned to the second division of the first class shall thereafter pursue a separate course of study arranged to fit them for service in the Engineer Corps of the Navy, and the cadets shall thereafter, and until graduation, take rank by merit with those in the same division, according to the merit-marks of the four years' course; and the two divisions of the first class shall be graduated at the end of the four years' course; and from the graduates of the first division appointments shall be made hereafter as it shall be necessary to fill vacancies in the lowest grades of commissioned officers of the line corps of the Navy and Marine Corps, and the vacancies in the lowest grade of the commissioned officers of the Engineer Corps of the Navy shall be filled in like manner by appointments from the graduates of the second division: Provided, That no greater number of appointments into the said lowest grades of commissioned officers shall be made each year than shall equal the number of vacancies which shall have occurred in the same grades during the preceding fiscal year, such appointments to be made from the graduates of the year at the conclusion of their four years' course in the order of merit as determined by the academic board of the Naval Academy; the assignment to the various corps to be made by the Secretary of the Navy upon the recommendation of the academic board; but nothing herein contained shall reduce the number of appointments from such graduates below ten in each year, of which three shall be appointed to the Engineer Corps: Provided further, That from the class which graduated at the end of four years in June, 1885, there shall be appointed, in like manner, but after a final graduating examination, upon the recommendation of the academic board, as many as shall equal the total number of vacancies in the lowest grades of commissioned officers of the several corps occurring in the year ending June 30, 1887, and that from the class which graduates at the end of the four years' course in June, 1886, there shall be appointed in like manner, but after a final graduating examination, as at the end of the present six years' course, upon the recommendation of the academic board, as many as shall equal the total number of vacancies in the lowest grades of the commissioned officers of the several corps occurring in the year ending June 30, 1887; and if there be a surplus of graduates in any year, those who do not receive such appointments to the said lowest grades of the Navy and Marine Corps shall be given a certificate of graduation and an honorable discharge; and those cadets who shall be honorably discharged from and out of the classes which completed the four years' course in the years 1885 and 1886 shall be given one year's sea pay, as now provided by law for naval cadets so discharged after the six years' course, and the said one year's pay shall not be given hereafter to other graduates of the four years' course; and if the number of vacancies in the lowest grades aforesaid occurring in any year shall be greater than the number of graduates of that year, the surplus vacancies shall be filled from the graduates of following years as they shall become available; and all parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions herein contained are hereby repealed; and this act shall apply to the class of naval cadets which shall complete the four years' course in June, 1887, and the appointments from that class to the lowest grades of commissioned officers of the Navy shall equal the number of vacancies which shall have occurred in the year ending June 30, 1887; and the act of August 5, 1882, is hereby amended in so far as it conflicts herewith.

Mr. COMPTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that whole paragraph. It repeals existing law, and is therefore in conflict with the rule under which the House is operating.

Mr. HERBERT. The point made by the gentleman is well taken. The committee knew when this paragraph was put in if the point of order was made against it it would have to go out. The change as proposed is desired by all who have examined the question. It is desired by the academic board and the board of visitors. It would save money.

A MEMBER. How?

Mr. HERBERT. It would save $32,000 to the Government, as it proposes to turn into active life two years sooner the young men who are not to be commissioned in the Navy.

I make this statement in justice to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maryland insist upon his point of order?

Mr. COMPTON. I do. I do not propose to discuss the measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask by unanimous consent the order for an evening session be vacated.

Mr. BURROWS. That can not be done in committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It can not. The committee will have to rise.

Mr. HERBERT. I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 306) granting a pension to George Schneider;
A bill (H. R. 5629) granting a pension to Thomas G. Polley;
A bill (H. R. 6188) for the relief of John A. Fagg;
A bill (H. R. 6712) for the relief of William N. Canady;
A bill (H. R. 7504) granting a pension to Larkin Delph;
A bill (H. R. 7971) granting a pension to Mary Wood;
A bill (H. R. 8205) granting a pension to J. W. Gooding;
A bill (H. R. 8469) granting a pension to John Moran;
A bill (H. R. 8486) granting a pension to Rebecca Morris;
A bill (H. R. 8720) granting a pension to William B. Eve;
A bill (H. R. 8818) granting a pension to Frederick Dierking;
A bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher;
A bill (H. R. 9863) granting a pension to Mary McCoy;
A bill (H. R. 10021) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Lathrop;
A bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and
A bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards in the United States Army, and to fix their pay and allowance.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following certificate of election; which was read:

By his excellency George Peabody Wetmore, governor, captain-general, and commander-in-chief of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations:

Be it known that Charles H. Page, of Scituate, in the State aforesaid, qualified according to the Constitution of the United States for a Representative in the Congress thereof, was, by the people of the second district of said State having the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the Legislature thereof, on the 21st day of February, A. D. 1887, regularly elected a Representative from said State in the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States in accordance with the laws of said State, to fill the vacancy caused by the action of the National House of Representatives in declaring the seat of William A. Pirce vacant.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of said State to be affixed at Providence, this 23d day of February, in the year of our Lord 1887, and of the Independence of the United States of America the 111th.

[SEAL.] GEO. PEABODY WETMORE.

By the governor:
JOSHUA M. ADDEMAN,
Secretary of State.

Mr. PAGE, having appeared at the Bar of the House, was duly qualified, taking the oath prescribed by law. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the recess fixed for to-day, this being the evening under which the House, by a special order, meets for the consideration of pensions, be extended until the completion of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. WOLFORD. I object.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the session of the House be continued until 6 o'clock, and that the recess be then taken. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HERBERT. If I can not be allowed to do that, then I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. BRAGG demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BURROWS. Mr. Speaker, before the announcement of the vote on ordering the yeas and nays, I move that the House take a recess until half past 7.

The SPEAKER. The House is taking a vote on the motion to adjourn, which is a question of priority, and the yeas and nays are ordered. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 100, not voting 102; as follows:

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 26, 1887.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when on motion of Mr. CAMERON, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

CREDENTIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the credentials of JOHN H. REAGAN, chosen by the Legislature of Texas a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read and ordered to be placed on file.

Mr. HARRIS presented the credentials of William B. Bate, chosen by the Legislature of Tennessee a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read and ordered to be placed on file.

Mr. HOAR subsequently said: I desire to say to the Senate that in the matter of the credentials of the Senator-elect from the State of Tennessee, elected for the term to begin on the 4th of March next, the credentials seem to be in the orderly form and entirely sufficient, but there accompanies the credentials a paper purporting to be a commission to that Senator from the governor of the State, commissioning the Senator as if he were a State officer. That certainly has no validity, and I suppose the course should be taken with that which was taken on a similar paper heretofore presented in the case of some Senator—it should not be received but returned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials have already been ordered to be placed on file. What purports to be a commission by the governor will be returned to the Senator-elect if there be no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented resolutions adopted by Leigh Dickson Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Albany, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Grand Army Post, No. 50, Westerville, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Bronson Post, No. 85, Grand Army of the Republic, Jerry City, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Parmley Horn Post, No. 622, Grand Army of the Republic, Sonora, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Cincinnati Division, Union Ex-Prisoners of War, Cincinnati, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Manville Post, No. 525, Grand Army of the Republic, Fremont, Ohio; resolutions adopted by J. Levis Post, No. 560, Grand Army of the Republic, Wilkesville, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Lincoln Post, No. 16, Grand Army of the Republic, Whitesboro, Texas; resolutions adopted by A. L. Brown Post, No. 162, Grand Army of the Republic, Chillicothe, Ohio; resolutions adopted by Ben. F. Oder Post, No. 555, Grand Army of the Republic, Rushsylvania, Ohio; and resolutions adopted by Albert Moore Post, No. 582, Grand Army of the Republic, West Toledo, Ohio, urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. ALLISON. I present numerous petitions signed by citizens of the District of Columbia, aggregating 2,597 petitioners in all, praying for the passage of the proposed cable-railway bill. I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON presented resolutions adopted by the James C. Taylor Post, No. 165, Grand Army of the Republic, Algona, Iowa; resolutions adopted by the T. Z. Cook Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; resolutions adopted by the Hyde Clark Post, No. 78, Grand Army of the Republic, Dubuque, Iowa; resolutions adopted by Meade Post, No. 50, Grand Army of the Republic, Anita, Iowa; resolutions adopted by the J. G. White Post, No. 108, Washington, Iowa; and resolutions adopted by W. A. Morse Post, No. 190, Manchester, Iowa, urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. FARWELL presented a petition of Oak Park Post, No. 615, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented resolutions adopted by Joe Hooker Post, No. 21, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Iowa, Des Moines, Iowa, and resolutions adopted by Ellis C. Miller Post, No. 96, Grand Army of the Republic, Mount Ayr, Iowa, favoring the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution adopted by Forest City Assembly, No. 7258, Knights of Labor, of Fairfield, Iowa, indorsing the President's veto of the dependent pension bill, and urging that such veto be sustained; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of George Hinsdale and 34 other members of William Bell Post, No. 10, Grand Army of the Republic, of Dundee, Mich., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAMERON presented resolutions of the Commercial Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa., urging the insertion of an item in the river and harbor bill providing for the purchase of the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-Canals; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of Charles L. Stevens Post, No. 76, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Maine, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SPOONER presented resolutions adopted by Wilson Colwell Post, No. 38, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Wisconsin; the petition of Edwin A. Brown Post, No. 130, Grand Army of the Republic, of Fond du Lac, Wis.; resolutions adopted by Philo C. Buckman Post, No. 153, Grand Army of the Republic, of Stoughton, Wis.; resolutions adopted by Commander Post, No. 39, Grand Army of the Republic, of Spring Green, Wis., and resolutions adopted by B. J. Humphrey Post, No. 103, Grand Army of the Republic, of New Richmond, Wis., in favor of the passage of the dependent pension bill over the veto of the President; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. PLUMB presented resolutions adopted by Angonia Post, No. 342, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas; resolutions adopted by Kilpatrick Post, No. 180, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas; resolutions adopted by Erie Post, No. 311, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas; resolutions adopted by Allison Post, No. 16, Grand Army of the Republic, Burlington, Kans.; resolutions adopted by Belle Plaine Post, No. 337, Grand Army of the Republic, Belle Plaine, Kans.; resolutions adopted by Reynolds Post, No. 43, Grand Army of the Republic, Cawker City, Kans.; resolutions adopted at a meeting of the ex-soldiers of the city of Fort Scott, Kans., and vicinity, and resolutions adopted by O. M. Mitchell Post, No. 49, Grand Army of the Republic, of Osborne, Kans., condemning the veto by the President of the disabled and dependent soldiers' pension bill and urging that it be passed over such veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHENEY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10178) for the relief of Mrs. Julia A. Sluder, executrix of E. Sluder, deceased, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7465) to amend section 3357 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by section 2 of the act of June 9, 1880, and section 3389 of said Revised Statutes as amended by section 16 of the act of March, 1879, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2252) to provide for the redemption and sale of the school-farm lands now held in Beaufort County, South Carolina, by the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SEWELL, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 87) providing for medals to the officers and enlisted men of the three months' service in 1861, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10824) to incorporate the reform school for girls of the District of Columbia, reported it without amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yesterday the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], from the Committee on Claims, reported the bill (S. 502) for the relief of T. M. English, administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased. I now ask leave to submit the views of the minority on that subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The views of the minority will be received and printed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3877) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle and pay the claim of the State of Florida on account of expenditures made in suppressing Indian hostilities, and for other purposes, to submit an adverse report thereon, together with the views of the minority prepared by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. WHITTHORNE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, and the report of the committee and views of the minority will be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4981) to provide for the settlement of an account with the Vicksburg and Meridian Railroad Company for internal-revenue tax, and to refund the amount of said tax erroneously assessed and collected, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7990) for the relief of Thomas C. Dickey, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8966) to so further amend section 3387 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, as to reduce the penal sum of the bonds of cigar manufacturers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3554) for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2960) for the relief of George W. Lawrence, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of George S. Hawley, praying for an increase of pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 3350) granting increase of pension to George S. Hawley; which was read twice by its title.

DISTRICT STREET RAILWAY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be, and it is hereby, authorized to sit by subcommittee or otherwise, during the recess of Congress, for the purpose of investigating the question of steam and street railroads in the District of Columbia, with power to send for persons and papers, and to employ a stenographer, and that all necessary expenses shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF FISH AND FISHERIES.

Mr. GORMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution to print the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, to report it favorably without amendment. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1886 be printed, and that there be printed 11,000 extra copies, of which 3,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 6,000 for the use of the House, 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries, and 500 for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the additional cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereto thereon added, the illustrations to be obtained by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing.

Mr. GORMAN. Accompanying the resolution, I submit a report showing the cost of the publication, which may be placed on file.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be placed on file.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CONGER introduced a bill (S. 3351) for the relief of A. W. Hager; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3352) for the erection of an appraiser's warehouse at the city of New York, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. SEWELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HAWLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask the following order to withdraw the papers in a case where a bill has already passed the Senate:

Ordered, That John Fletcher have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, subject to the rules.

Mr. CONGER submitted the following order:

Ordered, That the papers in connection with House bill No. 1185, entitled "An act for the relief of Emma H. Fish," be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The rules require, and it ought to be done for safety, that copies should be left on file if there was an adverse report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Such orders are always made subject to the rules requiring copies when an adverse report has been made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it is so entered on the Journal that is all right.

Mr. CONGER. Do I understand that copies of the papers are to be left on file?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The rule of the Senate requires that copies shall be left with the Secretary.

Mr. CONGER. The papers that I ask to have returned are Army discharges and papers of that kind. I want the originals to be returned to the claimant.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is always done. The originals are always taken, but copies are left, if it be necessary, under the rule.

Mr. CONGER. I did not know but that the original papers would be taken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; only copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order will be made, subject to the rule.

FLORA F. FARLEY.

Mr. FAIR submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate pay to Flora F. Farley, widow of Hon. James T. Farley, late a Senator from California, deceased, the sum of $1,248.80 out of the contingent fund of the Senate, being the amount which would have been due him for mileage had he attended the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress.

WASHINGTON HOSPITAL FOR FOUNDLINGS.

Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be directed to inquire and report whether the Washington Hospital for Foundlings have refused to receive colored orphan children into said institution, and whether such refusal be authorized by law, and whether the same is supported in whole or in part, and, if so, to what extent, by grants from the public Treasury.

ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further "concurrent or other resolutions," the Chair lays before the Senate the resolution submitted by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MAHONE] on the 24th instant, which comes over under objection.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the session the Senate, at the conclusion of the morning business, will consider Senate bills favorably reported by the committees until 2 o'clock on each alternate day and House bills on the other alternate day, commencing first with the Senate bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to suggest to the Senator from Virginia who introduced the resolution that if we can devote the morning hour of to-day to the Calendar of House bills and resolutions the chances are three to one that we can conclude that call, and then I may, perhaps without impropriety, say that both sides of this Chamber have agreed that the Calendar under Rule VIII shall be regularly called in every morning hour. That being true, it seems to me that there can be no necessity for the adoption of the resolution which the Senator proposes.

Mr. MAHONE. Do I understand the Senator to say that he is willing to have this resolution apply after to-day?

Mr. HARRIS. I did not quite say that, Mr. President, but I say that in the present condition of our Calendar, if we can devote the morning hour of to-day to the call of House bills upon the Calendar according to the special order under which we have been acting, we shall probably conclude that call to-day, certainly if not to-day very soon thereafter, and then, I say, both sides of this Chamber have agreed to devote the morning hour to the call of the Calendar under Rule VIII, which answers all the objects and purposes that the Senator's resolution can accomplish.

Mr. MAHONE. The difficulty with the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee is that he proposes that we shall go on under the existing rule to-day, and if we do not clear the Calendar to-day we must proceed under the existing rule the next day; and so we shall continue until the end of the session, and the Senate will be confined to the consideration of House bills exclusively, leaving the Senate no opportunity to pass bills originating here, many of which are of equal importance with the House bills.

It does seem to me but fair play to the Senate that we shall consider Senate bills during the morning hour up to 2 o'clock on one day, and that we are conceding enough to the House when we consider House bills on the next day, and so on. I think that is the better disposition of this matter.

Mr. HARRIS. If we mean practical legislation, with now only five days between this and the end of the Congress and five of the principal appropriation bills yet undisposed of, I think I can safely suggest to the Senate that the only hope of accomplishing anything that is practical is to devote the morning hour to the consideration of House bills which the Senate may decide are meritorious and should become laws.

What good will it do the Senator from Virginia or any other Senator to pass a Senate bill to-day and send it to the House of Representatives? Is there the remotest hope, the shadow of probability, that it will ever go beyond the Speaker's table of that House, going there to-day or to-morrow? It accomplishes nothing practically except the waste of time that can be profitably employed by considering such bills as have passed the ordeal of the House of Representatives and have the approval of one of our own committees.

Mr. BECK. There are many hundred Senate bills now on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MAHONE. If the Senator from Tennessee means to say that the whole legislation of this Congress shall be confined to House bills, that the Senate is to propose no legislation of its own, that the House of Representatives will not act upon any bill sent from the Senate, let the House of Representatives take the responsibility of such a course. I insist that the Senate should have fair play in this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution moved by the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. McPHERSON. Let the resolution be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be again read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the session the Senate, at the conclusion of the morning business, will consider Senate bills favorably reported by the committees until 2 o'clock on each alternate day and House bills on the other alternate day, commencing first with the Senate bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the resolution.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, the result was announced—yeas 36, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—36.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Cullom, | Hoar, | Platt, |

So the resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order just adopted the Chair will lay before the Senate the first bill on the Calendar.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I have a conference report to present.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Kansas has a conference report. I yield to him.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I present the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill. The House have agreed to all the amendments made by the Senate except the one in regard to authorizing the Postmaster-General to establish steamship communication between the United States and certain portions of South America for the carrying of the mails. That is the only item of difference. The conferees on the part of the two Houses have been unable to agree, and I report a disagreement, and shall ask that the Senate insist on its amendment and request a further conference with the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report of the committee of conference will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

PRESTON B. PLUMB,
WILLIAM MAHONE,
JAMES B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. H. BLOUNT,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
J. M. RIGGS,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate further insist on its fourth amendment, and ask for a further conference with the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution directing the Clerk of that body to make certain changes in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 1119) to provide for the appointment of hospital stewards in the United States Army, and to fix their pay and allowance;

A bill (H. R. 10397) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 7971) granting a pension to Mary Wood;

A bill (H. R. 9377) for the relief of J. E. Pilcher;

A bill (H. R. 10021) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Lathrop;

A bill (H. R. 6188) for the relief of John A. Fagg;

A bill (H. R. 6712) for the relief of William N. Canady;

A bill (H. R. 7504) granting a pension to Larkin Delph;

A bill (H. R. 5629) granting a pension to Thomas G. Polley;

A bill (H. R. 306) granting a pension to George Schneider;

A bill (H. R. 9863) granting a pension to Mary McCoy;

A bill (H. R. 8818) granting a pension to Frederick Dierking;

A bill (H. R. 8720) granting a pension to William B. Eve;

A bill (H. R. 8486) granting a pension to Rebecca Morris;

A bill (H. R. 8469) granting a pension to John Moran; and

A bill (H. R. 8205) granting a pension to J. W. Gooding.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TEXAS AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask the Senator from Iowa to yield to me to make a statement.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield, of course, to the Senator to make a statement.

Mr. MAXEY. The bill (H. R. 4841) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes, was called up, the bill was read, the amendment was read and partially considered the other day. There is nothing left to do now but what discussion there may be, and, for one, I do not propose any, in view of the importance of time. My term of service in the Senate of twelve years will expire at 12 o'clock on the 4th of March. I want a vote on the bill in some way, and I ask as a favor to myself, as there is urgent and pressing necessity for the passage of some such bill, that the Senator from Iowa will be kind enough to at least let us try to get a vote on it.

Mr. ALLISON. I will agree that a vote may be taken now upon the bill indicated by the Senator from Texas, but if there is to be debate upon the bill I shall be constrained to object, notwithstanding my partial promise to the Senator from Texas, and I will state my reasons for it.

It is important that the two appropriation bills now upon the Calendar shall be passed to-day, and when those bills are passed there will be the remainder of this day, which I think will be some hours, and there will undoubtedly be Monday the entire day and most of the day on Tuesday before appropriation bills can again be brought before the Senate. So there will be intervening time for the consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from Texas, and I hope unanimous consent will be given to him to take up his bill when these appropriation bills shall be disposed of.

Mr. VEST. That is impossible. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] desires to speak upon the bill and it will lead to very considerable debate. It is a very important question. The Senator from Texas puts it on personal ground. I accede as much to him as to any Senator present, but I can not agree to take up the bill with the understanding that there is to be no debate upon it.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the consent asked. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that the amendments be considered as the bill progresses, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations be first disposed of.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Reserving all points of order.

Mr. ALLISON. Reserving everything.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, that order will be made.

Mr. PLATT. I should like at this stage of the proceedings to ask the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, a question. He has just stated that after these two appropriation bills shall have been passed, as they undoubtedly will be to-day, in a short time, we are then to have the remainder of the day and Monday and Tuesday before any other appropriation bills can be submitted by the Appropriations Committee to the Senate for its action.

In view of that statement I should like to ask him what is the condition of the appropriation bills at the present time, how many of them have become laws, how many of them are yet to be reported to the Senate, and generally what is the condition of the appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLISON. I believe only one appropriation bill has been signed by the President of the United States and become a law. That is the Army appropriation bill. The pension appropriation bill has just been reported to-day as having been signed by the presiding officer of the House, and is not yet signed by the presiding officer of this body, but will be presently. The Military Academy bill is in the same condition, although it may have been signed by our presiding officer yesterday, but the Army bill is the only appropriation bill that has been signed by the President of the United States, and the pension appropriation bill and the Military Academy bill are the only other bills which have passed both Houses so as to be sent to the President. The Post-Office appropriation bill, the Indian appropriation bill, the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the District of Columbia appropriation bill are all in conference. The conference on the Post-Office appropriation bill will probably require but little time, as there is but one amendment disagreed to. The differences on the other bills are matters of detail, and will probably require considerable adjustment in conference before they can be reported to the Senate. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the longest bill, and perhaps the most important except the sundry civil appropriation bill, has not yet been taken up by the House of Representatives for consideration.

The naval appropriation bill is now under consideration in the House of Representatives, and has been for two or three days, and is proceeding with commendable leisure, the House having adjourned yesterday at a quarter past 4 o'clock. The deficiency bill was only yesterday reported to the House by its committee, and the fortification bill has not been so reported.

Mr. PLATT. What has become of the fortification bill of the last session?

Mr. ALLISON. That bill is still in conference, and I understand the gentlemen having charge of the bill propose to make a report within a day or two.

So the Senator will see that after we shall have disposed of the diplomatic and consular bill and the agricultural appropriation bill, in the nature of things it will not be possible for us to get before the Senate within the time I have indicated any of the bills which I have named which are still pending in the House of Representatives undisposed of. And I will say that during my service here in this body and in the House of Representatives I have never known the appropriation bills to be in the situation they are to-day with reference to forwardness at this period of time prior to adjournment.

I want to say further that in this respect I think the Senate is in no sense to blame. We have considered all the bills as rapidly as possible when they have reached the Committee on Appropriations, and they have been reported back promptly. The bill which is now under consideration only came to the Committee on Appropriations one week prior to its being reported to the Senate.

I believe I have stated substantially the condition of the appropriation bills.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to ask one more question. I wish to know if the Senator from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations on the part of the Senate, believes it possible for that committee or for the Senate to give to the four most important appropriation bills of this session which have not yet been passed by the House of Representatives, namely, the deficiency bill, the naval bill, the fortification bill, and the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, that attention which they should receive in order that the legislation therein contained shall be well considered before it is adopted?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not believe it is possible for the Senate to do so. The holding back of these bills, as they have been held back this session and at other sessions, results practically in the House of Representatives conducting the legislation of the country. That occurred practically two years ago when the sundry civil bill was not disposed of until the hour of 12 o'clock noon had arrived on the day of the inauguration of President Cleveland.

Mr. PLATT. There was then a very general determination on the part of the Senate that if in the future these great appropriation bills did not come to the Senate within a week or ten days before the close of the session the Senate would proceed to consider them if possible, and if not would refuse to consider them. I want to know if there is any such disposition this year.

Mr. ALLISON. I can only say, and I think I speak for the entire Committee on Appropriations, that we will take these bills as they come to us and will give them the best consideration possible, and will return them promptly to the Senate for its action. That is all I can say.

Mr. HALE. Will not the chairman of the committee say here that the Committee on Appropriations and the conference committees of that body have indicated to the House of Representatives their willingness to sit day and night and labor on these bills?

Mr. ALLISON. We have; and not only have we been willing to do that, but we have been doing so for the last week. That is all I can say with respect to the subject at this moment.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will pause. The Chair rises to a question of privilege.

Before administering the oath of office to his successor the occupant of the chair desires again to return to his fellow Senators his grateful acknowledgments for their kind courtesy and forbearance in the past.

It is not a difficult duty to preside over the Senate of the United States. From the establishment of our Government to this time the Senate has always been noted for its order, decorum, and dignity. We have but few rules, and they are simple and plain; but we have above all and higher than all that which pervades all our proceedings—the courtesy of the Senate, which enables us to dispose of nearly all the business of the Senate without question or without division. I trust that in the future, as in the past, this trait of the Senate of the United States will be preserved intact forever, and I invoke for my successor the same courtesy and forbearance you have extended to me. I now invite him to come forward and take the oath of office prescribed by law.

Mr. INGALLS advanced to the desk of the President pro tempore, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took the chair.

Mr. INGALLS, on taking the chair, said:

Senators, I must inevitably suffer disparagement in your estimation by contrast with the parliamentary learning and skill, the urbanity and accomplishments of my illustrious predecessor, but I shall strive to equal him in devotion to your service, and I shall endeavor, if that be possible, to excel him in grateful appreciation of the distinguished honor of your suffrages.

THANKS TO PRESIDENT SHERMAN.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I offer the following resolution, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to Hon. JOHN SHERMAN for the able and impartial manner in which he has administered the duties of the office of President pro tempore during the present Congress.

The resolution was adopted unanimously.

NOTIFICATION TO HOUSE.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that the Senate has chosen JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, to be President pro tempore of the Senate in place of JOHN SHERMAN, resigned.

The order was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO PRESIDENT.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I offer the following order:

Ordered, That the Secretary inform the President of the United States that the Senate has chosen JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, to be President pro tempore of the Senate in place of JOHN SHERMAN, resigned.

The order was agreed to.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the reading of the bill is commenced I desire to call the attention of Senators to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of to-day, wherein, on page 2413, appear the changes proposed by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate in the bill as it came from the House of Representatives.

It will be seen by an examination of the statement there presented that the Senate Committee on Appropriations has made quite a number of important changes in the bill as it came to us from the House of Representatives, the House having omitted a large number of consuls, secretaries of legation, &c., that have been appropriated for for many years. I will say, also, that we have added a number of consulates, in pursuance of the provision in the bill of last year requiring the Secretary of State to estimate for the consular officers who receive fees in excess of $1,000 a year. We have recommended that the Senate insert in this bill salaries for twenty-four consuls under this provision. By so doing, however, the Treasury is not called upon to expend any money, as the fees for these twenty-four consulates amount in all to $82,791 while the aggregate of the salaries amounts to $45,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was understood that it should be read and the amendments acted on as they were reached in the reading, subject to points of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That course will be pursued.

Mr. PLATT. Perhaps it is just as well for me to make an inquiry here as while the reading of the bill progresses. I see that the amount of the estimates for the year 1888 was $1,935,722.14, that the amount of the bill as passed by the House is $1,311,720. That is nearly $600,000 less than the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury say is a proper sum to be expended to properly sustain our diplomatic and consular service, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations has added to the amount of the bill as passed by the House $118,722.14. So the bill if it passes as recommended by the Senate committee will be $1,430,442, being still nearly $500,000 less than the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury say is a sum——

Mr. BECK. I can not hear one word of what is being said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will appeal to the Senate to be in order. Senators desiring to converse will please retire to the cloak-rooms.

Mr. PLATT. I say this is practically $500,000 less than the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury say is required for the proper maintenance of our diplomatic and consular service. It seems to me, Mr. President, that our consular and diplomatic service ought to be maintained and sustained.

Mr. BECK. I must insist that gentlemen shall not talk so loud that the speaker addressing the Chair can not be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Business will be suspended until the Senate is in order.

Mr. PLATT. It ought to be maintained and sustained in a manner befitting a great nation like this, the first nation in the world, and a nation which should maintain the respect to which it is entitled in the whole world.

Now, what I wish to inquire is, first, whether in the opinion of the Senate Committee on Appropriations the Secretary of State and the Secretary of the Treasury have asked for more money than is required properly to sustain and maintain the diplomatic and consular service, and if not why the amount asked for by them has not been granted or substantially granted.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Connecticut will turn to page 2414 of to-day's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD——

Mr. PLATT. I have been looking at it.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well; he will there see the different items estimated for which have been omitted in the House of Representatives and also omitted in the report made by the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

The Secretary of State recommends an increase of salary, as will be seen there, of a number of our ministers abroad, raising a number of them from $7,500 to $10,000, and raising the mission to China from $12,000 to $17,500. It will also be observed that this increase runs through the entire diplomatic service.

In the first place the Secretary of State recommends that every foreign minister of the United States shall have a secretary; that is, that there shall be a secretary of legation at every foreign court at which we have a minister. Now, without expressing an opinion whether that is wise or otherwise, the committee believed that, inasmuch as this foreign service has been adopted for a great many years upon substantially the scale now recommended by the committee, it was not a wise thing to increase as proposed by the Secretary in these regards.

So for miscellaneous expenses of the legations abroad his recommendations have been made to increase the appropriations; but the two chief items in these estimates of increase are the two items which will be found on page 2415 of the RECORD. "Expenses of Alaska boundary survey, $100,000," and the same amount for the international survey of the boundary between the United States and Mexico. So there are two items of $100,000 each which are entirely omitted from this bill, but they were included by the Senate in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. PLATT. One hundred thousand dollars for the Alaska boundary?

Mr. ALLISON. Fifty thousand dollars was appropriated by us for the Alaska boundary, and $100,000 for the Mexican. Now I leave the Senator to judge for himself after an examination of this table whether or not these estimates are extravagant. They are extravagant as compared with appropriations made by the Republican House of Representatives and the Senate in past years, and in comparison with the recommendations made by former Secretaries of State.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I desire to interrupt the order of business for a moment so that I may make a personal explanation which I tried to make before the former occupant of the chair had left it, but was unable to do so.

Owing to an imagined slight on the part of the then occupant of the chair towards me on Thursday last, I was betrayed into the use of some remarks which I now wish to recall.

Unfortunately for me, the Chair had, by mistake, supposed that every time I rose to my feet that day it was for the purpose of antagonizing with a bill of my own the regular order of proceeding which had been agreed upon by a special committee of the Senate, and which the Chair was bound by every honorable consideration to assist in carrying out. This suspicion of my motives on the part of the Chair was partly true and partly not true, but it explains my irritability on that occasion.

I can not allow the matter to go any further without expressing my regret for the words I used, remembering as I do the many kindnesses to me on the part of the distinguished Senator who then occupied the chair—while in the chair, while a cabinet minister, and also as private citizen, all of which entitle him to my gratitude and respect.

I desire further to say that the record of that gentleman while presiding officer of the Senate will be remembered by me as one both for ability and exact fairness—a record not less distinguished than any which has been made in the Senate by those who preceded him in that distinguished position.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I certainly am gratified to hear the statement made by the honorable Senator from New Jersey. I felt at the time he made the remark that he was somewhat excited because of his failure to get up a bill in which he had taken great interest, as he states. Therefore, I did not regard his remark as an intentional unkindness.

I had no doubt that the honorable Senator would, after a little reflection, do what he has done now and what is consistent with his usual courtesy and kindness.

I have to say also that I have not the slightest feeling against the Senator. On the contrary, I have served with him on the Committee on Finance and in other relations where we have sometimes differed without feeling or resentment, and I therefore tender him my sincere thanks for the withdrawal of the words he uttered under excitement.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the respective committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the following bills:

A bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Alpheus R. French;

A bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains; and

A bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections.

The message also announced that the House insisted upon its amendment to the bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SWOPE, Mr. NEECE, and Mr. CONGER managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment-stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I desire to say only a few words in regard to this bill in answer to some of the questions propounded by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

This bill has been unfortunate up to this time. The estimates sent in by the State Department are perhaps fuller, more comprehensive, and give more thorough explanation of the needs and desired changes in the service than any I have ever before observed in any former Book of Estimates. Beginning at page 266, Appendix Q, in relation to the diplomatic service, and Appendix R, on page 268, in regard to the consular service, all the needs of this Department of the Government are fully set forth with absolute accuracy, and the reasons are plainly and fairly assigned for the changes desired.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives, through Mr. BELMONT, their chairman, reported an appropriation bill substantially in accordance with the estimates of the Department. It was a well considered bill. For some reason or other the House took hold of it, and made a very incongruous measure out of it. What they so unwisely did is so well set forth in the letter published in the RECORD this morning from the Secretary of State to Senator ALLISON that I desire the Secretary to read it now for the edification of the Senate, because I doubt whether many Senators have yet had time to read it, other than the members of the Committee on Appropriations. It is on page 2415 of to-day's RECORD. It explains many things which ought to be understood before this bill is voted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, WASHINGTON, February 23, 1887.

SIR: Agreeably to your request, I submit herewith, as briefly as possible, my views on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill (H. R. 10396) as the same passed the House of Representatives on the 17th instant.

The estimates prepared by this Department were made in the belief that every item was called for by the just needs of the public service. Some items were therein submitted, others followed the sanction of previous statutes, some having been appropriated for during several years past. It seems proper, therefore, to compare the bill as adopted by the House with the estimates submitted.

1. China.—Minister's salary (line 16). It is earnestly recommended that this important mission be elevated to the first grade, with increase of salary from $12,000 to $17,500. Apart from the political reasons which counsel manifest friendliness and regard in our intercourse with China, the fact remains that the demands upon the minister are greater in China, owing to the exigent conditions of civilized life in an oriental capital, isolated from ordinary channels of supply, than in a European capital.

2. Turkey.—Minister's salary (line 28). This was raised from $7,500 to $10,000 in the consular and diplomatic act of February 25, 1885, and the same appropriation was made in the act of July 1, 1886. Constantinople is now a political center and an expensive place of residence, the minister being obliged to keep up two personal establishments, one for winter, another for summer.

3. Argentine Republic.—Minister's salary (line 27). The present salary is $7,500. Its increase to $10,000 is recommended. Here, as elsewhere, the Department must give due regard to the special conditions of living at foreign capitals. Buenos Ayres is a compactly built city, with no room for expansion, and the recent increase of commercial activity there has augmented the cost of living in a dense metropolitan population. Rentals are high, a modest residence on a flat costs from $2,000 to $3,000, and is difficult to procure at that. The necessaries of life are dear, and a dollar has only about three-fifths the purchasing power that it has in the United States. The trade relations of the Argentine Republic are among the most important of South America. Already for the most part in the hands of Europeans, an effort is being made to divert it to our markets, and the recent establishment of a line of mail steamers to the United States, with a large subvention from the Argentine Government, is a promising sign, and marks the friendly relationship of the two countries. The mission is an important one, and may be made much more so.

4. Belgium.—Minister's salary (line 29). The importance of the direct relations of Belgium to the United States, which are constantly expanding, make it most advisable that the mission should be elevated to the plenipotentiary grade, with $10,000 instead of $7,500 for a minister resident as now. With one or two minor exceptions, all the foreign missions at Brussels are of the plenipotentiary rank. The elevation of the mission should be effected, even without increase of salary—and a secretary of legation provided, as explained further on—but from every point of view the office should be supplied with the moderate salary of $10,000.

5. Corea.—Minister's salary (line 35). Since Corea was first opened to foreign intercourse by the United States, American influence has been exceptionally important at Seoul, the capital; the disinterested counsels of the legation are eagerly sought by the authorities, and every effort is being made by them to spread American ideas and develop direct trade with the Pacific coast. Although I have not recommended it in the estimates, I should be glad to see the mission made plenipotentiary, but at any rate the isolation of Seoul and the conditions of life there render a fair living salary indispensable, and I trust the $7,500 will be allowed.

6. Liberia.—Minister's salary (line 40). The salary of this office was raised from $4,000 to $5,000 by the consular and diplomatic act of August 5, 1882, and has since remained at that figure. The climate is unhealthy. Two ministers have recently died in office. The historical intimacy of Liberia with the United States, and the good will due to that offshoot of our civilization, make recognition of its moral dependence upon us timely.

7. China.—Secretary of legation (line 46). The House bill omits altogether the usual appropriation for secretary of legation at Peking. This was probably an error, for the debates in the House suggest that the point of order was only taken because the combined salary of secretary of legation and interpreter exceeded $5,000, the amount to which the emoluments of the two offices, when separated, were supposed to be limited by section 1680, Revised Statutes. A glance at that section will show the mistake, for it provides that when the secretaryship and interpreter's post are filled by two officers, the former shall receive $3,000 and the latter $5,000, or $8,000 for the two. The salary of the secretary of legation was reduced from $3,000 to $2,625 some years ago—ostensibly to make it uniform with the salaries at Berlin, London, and Paris. It is simply impossible to conduct the business of the legation without secretaries besides the interpreter.

8. Chili and Peru.—Salaries of secretaries of legation (omitted from House bill). These secretaryships have been appropriated for during two years past, the first appropriation being in the consular and diplomatic act of July 7, 1884. Their utility has been demonstrated.

9. Belgium, Argentine Republic, Corea, Roumania, &c., Sweden and Norway, Switzerland and Venezuela.—Secretaries of legation (estimated for at $1,500 each, but omitted from House bill). Every legation of any importance should have a secretary of legation. The absence or death of the minister necessarily closes the office, unless a secretary be present to take charge ad interim. It sometimes happens that, in case of a temporary vacancy, the friendly services of the representative of some other government have to be resorted to, as lately in Persia. At the present time it has been found necessary to send to Corea the secretary of the Peking legation, in order to take charge of affairs there in the total absence of any official substitute.

10. Four secretaries of legation at large (estimated for at $1,800 each, but omitted in the House bill). The recommended measure finds its warrant in the considerations in the preceding paragraph. Our country should never be left wholly unrepresented at any foreign court, nor should its archives be left to irresponsible care, or open to alien inspection. It is not always practicable to designate a consul to take temporary charge. Many governments refuse to admit a union of consular and diplomatic functions. The proposed secretaries at large could be so distributed as to be available at short notice to fill a vacancy, such as that which happened at Rome recently when the secretary's death quickly followed the minister's resignation. When not so detailed, the secretaries at large could be usefully assigned to legations where no secretary may be allowed by law, or to relieve an overburdened legation from a press of work, or be employed on special investigations for which outside aid must now be sought at considerable expense. I deem this recommendation of great value, as doing for the diplomatic service what the staff of consular clerks has so admirably done for the consular service, and providing a small but efficiently trained force, ready for emergencies, and meanwhile always to be usefully employed.

11. Turkey.—Secretary of legation (estimated for at $1,800, and omitted from the House bill). This office has been regularly appropriated for during many years, and is now omitted probably through oversight. It can not be expected that a secretary's functions can be discharged by an interpreter, who has no diplomatic status. The item should be restored in line 58 of the House bill.

12. China and Japan.—Second secretaries of legation (estimated for at $1,800 each, and omitted from the House bill). These offices were first established by the consular and diplomatic act of July 7, 1884, and have since been regularly appropriated for. The necessity of possessing, within the legation itself, a knowledge of the Chinese or Japanese languages, independently of irresponsible and often interested native aid, is evident, especially in the case of the absence or death of the interpreter provided by law. Every well-organized modern diplomatic service is equipped with student secretaries in oriental countries. The utility of the innovation on our part in China and Japan is demonstrated beyond mere experiment, and certainly should be extended and not cut off altogether to the serious embarrassment of the service, as proposed in the House bill.

13. Siam.—Interpreter's salary (estimated for at $800, and omitted from House bill). Since the act of July 7, 1884, $500 has been appropriated for an interpreter to the legation and consulate-general at Bangkok. The item occurs under the consular part of the statutes (see Statutes, volume 23, page 330), where, however, it is stricken out in the pending House bill. It is now proposed to make it an item under the diplomatic head, with a salary of $800. I need hardly dwell on the necessity of such a provision, at least until the Siamese language shall be more widely practiced in the United States. At present no person known to me is eligible to appointment as minister to Siam who possesses that difficult tongue. I can not suppose it to be the purpose of Congress to throw upon the slenderly-paid minister the expense and risk of accidental employment of native translators, and I trust the estimated allowance will be made.

14. Contingent expenses, foreign missions (lines 75–80). The purposes for which the appropriated fund may be expended are limited, by the House bill, to "stationery, blanks, record, and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs." These form but a small part of the necessary expenses of public business at the legations, and for many years other indispensable contingent items have been appropriated for. The item as it appears in the estimates is taken from the consular and diplomatic act of the last session. Every enumerated detail is found necessary in the conduct of foreign intercourse, most of them have had the sanction of long-continued legislation, and none of them are proper to come out of the pocket of the ministers or of the Secretary of State. As now emasculated, this provision amounts to a practical prohibition against transacting business. The use of the telegraph and the mails would be barred, and the Department cut off from communication with its agents abroad.

If it be assumed that the agents are to bear the expense of communicating with the Department, it may be a pertinent inquiry, Who is to bear the expense of the Department's communications with its agents? Surely not the Secretary of State, for the annual expense of postage and telegrams from the Department, although kept within the narrowest limits, is in excess of the Secretary's salary.

Rent, too, is a necessary allowance, especially at legations like London, Paris, Madrid, and others, where the accumulation of archives, beyond the capacity of any private residence within the envoy's salaried means, demands a separate establishment for offices.

Dispatch agents are necessary for the speedy and safe conveyance of the mails. The transmission of correspondence by open mail, or the conveyance of sealed pouches at mail-rates, would increase the expense of postage considerably beyond the amounts now allowed to dispatch agents.

Printing in the Department of State is another indispensable item. Confidential correspondence, draughts of treaties, précis of negotiations, and the like are continually required for communication to legations and for the needs of the Department. These can only be prepared by hand at great cost of time. Being often needed on short notice, the delay necessary to have the work done at the Public Printing Office would often lose a mail. Convenience and expedition are of more importance even than absolute secrecy in this class of work. Originals of dispatches received are duplicated in an hour or two, without the need of pen copies.

The necessary plant (presses, type, &c.) has been set up in the Department under last year's appropriation. Labor is detailed from the Government Printing Office, chargeable to the Department's general allowance for printing, in the same way that the binding of the Department's confidential archives has been conducted for many years. The current expenses for paper and materials will hereafter be very light. The utility of the present arrangement has been so abundantly demonstrated that it is not easy to see how the work of the Department could be accomplished without it. The mere change of the location where the printing is to be done does not increase its cost, but it does increase its usefulness and efficiency.

15. Clerk to the legation in London (estimated for at $1,200, and omitted from the House bill). The allowance which the Department has heretofore been able to make from its limited contingent fund for foreign intercourse has been very inadequate for the clerical requirements of the London legation. Moreover, the irregular employment of native aid necessarily admits outsiders to a knowledge of the business of the legation, which is most undesirable and even dangerous. In no legation abroad is secrecy and safety more imperatively demanded. Under the proposed appropriation a competent and responsible citizen of the United States could be permanently attached to the legation at London. I regard this provision as of far more importance than might appear on casual observation. The item should be inserted between lines 73 and 74, House bill.

16. Mexican boundary survey (estimated $100,000 additional, and omitted from House bill). It is important that this survey, under treaty engagements, should be pushed to completion when once begun. An appropriation of $100,000 is already available under a former act; but it is very necessary that a sufficient sum to complete the work within eighteen months should be assured, and in default of such assurance it is not regarded as expedient to begin it, only to suffer interruption (with considerable additional expense) while awaiting further appropriation; $200,000 in all will probably suffice.

17. Haytian arbitration (estimated for at $4,077.44, and omitted from the House bill). The arbitration in the cases of Pelletier and Lazare is completed and the expense ascertained. Hayti has paid her half of the cost. In the absence of an appropriation this Government is unable to pay its half to compensate the distinguished arbitrator (Retired Justice Strong) and pay for the clerical work actually performed.

18. Venezuela Claims Commission (estimated for at $13,500, and omitted in the House bill). The convention signed December 5, 1885, between the United States and Venezuela, requires the constitution within three months after exchange of ratifications of an international commission to rehear the awards of the Caracas commission of 1868. A delay has occurred in the exchange of ratifications (which is the only remaining step to complete the international stipulation), but it is hoped this will soon be overcome. If this be done, the execution of the compact would be arrested pending provision by Congress to organize the commission. An appropriation is imperative to guard the national honor. If, for any cause, the convention of December 5, 1885, should fail of completion, not a dollar of the appropriation could be expended, and it would wholly revert to the public Treasury.

19. Alaska survey (estimated for at $100,000, and omitted from House bill). This estimate is in accordance with a diplomatic engagement between the United States and Great Britain. The need of a determination of the Alaskan boundary, and the way proposed to accomplish it, are fully set forth in Senate Executive Document No. 143, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, in the papers accompanying the President's message to Congress of May 17, 1886.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully,

T. F. BAYARD.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, Senate.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I have caused the letter of the Secretary of State to be read as part of my remarks, for the purpose of showing the Senator from Connecticut and the Senate that the present Secretary of State has exhibited both in the estimates given with more than usual detail and with great clearness in the Book of Estimates and in the letter he has just written to the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee that he has no object in any change suggested except to promote the public interest as he understands it; and he has submitted items, as, for instance, $100,000 for the survey of the Alaskan boundary and $100,000 for the survey of the Mexican boundary—things which we all know to be important and which, if done, might save great trouble with the Mexican Government on one side and the British Government on the other, on account of gold discoveries recently made in Alaska. Wherever he has made any suggestion of an increase of salary of any officer he has given what the country will accept and the Senate will accept, whether they agree with him or not, as good and substantial reasons for making the suggestion.

For example, China is a country where we ought to have a diplomat of ability, and he ought to be well paid for the reasons stated by the Secretary, and for reasons not stated in this letter, which, perhaps, Senators very well understand. In a country like that money has to be expended in a great many ways. The cost of living is great, and the moving from one place to another is expensive. The inconvenience a man sent there is subjected to, and the style he has to maintain to receive consideration, as well as well as the gifts he must make to obtain information, in addition to the cost of living and entertaining strangers, shows that the salary suggested is not high, particularly when it is understood that Great Britain is now extending her great railroad lines over the continent through her lines of steamships to that country, and that we through our lines are seeking to build up trade with China and Japan, and are endeavoring to maintain a foothold on that portion of the continent of Asia.

The same considerations apply to Corea. There is a peninsula jutting out between China and Russia, and our maintenance of strong, intimate, friendly relations with it may become of the utmost importance to our commerce in Asia, which may, if we do not maintain those relations, be absorbed by countries that we would not like to see obtain and maintain the relations that we can so easily retain with Corea, because we are now the most favored nation with that people for many reasons.

So in regard to all the other items of increase recommended by the Secretary of State, the Argentine Republic and our mission at Buenos Ayres, for instance. If we are ever going to build up any trade for our manufactures abroad we have to reach out for China, Japan, South America, Central America, the West India Islands, and that class of countries. We have increased from time to time the grade of our missions to the South American countries; we have appointed commissions and sent them there to see how far we could develop trade by their aid, and in every way efforts have been made for years to extend our commercial relations with our neighbors of South America. The suggestion made here by the Secretary, while it may be resented by some gentlemen who are not disposed to give what is asked, would, if carried out, in my judgment, be money well spent in order to make that an important mission, and to make it as acceptable to that people as possible.

I need not repeat what I said when I began. The reading of the Secretary's letter regarding the action of the House of Representatives shows how dangerous it is for a body of men who have not had charge of a bill like this to set aside a well-considered measure, reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs through their chairman, carrying out the Secretary's recommendations. That committee reported a bill which I believe if it had been passed by the House would have been agreed to by the Senate. But when the bill was torn all to pieces, either on the score of economy or on any other pretense—I do not know what was the real reason, or want of reason; it certainly was not economy; yet the fact is that a bill has been sent to us under the provisions of which the business of the Government in foreign countries can not be decently carried on or maintained. Think of $105,000, for example, being given for miscellaneous expenses, and that item limited to "books, seals, presses, flags, and signs," which perhaps would not require more than ten or fifteen thousand dollars, and the Department being cut off from all communication with all its foreign ministers and agents unless the money for postage and telegraphing is paid out of the pockets of the officials themselves.

The telegrams alone which the Secretary of State sends, and which he is compelled to send, using the utmost economy, far exceed in cost the salary that is paid to him as Secretary of State.

That is simply absurd; and the leaving out of secretaries of legation at six or eight points where we have always had them is equally so; and so with many other things. So, too, under some pretense of economy, the House seemed to regard as evidence of extravagance the compliance of the Secretary with a demand made upon him in the law of the current year which reads in these words:

And in the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, there shall be estimated for specifically, under classified consulates, all consulates and commercial agencies where the fees collected or compensation allowed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, exceeds $1,000.

When the salaries of those officials are so estimated for and are classified under an order made by Congress, and fees often in excess of the proposed salaries are paid into the Treasury, that seems to be regarded as indicating a large increase of appropriation simply because this bill shows an increase, and therefore extravagance, when it is no such thing. The object of Congress in passing that law and the recommendation of the Secretary of State in regard to it are both clearly in the interest of good government, honest service, and true economy. Those officials heretofore have been paid by fees. The inducement to them to collect all the fees they could per fas aut nefas was believed not to be in the interest of the public service. The change proposed, while it appears to swell the amount paid to the consuls, does not do so in fact. On the contrary, it reduces their pay in many cases.

This change, I repeat, is in the interest of good government and of economy in administration. As all well-informed men know, these gentlemen, heretofore classed as commercial agents, have never before been brought before the Senate either for confirmation or adjustment of compensation; they are men whose characters we know nothing about; they are merely agents appointed by the State Department. Some of them have been drawing from five to six or seven thousand a year, and are expending the amount they get, or most of it, in clerk-hire, rents, and other things, to suit their own comfort and convenience. We have been amending this bill so as to correct these abuses for years where the cases were flagrant. Saint Gall and others were drawn into the classified service in former bills, for example. The changes in commercial relations of places abroad are such that new places have to be brought under the consular system from time to time. The Fifth Auditor's report shows the fees collected. We required last year in the law I have just read that the Secretary of State should classify them so as to bring them under our control; and when he had his attention drawn to the subject and saw the evils that grew up under the old system, he recommended, and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives inserted in the bill, as the Committee on Appropriations have in this bill to a large extent, though not to the extent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs did, that they should be classified.

The Secretary of State very well says that under the present law such officials as receive a salary not exceeding $1,500 are allowed to engage in trade, and he very wisely thinks that in the interest of good service it is not well that an American consul should engage in trade. Receiving a low salary the temptation is great to make it up by certifying his own invoices when engaged in trade as low as he can, and, as he has the power to certify the invoices of his competitors, to make them as high as he can. That is not a thing that the United States ought to encourage. Perhaps a very large amount of money not apparent on the face of any returns would be saved by placing that class of men under salaries and not allow our officials to certify their own invoices at low rates and to swell the invoices of their competitors as high as they can. We had better pay them salaries for the work they do and let the fees be turned into the Treasury of the United States. Our own self-respect will not permit us to take part in or wink at any sort of larceny.

I will not go into detail because I can not improve on the statements made in the letter of the Secretary in regard to the necessity of making radical changes in the bill as it came from the House. I only desire to say that I agreed to the bill as reported by the Committee on Appropriations. I do not believe it is all that ought to be done. I do not believe it is all that the Appropriation Committee of the Senate on examination would desire to do; but when they see a bill coming from the other House, a House in political accord with the Secretary of State and with the executive branch of the Government, cut to pieces and economy paraded and talked about, and the country told how economical they are and how extravagant Senators are, I did not feel, Democrat as I am, that I had any right to ask the Republican gentlemen upon the Committee on Appropriations to increase salaries above what they were last year and above what we had appropriated for consuls and ministers during the time that party had control of this Government and then have it proclaimed all over the country how economical the Democratic party is and how extravagant the Republican Senate is!

Therefore, I was glad when the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], my colleagues on the subcommittee, had the courage to take up this incongruous bill as it came from the House and bring it back to the position that it occupied during the current year, thus doing as well by this administration, although the House was not willing to do so, as they had always done by their own administrations; as they have done that, while I think there were other things they ought to have done, they have done so well that I agree cordially with them, and I think they have done the country a good service in going as far as they have. I know they have made it possible for the Secretary of State to carry on his work in a respectable manner, which he could not have done if the bill had been accepted and passed as it came from the House.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to say a few words.

Mr. HALE. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, I want to thank the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] for the very manly and statesmanlike explanation which he has made of this matter; and I want to say that I do not believe that the estimates of the Secretary of State, furnished to us as I understand by the Treasury Department, indorsed by the Treasury Department, for the diplomatic and consular service of this country are any too high; and if the appropriation bill could have originated in the Senate, I do not believe there would have been any party division on the question as to whether the sum in the aggregate recommended for the maintenance and sustenance of our consular and diplomatic service should have been appropriated. I am sure there would have been none.

But the difficulty—and there is a difficulty in voting by way of amendment here the sums which are needed so to sustain our consular and diplomatic service as to make this nation and its representatives respectable in the eyes of the other nations of the earth—is this: That the House of Representatives, without regard to the requirements of the service, cuts down ruthlessly the estimates of the State Department by about $600,000, and then when that spasm of economy is over we on this side of the Chamber understand perfectly well that when the bill is raised even $100,000 we are to be charged with being extravagant, and the extravagance of the Republican Senate is to be contrasted with the economy of the Democratic House of Representatives. It does present a difficulty and it does embarrass a Senator, who, however much he may desire to sustain the Government and to vote all needed sums, can not in the nature of things help having some political feeling on the subject.

Now, I find that in this desire to economize the House refuses to appropriate for eighteen consular officers, among whom are the agent and consul-general at Cairo, the consul-general at Kanagawa, at Panama, at Halifax, at Mexico, and St. Petersburg, and the consuls at Hong-Kong, at Sheffield, at Matamoras, at Annaberg, and at Mahé.

What is the Senate to do? Is it to take the bill as it comes from the House of Representatives and agree with it in its economy, or rather in its penuriousness, or is the Senate to provide for the payment of the officers whom the House has refused to provide for at the expense of being charged with extravagance?

I propose not to act from a political standpoint. If I did, I should vote against every one of these amendments, and say that if the Democratic House of Representatives does not propose to provide payment for its Democratic officials abroad, let it take the medicine which it prescribes; but having in view the continuance of our service, not to say its efficiency, I am bound to vote for these amendments; and I desire to express here my wish that the Committee on Appropriations had gone even further and had adopted mainly the estimates of the State Department, so that we might have abroad such a service and such a representation as the greatness and the grandeur and the character of this country deserve.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, if I had known that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] was going to make my speech I do not know that I should have yielded.

Mr. PLATT. I began some time ago.

Mr. HALE. He made it a great deal better than I could.

The Committee on Appropriations has striven to rescue this service from the torn and mangled condition in which the House bill left it. It would require a man of deeper penetration and greater ingenuity than I am possessed of to discover the ground upon which this bill was made up as it came to this body from the other end of the Capitol. If the most important places in the consular service, which is the popular side of the business of the State Department, had been selected by premeditation in order to be stricken out, the list of important consulates that were ruthlessly beheaded at the other end of the Capitol would have been the same that it is now, or was when the bill was presented to our committee.

Take the list that has been referred to by the Senator from Connecticut, the consular agency at Cairo, not reduced, not pruned, not limited, but destroyed—one of the most important places in the consular service; an office where not only consular functions, but judicial functions and diplomatic functions are combined, and their exercise is needed every day in the year for the interest of American commerce and the protection of American citizens. We did not find it in the bill, and had to insert it.

Take the consul at Panama, amidships of the American continent; complications arising constantly involving the transit across the isthmus, the rights of our citizens, the operations of foreign nations and foreign capital upon a subject in which we have a delicate and immediate and extreme interest, and no minister there—stricken out of the bill, and nothing left in its place.

Take the great eastern consulates, where we are striving to build up and increase the commerce and trade and communication between our people and the Chinese and Japanese of the Old World, and Kanagawa and Hong-Kong, two of the most important consulates in all the list, are left out of the bill.

Take the consul at Halifax, most important, and especially now, the officer standing on the outer line, near to the troubles that have been threatening and disturbing us for the last year; the officer who has had the authority of the Department to exercise almost a diplomatic faculty, because we have no minister there, and the body that sent the bill, which I may not under the rules be allowed to refer to in name, did not consider that it was necessary to make any provision for him, but left him out.

The consul at the city of Mexico, in a neighboring State, where we ought to be encouraging commerce, opening new lines of business, seeking to monopolize and control her trade, instead of allowing it to drift to foreign countries—and in this bill, torn as it was when it was brought to us, we found that left out. And so with the others that have been referred to. The Committee on Appropriations found itself in a situation where in order to rescue the service from attack it had to insert these consulates at the old salaries, and has so reported them to the Senate.

There is one thing that the Senator from Connecticut has referred to, and that is the temptation on the part of the Committee on Appropriations to take these bills just as they are sent to us by the House of Representatives. In that feeling the Democrats upon the committee, as well as the Republicans, feel the same restiveness at these incomplete appropriation bills that are sent from time to time to us from the other body, showing omissions that must clearly be based upon the belief and conviction that the Senate will supplement the action that is taken elsewhere and will insert the things which are left out; and at once, upon the heels of that, from Maine to California is rung the charge of Senatorial Republican extravagance in increasing appropriations that are made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. President, the time will come when this will cease; the time will come when the overridden patience of this body and of the majority in this body will revolt at such charges; the time will come when it is seen plainly that by deliberation and premeditation the other body, in sympathy with the Administration, appropriating for its own civil service and for its own officials, sees fit to cut and pare and mangle that the Senators here will feel in self respect to do what the Senator from Connecticut has spoken of—let the Departments take the medicine the House has prescribed; because it will be felt that we ought not to bear continually this charge of extravagance in increasing the appropriations. I do not know how soon it will come. I can not predict for my fellows who are here, but for myself I may say that I am nearly at the point that when a bill is sent us from the House of Representatives that does treat these Departments in a way that it will be almost impossible for them to go on and do the duties and service of the Government, I, for one, will take the ground that we will pass the appropriation bills as they come from the House of Representatives, where they originate, and will oblige the Departments to go on with the money thus appropriated. Perhaps one year's experience would cure the evil.

There is but one other alternative, and that is one which I do not like to contemplate and that is connected not only with the practice which I have discussed, but with the insufferable delays that the Senate has submitted to and the Committee on Appropriations has submitted to in having these important bills thrust upon us in the last ten days of the session. That is the alternative frequently suggested by Senators here, of the Senate initiating appropriation bills and sending them to the House of Representatives. I have not yet made up my mind that that is a wise thing to do. Reared in the early part of my service in the other House I imbibed the idea there that these appropriation bills as well as revenue bills pure and simple for raising revenue should be initiated in the other body, but in the presence of difficulties that are almost insurmountable, I do not know but that the Senate some time or other will be obliged to resort to what has been a debated power, but a power that has been held to be possessed by it by earnest, thoughtful, and conservative men in the past, to initiate appropriation bills and send them to the other body.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I shall not delay the consideration of this bill by any observations of mine, but I feel it due to myself as a member of the Committee on Appropriations to say that I have not observed any disposition anywhere, either in the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate or in the House bills sent here, to make provision for the consular and diplomatic service of the United States adequate to the needs of the public service. I do not know how these appropriations compare with those made under former administrations, or by a House of Representatives which was Republican, and a Senate which was Republican, but I do know that the estimates of the present Secretary of State have been economical, able, and thorough, and adapted to the necessities of the public service, and I know that this bill is predicated upon two principles that are thoroughly vicious and destructive of the interests of the public service.

One of them is that the diplomatic and consular service of this country shall be reserved for those who have fortunes adequate to sustain them in the performance of these duties without an adequate salary, that the enterprise and talent of this country, the young men of ability and ambition, who have no fortune shall be excluded from diplomatic and consular service, and it is as plainly and directly the result of this legislation as if it was so expressed in terms. The other is—and this bill is founded upon it in every line of it, and the Senate Committee on Appropriations have retained it and given it their approval—that the foreign commerce of this country shall be taxed to support the internal administration of the Government. Already almost destroyed by exactions and negligence and the want of proper measures, it is to be further burdened with an imposition of taxes in the shape of fees which are to be turned into the Treasury of the United States to pay the expense of our internal administration of the Government. The reports show that the fees received by the consular officers of this Government exceed in many places in the proportion of one-half and two-thirds the salaries paid to consuls and the officers who collect them, and that they are turned into the Treasury of the United States to pay the expenses, not of the services performed in respect to the shipping and the commerce of that locality, but for the general purposes of the Government.

Why, sir, what kind of defense can you make of a bill founded upon the policy that fees are to be exacted from the commerce of the United States transacted at a consulate for the support of the internal administration of this Government? Is that a subject of taxation? And yet that is the principle of this bill, that the foreign commerce of the country shall be taxed and fees exacted at these different consulates in excess of the expense of the consulates and turned into the Treasury; and the report so exhibits the fact in many places.

The salaries of the consuls have been placed in this bill by the Senate committee and in all the former bills of which I have any knowledge upon such a scale that none but a rich man can hold the place, or a foreigner who is engaged in some other occupation. I am informed by the report that a very large proportion of the consular agents of the United States are foreigners, merchants engaged in business abroad, and from this large employment, which needs the enterprise and the talent of American citizens and which should be confined to them, our people are excluded by this niggardly and absurd policy of crushing the commerce of the country and excluding the American citizen and American enterprise from holding of these offices and the performance of these duties. That is the consular and diplomatic bill. The American citizen of small means is to be excluded from that.

Take the diplomatic mission of Turkey, an important point where commercial relations are beginning to be encouraged and growing up with the different provinces of that Kingdom, and they have reduced there the salary of the minister to $7,500 from $10,000 as it is now. No American citizen, in contrast with those representing the efficient and successful foreign policies of the European governments, can hold the respect and confidence of the people of that country and live in that condition of poverty and of want required by this inadequate salary. It is discreditable to the dignity of a free government, a people's government, that the poor citizen, whose energy and capacity and learning and patriotism have authorized his employment by the Government in an honorable position, should be so discredited by his poverty and his means of living that the dignity of a free government and people cannot be maintained with some degree of respectability and comfort for himself and his family, and extend the hospitality and social courtesy required by the customs of the country and exercised by the representatives of other countries.

But I desire to call attention to the fact that this policy of inadequate salaries, this policy of insufficient compensation, this policy of employing a careless and negligent and inferior ability to perform the duties of the different offices, is one that excludes the great mass of the people of the United States from the possibility of holding these offices. That is the theory of the bill, that none but the rich are allowed to hold these foreign consulates, except it be foreign subjects and those engaged in foreign commerce who do not belong to this country. The other policy of the bill is that, instead of reducing the fees which are allowed, so that they will not exceed such an amount as will pay a liberal and a reasonable compensation to the American citizen who may be sent there, and relieving commerce of its burdens, these fees are continued, salaries reduced, and the surplus paid into the Treasury of the United States as a support for the Government of the country. It is absurd. There is no language that can describe the folly of such a bill. The idea of paying subsidies for mail transportation to foreign countries, to open commerce, to extend our commerce while we are excluding the ability and the enterprise and business sagacity of the country from taking hold of these places, is a folly that can not be characterized to strongly.

What can a man of family and of reasonable capacity do upon $1,000 or $1,500 going abroad? Take the minister to Corea, who goes where there are no Americans, to a foreign country, and it is a question whether he is to be allowed a clerk or not or whether he must go alone and without assistants. He goes into a strange country, the language of which is unknown to him, where there are no Americans; and contrast that with the policy of the enlightened governments of Europe, with their liberal and comfortable provision for their business representatives, their consular agents. The whole bill is one which should not receive the consideration of the Senate or the country, but should be required to be amended and placed upon a basis where it will be an encouragement and a protection to the commerce of the people of the United States and will furnish men of adequate capacity and give them the means to do something towards building up the commerce of the country abroad.

I shall vote against the whole bill, as far as I am concerned, unless it can be placed on a basis where the money appropriated will be of some service to the country and its commerce.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, we have had a very extraordinary debate, one in which one House of Congress has been arrayed against the other. This is not the first time, I think, that I have observed in the reports of the Committee on Appropriations censure expressed in reference to the House of Representatives. I have no question that many of the suggestions of the Secretary of State were wise and proper, and it would have been well if they had been adopted by the House of Representatives. It would be too much to say that there is such perfection in the Department of State that there may not have been some mistake made there; but I have no question that many of the suggestions and recommendations made by the Secretary of State were wise and proper, and the House would have done well to adopt them; but that House is an independent body, acting on its own judgment. It has a perfect right to judge of the recommendations made by the heads of the Departments and to act in accordance with its own convictions of what is right and proper. I have no doubt that the Committee on Appropriations of this body in passing upon the House appropriations have exercised their own judgment and done what they think is right, and they deserve credit for that; but I do not think that it is the right spirit for the committees of one House to arraign the committees of the other or for the Senate to arraign the House or the House to arraign the Senate. That kind of legislation is not promotive, in my opinion, of the vast interests of the country.

In my judgment it would be a wise provision to have the Appropriations Committees of the two Houses confer with each other in reference to the provisions of the bills before they are formed. I have no doubt that all appropriation bills would be much more wisely framed and adjusted to the necessities of the Government if there was better communication between the representatives of the two Houses on the Appropriations Committees than to simply have one House act independently entirely of the other, and then when an appropriation bill comes to the other body to have the criticisms made which we have heard this morning.

I have no doubt that the other House have acted on their judgment correctly. In my opinion they have made some mistakes, just as, in my opinion, the committees of this body are liable to make mistakes; but I do not believe that this continuous censure on the part of a committee of one House on the action of the other is either wise or promotive of the best interests of the country. I repeat, if there could be some arrangement by which the appropriations committees of the respective Houses could have conferences in reference to the formation of these bills, it would be much wiser than to stand aloof from each other, and then when the bills come before their respective Houses to have the criticisms indulged in which have been indulged in this morning.

I have no doubt, I repeat, that the House of Representatives have made some mistakes; but the House of Representatives forms a co-ordinate branch of Congress. They have as much right as the Senate to their judgment of what is right and proper to be done. I shall assist the committees of this body to correct anything that in my judgment is wrong that was done on the part of the House of Representatives; but I do not believe, from whatever motive it may proceed, that this eternal criticism of the House of Representatives on the part of the Senate because of appropriations is either wise or proper or calculated to promote harmony between the two Houses or the best interests of the country.

We have heard the epithet "penurious" applied to the House of Representatives. That is not proper, in my opinion. There may have been a close watching of the expenditures of the Government, and to that extent I give the House credit. I think the record of the last and present session will show that the House of Representatives have performed invaluable services to the country in checking extravagances that have gone through this body. While they may have been close or even penurious, as has been said, in some matters, they have acted wisely is checking some of the extravagant measures which have passed through this body. I think the records of this Congress will show that not much short of $100,000,000 have been saved by the vigilance of the House of Representatives over appropriations that have been made by the Senate in the two sessions of this Congress.

I have observed a tendency in this body, I think, to unnecessary extravagance in many things. I recall the fact that we passed a bill appropriating $77,000,000 for educational purposes in the States, which sleeps upon the Calendar of the House of Representatives, I am happy to say, where I hope it may sleep until the day of eternity. We have passed other appropriation bills that have been extravagant, such as the subsidy item in the appropriations for the Post-Office Department. I give the House of Representatives credit for checking that extravagance of the Senate. So with many other measures. If there had not been a conservative power somewhere, I do not know what would have become of the Treasury of the United States. Certainly there would have been no surplus left in the Treasury but for the action of the House of Representatives in checking the extravagant measures that have been passed through this body, and the vigilance and careful consideration of the President of the United States in vetoing a measure that was calculated to take annually not less than $50,000,000 from the public Treasury.

I give to the President very great credit for that independence of spirit which prompted him to stand as a sentinel upon the watch-tower and guard the interests of the people of this country. So I give credit to the House of Representatives. While they have acted, as I have before remarked, too closely in some respects, I do not think they are deserving of the criticisms which have been indulged in this morning, and as a member of the Democratic party which controls that House I am not going to sit here and hear such criticisms, which I believe to be wholly unnecessary, wholly improper, and not promotive of the best interests of this country in any respect.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator sits down I should like him to point out a single amendment that the Committee on Appropriations has made to this bill curing the manifest defects of the other House that he believes is improper or that he himself will not vote for.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I have not attempted to criticise any act of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. I have said that I had no doubt they had properly corrected mistakes of the other House. I have not examined all these measures. I said, furthermore, that I should sustain, as far as I could do so, the action of the Appropriations Committee of this body. That was not the issue I made. The issue I made was that this eternal carping at the House of Representatives, because of its economy, on the part of Senators, applying opprobrious terms to the House of Representatives and to the Committee on Appropriations of that body, was unwise, that it was not calculated to promote harmony between the two Houses, that it was not calculated to promote the interests of the country, and that many of the criticisms were unjust and improper.

I said furthermore that I give to the House of Representatives credit for their vigilance in watching the expenditures of the Government, many of which have been lavish, as I conceive, as they have passed this body. That is what I said. I have raised no issue with the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. I have said, on the contrary, that I had no doubt they had very properly corrected some of the mistakes in this bill which had been made by the House of Representatives.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Delaware in what he has just said virtually gives away his case and admits that no improper remarks have been made here touching the conduct of the other branch of the legislative department of the Government in making up these bills. Either the other House is right or the Senate is right, and whichever has sinned has sinned with eyes wide open. There was not a single avenue of intelligence that the committee of the Senate pursued which was not open to the other House, or there was not a single item of information that illuminated the investigations of the Senate committee which did not shed its light upon the other House.

Here is an instance of a bill that would practically strangle this important branch of the governmental service as it came to the Senate, which has been rescued from that condition, in regard to which each branch of the Congress of the United States had the same information. It is not an attack upon the other House; it is not opprobrious epithets that have been visited here; it is only the manifestation of a just and righteous indignation at the treatment the Senate is subjected to in considering these maimed and mangled and distorted bills as they come here.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the bill which is under consideration, as it came from the House, as the Senator from Maine very well said, would have resulted in a very serious break-up in the consular and diplomatic service of the Government, even if it did not practically strangle it, if it were not amended. With that as a text, I desire to say that I think our foreign service is in a very bad condition anyhow. I have my doubts about the propriety of keeping up the diplomatic part of it, and believe that the work which is called diplomacy, and which is said to be only an exaggerated form of lying, could be carried on directly between the governments interested without the intervention of what is known as a minister at any of the foreign courts.

But when it comes to the consular service, that is a very important thing to the people of this country. That has to do, or ought to have to do, with our trade relations with the people of the various foreign countries.

I do not think this service has ever been what it ought to be. A part of that was because the Government could not get for the salaries which it was willing to give the services of proper persons, and a part of it grows out of the fact also that this service has been neglected by the American people and by the American Congress. It has been depreciated in every way possible. We have been so much concerned in our interior affairs that we have given the go-by very largely to those which have brought us into relations with foreign people and which have affected our foreign trade. I think the service under the present administration is the worst that it has ever been.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Why?

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Delaware asks me to give a reason. I was about to state it, and I will say now with perfect frankness why I think so.

The incoming of a Democratic administration brought from the lumber garrets of that party a great mass of people whose existence before that time was not known. People whom the Senator from Delaware, and the leading men of his party generally, did not know anything about came forward as applicants for offices under the Democratic administration. Men who had been for all practical purposes dead and buried turned up with "claims" upon the Democratic administration for appointments.

Of course it would not do to appoint them to any place at home, because there their manifest incompetency; the odor of their decaying carcasses of course would be offensive to the nostrils of even non-sensitive people. Therefore they were sent abroad. Anything to get these people out of the country where their decayed condition would be out of the reach of the observation of the American people; and that became I think the watchword to a large extent of this administration.

I do not mean thereby to arraign the administration. It did the best it could. It had a hard job to undertake to do anything practical in the way of administration with the material it had on hand for the purpose of filling these and other places.

But my objection goes deeper than a complaint in regard to this service under the present administration. I believe the service is in a worse condition than it ever has been, as I said. But it has not been for years as good as it should be. A few years ago under a Republican administration a Democratic House of Representatives made appropriation for the consular and diplomatic service which so reduced the salaries of consuls and diplomatic officers that the total of the appropriations for that service was below what it was in 1857—nearly half.

Mr. BUTLER. Would it be inconvenient for the Senator from Kansas to point out in what particular the consular service of the Government is now in such bad condition. He makes a general statement. I should be very glad if he would particularize.

Mr. PLUMB. I will go on with what I have to say, and I shall come presently to answer the inquiry of the Senator from South Carolina.

As I said, owing to this constriction, this disregard of the necessities of the service, this contempt for the foreign service of the Government manifested by the House of Representatives (which under the Constitution has the right to originate appropriation bills; at all events which has assumed that right, and which right has not recently been denied), it determined to bring the public service within not only the narrowest possible limits, but to destroy it if it could, for the purpose of bringing reproach upon the party then in power, and these niggardly appropriations operated to keep good men out of the service in a very large degree. Still, good men did get into the service, the meager salaries to the contrary notwithstanding, and men who had some sentiment of nationality, men who had some idea of the beneficent purposes which were designed to be accomplished by their appointment and by the creation of the offices which they filled, did get into the foreign service of the country under a Republican administration.

A Democratic administration came into power, as I said, and finding it had on hand a lot of belated individuals who had been talking about the resolutions of 1798, and what they called the Tilden fraud of 1876, and so on, and intermediately about Jackson, who claimed a recognition at the hands of the Democratic administration which had to be satisfied in some way, were billeted upon the foreign service of the country. Does the Senator from South Carolina want me to specify names and dates, and so on?

Mr. BUTLER. I should be delighted to have the Senator do it.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from South Carolina, from being a few moments ago, as I supposed him to be, the most humane of individuals, has assumed the proportion of the most cruel of his kind.

Mr. BUTLER. I will submit to that, I am not as cruel as the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. Does the Senator want me to pillory here individual members of his party?

Mr. BUTLER. I would be delighted if the Senator would, and I think he owes it to himself, to the Senate, and to the State Department that he should pillory somebody rather than make insinuations and general accusations such as he has made. For one, I would prefer that he should pillory anybody whom he chooses.

Mr. PLUMB. The representative character of the Senator from South Carolina of course can not be denied, so far as it relates to that political organization of which he is a conspicuous member, but when it comes to these individuals who have been taken out of a merited obscurity and brought into the sunlight of publicity, and put into those places in the public service which they are conspicuously unqualified to fill, I deny his right to represent them. I speak of the general results of party responsibility, of the course of current affairs in those things which are in the knowledge of all men.

The Democratic party is in a conspiracy still against the service under its own control, perhaps with a nicer sense of the actual merit or demerit of the members from which alone this force can now be drawn than I have; so I am not going to say that the salaries that have been fixed in this diplomatic bill are not equal to the merits of the persons who alone, on the principle of selection applied by this Administration, can be called on to fill these places. I will not undertake even to say that those places, which the Democratic House of Representatives left out entirely, the consulates which it failed to provide for, some of which have been in existence more than a quarter of a century, perhaps arose out of consideration of the fact that the Democratic party had not even second-class material to fill them with, and consequently preferred to abolish them.

Mr. HAMPTON. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a moment?

Mr. PLUMB. Interruptions are always in order.

Mr. HAMPTON. I do not wish to enter into a discussion with the Senator, who is nothing if not critical, but I simply wish to tell him and the Senate of a fact which was brought to my knowledge when a very distinguished Republican held the place of Secretary of State. He was trying to fill the most important mission that we have in our gift, and said he had very great difficulty in doing it. Some friend said to him there were certainly a great many gentlemen qualified to fill the place. He replied, "Yes, but unfortunately they are all in the Democratic party."

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from South Carolina has developed a new phase of his character to me, his utter inability to appreciate a joke.

Mr. President, there was difficulty in getting at times the best material the Republicans had to fill these places, because the members of that party generally had something else to do. They had occupations which gave them more adequate compensation than the Government would give them. I know that offices of importance and high degree were offered many a time and over and over again to gentlemen in the Republican party who declined to take them, because they said, in the first place, perhaps, the post of honor was a private station, and, in the next place, they could not afford to sacrifice private fortune for the purpose of receiving the inadequate compensation which the Government gave.

If the Senator from South Carolina, however, should be serious enough to say that he thought the personnel of the Democratic party furnished better material for these places than that of the Republican party, I am perfectly willing to make the comparison between the service as it is now and as it was two years ago.

Mr. BUTLER. Is the Senator from Kansas prepared to state how many of the incumbents are still in office who were in office when the present administration came into power?

Mr. PLUMB. I am not; and still I am mindful of the fact that the President has had difficulty in even getting second-class men to take the places, and consequently has left a great many Republicans in office.

Mr. BUTLER. That is not an answer to my question. That flippant style of course does very well for the hustings, but I do not think it is very suitable on the occasion of a discussion like this.

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Senator set me a pattern which it is proper to follow?

Mr. BUTLER. I will do so if the Senator will follow it. That I am afraid he will not do, because I am afraid he is incapable of doing it. However, I should like the Senator to point out how many Republicans have been retained in the consular service by this administration. He is denouncing the service generally for inefficiency, for incompetency, for having second-class men. I should like to have him point out how many of our present consuls abroad belong to his party, who were appointed by a Republican administration.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no great taste for political mathematics. I said, and I repeat, that the service is in a worse condition than it has been for many years.

Mr. BUTLER. I do not agree with the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not mean to say that it might not have been worse. It would have been worse, of course, if more Republicans had been turned out.

I was proceeding to generalize. The fault has been largely in our legislation. We have treated these places too much as though they were of no consequence. We have not given adequate compensation. We have not properly organized the State Department. It is all right, of course, to have at the head of that Department a gentleman of varied accomplishments, of literary ability, of a reputation which goes beyond the boundaries of the United States, and who is qualified to get into that upper walk and solar air in which only diplomats move; but somewhere in that Department there ought to be somebody who knows something about the nomenclature of trade, who knows the difference between a Navajo blanket and a piece of Wamsutta muslin.

Mr. President, I could suggest an improvement. I would rather take a commercial drummer than a broken-down politician for an Assistant Secretary of State. If there could be some man somewhere in that Department possessing authority, who had his finger on the daily pulsebeat of American industry, of American ambition, of the growth and the progress of the American people, and who could put that into practical shape, American manufactures would not be sighing for want of foreign markets, because it is not true that American goods on the whole are dearer than foreign goods are.

But when we come into that international domain in which nation struggles with nation for supremacy, the American manufacturer is lost, isolated, individualized, while his foreign competitor has at his back at every step the powerful purpose of his government helping him in that competition in which political power goes along with prices.

The American manufacturer is at a disadvantage, and it is because this whole structure, from beginning to end, is built upon the wrong plan. It is because this foreign service and its concomitant, our foreign trade, has been degraded to the level of a deformed civil service which looks to the reward of the belated, the unworthy, for political service or for good riddance. If we could put into this foreign service one-half of the energy, of the enterprise, of the intelligent appreciation manifested by the commercial travelers of America in the promotion of the domestic trade of this country, there would be no lack of foreign trade for American merchants and American manufacturers. I would be willing to substitute at a hazard the humblest member of that fraternity as Assistant Secretary of State for any man of that grade who has been in that office during the last few years.

We keep up at great expense the show and the tinsel of what we call our diplomatic service, and we print tomes and cords of what we call diplomatic correspondence, which relates to everything that is of no consequence to the American people and does not even enrich its literature, while those things that are material to the trade of this country are neglected.

I would say to-day, if I had my way, abolish the diplomatic service and substitute in place of it an enlightened commercial service. Let the men who carry the commission of the Government to represent it abroad go backed by its power intelligently directed in the way of helping to find and to make markets for American products, and the genius of the mechanics and of the laboring men of this country, backed by that power, would take possession of all the markets in which skill properly applied is of any account.

It is that kind of a foreign service that Great Britain has. She has the other kind, too, because of her interest in continental politics, and the necessity of finding employment for her aristocracy; but she sends the younger sons of her noble families, she sends her keen-eyed men of traffic into all the world where she desires trade, and she sends them with instructions to bring about results, and she arms them with her power. She establishes lines of steamship communication with the ports at which her consuls are stationed. She backs her manufacturers by subsidies and by helpful devices of every kind for the competition they have got to meet, and she says to them, take possession at whatever cost, because there will be after profit to compensate, if necessary, for first losses.

Until we have some such service, until the Department through which we touch all these varied interests—which represents or which is supposed to represent our external affairs—is vitalized with this same spirit, the individual effort of American manufacturers will be at a minimum as to results.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Secretary will proceed to read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was in "Schedule A" in the appropriations for "salaries of ministers," before the word "Turkey," in line 28, to insert "and;" and after "Turkey" to insert "at $7,500 each;" so as to make the clause read:

Envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary to the United States of Colombia, the Argentine Republic, and Turkey, at $7,500 each, $22,500.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to inquire whether that is the salary which has been paid to the minister at Turkey?

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that that is the salary which was paid for the minister to Turkey until two years ago.

Mr. PLATT. It was raised two years ago?

Mr. ALLISON. It was raised two years ago. It was raised at the short session of 1885 to $10,000, and was appropriated for at that rate for the current year. The House of Representatives saw proper to restore the salary to what it was prior to two years ago, and the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate do not recommend a change.

Mr. PLATT. Is it not as desirable that we should have at Turkey a minister of equal ability to the minister who was there with a salary of $10,000 a year?

Mr. ALLISON. It would be very well, I should think, to have such a person, if we could find one, and it would be very well to give him such a salary, if we felt so disposed; but the Committee on Appropriations, fearing the disposition to economize in this bill, did not propose to raise this salary. Of course any other Senator can offer an amendment to that effect.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 41, after the word "minister," to insert "resident and consul-general;" so as to make the item read:

Minister resident and consul-general to Liberia, $4,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that the minister resident and consul-general to Liberia under the existing current appropriation act receives $5,000. The other House reduced it a thousand dollars, and the Committee on Appropriations did not choose to recommend an increase. I believe this and the preceding amendment are the only two instances where there has been a reduction from the current appropriations for the present year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 42, to insert:

Agent and consul-general at Cairo, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 50, after "Berlin," to insert "China;" in line 512, after the word "each," to strike out "thirteen thousand one hundred and twenty-five" and insert "fifteen thousand seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Secretaries of the legations in Berlin, China, Japan, London, Paris, and St. Petersburg, at $2,625 each, $15,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 57, to insert:

Second secretaries of the legations in Japan and China, who shall be American students of the language of the court and country to which they are appointed respectively, and shall be allowed and required, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to devote their time to the acquisition of such language, at $1,800 each, $3,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 70, before the word "Spain," to strike out "and," and after "Spain" to insert "and Turkey;" and in line 71, after the word "each," to strike out "nine thousand" and insert "ten thousand eight hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Secretaries of the legations in Austria, Brazil, Italy, Mexico, Spain, and Turkey, at $1,800 each, $10,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 72, to insert:

Secretaries of the legations in Chili and Peru, at $1,500 each, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 74, to insert:

Secretary of legation and consul-general at Corea, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 78, after the word "Turkey," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

Interpreter to the legation in Turkey, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after the word "dollars," in line 84, to insert:

Interpreter to the legation and consulate-general in Bangkok, Siam, $500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Contingent expenses foreign missions," after the word "business," in line 98, to insert:

And also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, clerk-hire, compensation of cavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangier, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of legations, and for printing in the Department of State.

So as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of enabling the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, clerk-hire, compensation of cavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangier, and the compensation of dispatch agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of legations, and for printing in the Department of State, $105,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was, after line 165, to insert:

Haytian arbitration commission: For expenses of printing for joint commission which sat at Washington to arbitrate the claims of Antonio Pelletier and A. H. Lazare against the Government of Hayti, $1,577.45; for compensation of the arbitrator, $2,500; in all, $4,077.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 173, to insert:

Venezuela and American claims commission: For compensation of one commissioner, at the rate of $5,000 per annum; one-half compensation of third commissioner, the said one-half at the rate of $2,500 per annum; one-half compensation of secretary of commission, said one-half at the rate of $1,000 per annum; one-half of incidental expenses, or so much thereof as may be necessary, $3,500; in all, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 192, after the word "Honolulu," to insert "Kanagawa;" and in the same line to strike out the word "and;" in line 193, after "Montreal," to insert "and Panama;" and in line 194, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twelve" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

Consuls-general at Berlin, Honolulu, Kanagawa, Montreal, and Panama, at $4,000 each, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 194, to insert:

Consul-general at Halifax, $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 198, after the word "Rome," to insert "St. Petersburg;" and in line 199, after the word "each," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "eighteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Consuls-general at Constantinople, Ecuador, Frankfort, Rome, St. Petersburg, and Vienna, at $3,000 each, $18,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 199, to insert:

Consul-general at Mexico, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 201, to insert:

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and comercial agents, $378,500, as follows, namely:

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 205, to insert:

Consul at Hong-Kong, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the list of consuls of class 2 at $3,500 per annum, to strike out lines 209 and 210, in the following words:

Argentine Republic:
Consul at Buenos Ayres.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in consuls of class 4, in line 244, before the word "Bordeaux," to insert "Annaberg;" after "Bordeaux," in the same line, to insert "Brunswick" and strike out the word "and;" and in line 245, after "Marseilles," to insert "and Mayence;" so as to make the clause read:

Consuls at Annaberg, Bordeaux, Brunswick, Lyons, Marseilles, and Mayence.

Mr. ALLISON. The three consulates proposed to be inserted in lines 244 and 245 should be inserted in line 247. Therefore I ask the Senate to disagree to the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 247, after the word "at," I move to insert "Annaberg, Brunswick;" after "Dresden," in the same line, to strike out "and;" and after "Hamburg," in the same line, to insert "and Mayence;" so as to make the item read:

Consuls at Annaberg, Brunswick, Bremen, Dresden, Hamburg, and Mayence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the consuls of class 4, in line 252, before the word "Tunstall," to insert "Sheffield;" so as to make the item read:

Consuls, at Birmingham, Dundee, Leith, Nottingham, Sheffield, Tunstall, and Victoria (British Columbia).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 254, among the consuls of class 4, to insert:

Switzerland:
Consul at St. Galle.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the list of consuls of class 5, at $2,000 per annum, after line 266, to insert:

Columbia:
Consul at Barranquilla.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 270, in consuls of class 5, to insert:

France:
Consuls at Rheims and St. Etienne.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 276, in consuls of class 5, after the word "Crefeld," to insert "Dusseldorf, Elberfeld;" so as to read:

Consuls at Barmen, Chemnitz, Cologne, Crefeld, Dusseldorf, Elberfeld, Leipsic, Nuremburg, and Sonneberg.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 279, in consuls of class 5, after "Cardiff," to insert "Chatham," after "Dublin," to insert "Dunfermline;" in line 281, after "(Mauritius)," to insert "Port Stanley and Saint Thomas (Canada);" and after "(New Brunswick)," in line 282, to insert "Sherbrook (Canada);" so as to make the clause read:

Consuls at Cardiff, Chatham, Cork, Dublin, Dunfermline, Hamilton (Canada), Kingston (Jamaica), Leeds, Nassau (New Providence), Port Louis (Mauritius), Port Stanley and Saint Thomas (Canada), Saint John (New Brunswick), Sherbrook (Canada), Sydney (New South Wales), and.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 292, in consuls of class 5, before the word "at," to strike out "Consul" and insert "Consuls," and at the end of the line to add "and Matamoras;" so as to make the item read:

Consuls at Acapulco and Matamoras.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 305, among consuls of class 5, after the word "Basle," to insert "Hagen;" so as to read:

Consuls at Basle, Hagen, and Zurich.

Mr. ALLISON. That should be "Horgen" instead of "Hagen."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be modified as suggested by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 315, among the consuls of class 6, at $1,500 per annum, before "Para" to strike out "and," and after "Para" to insert "and Santos;" so as to make the clause read:

Brazil:
Consuls at Bahia, Para, and Santos.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 321, in consuls of class 6, before "Guadeloupe," to insert "Cognac;" so as to read:

France and French dominions:
Consuls at Cognac, Guadeloupe, Martinique, and Nice.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 323, consuls of class 6, after "Aix-la-Chapelle," to insert "Breslau, Kehl;" so as to read:

Germany:
Consuls at Aix-la-Chapelle, Breslau, Kehl, Mannheim, Munich, and Stuttgart.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 328, consuls of class 6, after "Bristol," to insert "Brockville;" in line 330, after "Gibraltar," to insert "Guelph (Canada);" in line 331, after "(Canada)," to insert "London (Canada), Mahé (Seychelles);" in line 332, after "(Canada)," to insert "Port Hope (Canada);" and in line 335, after "(Canada)," to insert "Stratford (Canada), Three Rivers (Canada);" so as to make the clause read:

Great Britain and British dominions:
Consuls at Amherstburg (Canada), Antigua (West Indies), Auckland (New Zealand), Barbadoes, Bermuda, Bristol, Brockville, Cape Town, Ceylon (India), Charlottetown (Prince Edward Island), Clifton (Canada), Fort Erie (Canada), Goderich (Canada), Gibraltar, Guelph (Canada), Kingston (Canada), London (Canada), Mahé (Seychelles), Malta, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Quebec, Pictou (Canada), Port Hope (Canada), Port Sarnia (Canada), Port Stanley (Falkland Islands), Prescott (Canada), Southampton, Saint Helena, Saint John's (Canada), Saint Stephen (Canada), Stratford (Canada), Three Rivers (Canada), Windsor (Canada), and Winnipeg (Manitoba).

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from list of consuls of class 7, lines 363 and 364, as follows:

Commercial agent at Gaboon.
Commercial agent at St. Paul de Loando (East Coast).

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Mozambique (Eastern Coast).

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to add an amendment, in line 365, by inserting "consul at" before "Mozambique."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to line 373.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to strike out lines 372 and 373 in the following words:

Fiji:
Commercial agent at Levuka.

That clause is inserted already in another place.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 399, to insert:

COMMERCIAL AGENCIES.

Schedule C.—Gaboon, Levuka, and St. Paul de Loando.

And in the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1889, there shall be estimated for specifically, under classified consulates, all consulates and commercial agencies where the fees collected or compensation allowed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, exceed $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, before the words "consular clerks," in line 411, to strike out "seven" and insert "six;" and in line 412, after the word "each," to strike out "eight thousand four" and insert "seven thousand two;" so as to make the item read:

Six consular clerks, at $1,200 per annum each, $7,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 414, before the words "consular clerks," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" and in line 415, after the word "each," to strike out "six" and insert "seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Seven consular clerks, at $1,000 per annum each, $7,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out lines 420 to 435, inclusive, in the following words:

For allowance for clerks at consulates, $42,600, as follows:

For the consul-general at Havana and the consul at Liverpool, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $3,000 for any one year; and to consuls-general at London, Paris, and Shanghai, each a sum not exceeding the rate of $2,000 for any one year; to the consul-general at Berlin, Vienna, Frankfort, and Montreal, and to the consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Leipsic, Lyons, Manchester, Hong-Kong, Ottawa, Belfast, Birmingham, Bradford, Chemnitz, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Havre, Marseilles, Rio de Janeiro, Nuremberg, Leith, Singapore, Stuttgart, Mannheim, and Tunstall, each a sum not exceeding $1,500 for any one year: Provided, That the total sum expended in any one year shall not exceed the amount herein appropriated.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For allowance for clerks at consulates, $50,320, the sum to be allowed at each consulate not to exceed the rate herein specified, as follows:

Consul at Liverpool, $2,000.
Consul-general at Havana, $1,600.
Consul-general at Shanghai, $1,200.
Consuls-general at London, Paris, and Rio de Janeiro, at $1,600 each, $4,800.
Consuls-general at Berlin, Frankfort, Vienna, Montreal, and Kanagawa, and consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Manchester, Lyons, Hong-Kong, Havre, Crefeld, and Chemnitz, at $1,200 each, $15,600.
Consuls at Bradford, Birmingham, and Marseilles, at $960 each, $2,880.
Consuls-general at Calcutta, Port au Prince, and Melbourne, and consuls at Leipsic, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Antwerp, Nuremberg, Tunstall, Bordeaux, Colon, Singapore, Glasgow, and Panama, at $800 each, $12,000.
Consuls at Belfast, Barmen, Leith, Dundee, and Victoria, and the consuls-general at Matamoros, and Halifax, at $640 each, $4,480.
Consul-general at Mexico and Berne, and consuls at Malaga, Naples, Genoa, Stuttgart, Florence, Mannheim, Prague, Zurich, Beirut, and Demerara, at $480 each, $5,760.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 475, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

For an additional allowance for clerks at consulates, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of State at consulates not herein provided for in respect to clerk-hire, no greater portion of this sum than $400 to be allowed to any one consulate in any one fiscal year, $20,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the amendment is agreed to, I desire to state that we have added $10,000 to this general fund so as to cover the necessary clerk-hire of the salaried consuls provided for in the bill, the clerks having formerly been paid out of the fees collected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. BUTLER. After line 234, under consulates of class 3, I move to add:

Consul at Antwerp.

I am induced to move this amendment because I think the salary of the consul at Antwerp is wholly inadequate and entirely disproportionate to the commercial importance of the place. It is, I believe, the third commercial port in Europe in point of the extent and value of its commerce. The American consul there receives but $2,500, and Brussels, a city about 40 miles away, an interior city, is represented by a consul at precisely the same amount. I think that there should be some discrimination made in favor of the consul at Antwerp because of the greater duties he has to perform, and I trust the chairman of the committee will not object to this amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. If I understand the purport of the Senator's amendment he proposes to increase the salary of the consul at Antwerp $500. If that is his desire, it should come in after line 217, and the word "Belgium" should be inserted.

Mr. BUTLER. I accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina.

The SECRETARY. After line 217 insert:

Belgium:
Consul at Antwerp.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 240 I move to strike out "consuls at Antwerp and" and insert "consul at;" so as to read:

Consul at Brussels.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 203 I move to strike out "$378,500" and insert "$379,000," so as to make the total correspond to the amendment just made.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to line 346, page 15. I desire to raise the salary of the consul at Asuncion, in Paraguay, to $2,500. It is $1,500 in the bill, and that has been the salary of the consul at that place for a number of years.

Mr. ALLISON. Fifteen hundred dollars?

Mr. MORGAN. Fifteen hundred dollars.

Mr. ALLISON. Why does the Senator wish to increase it?

Mr. MORGAN. Because that is getting to be a very important port, and our relations with the Argentine Confederation and the States of Uruguay and Paraguay are getting to be more and more important every day. The Argentine Confederation and those adjoining States correspond in influence in South America with the United States in North America. I suppose there is no country in America outside of the United States where there is as much activity and as much progress, and to which there is as much emigration as there is upon the La Plata River and its tributaries.

The people of the United States are building up a commerce with that country very rapidly. I know of one gentleman who is interested in a number of iron steamers on the La Plata River, running up as far as Asuncion and doing a very large business there. The steamboats are made in New York and sent out in sections and travel up and down that river. Recently an appointment was made of a gentleman from Alabama to that place, Thomas J. Tunstall, who was formerly consul at Cadiz, and he was desired to go there, but found himself unable to sustain his family on a salary of $1,500—a gentleman who speaks the Spanish language and the French language and is a thoroughly competent consul. After his declination of the office it was offered to another gentleman of that State who also found himself unable to go in consequence of the smallness of the salary.

Asuncion is a place of very decided cultivation for that section of the world, with a large amount of wealth. The people are accomplished and enterprising and energetic, and it is entirely regular that we should have some man there who can attend to the business. I think the refusal of an addition of $1,000 a year to the salary is going to be a very serious detriment to the commerce with that interesting section of the world.

For that reason I ask that this salary be increased $1,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order that this is not estimated for. It is not in the Book of Estimates. My recollection is that the consulate at Asuncion is estimated for at $1,500. There has been no consul there for some time. I do not think there have been any consular fees collected at that point for three or four years. I am aware of the fact that the place is now vacant, because the man who was sent there found nothing to do and returned.

Mr. MORGAN. He did not find the salary enough to live on. That was the trouble about it. The place is one of very considerable commercial importance, and growing every day. The Government should avail itself of the opportunity of extending our commerce there.

Of course, the question of order may carry the matter beyond my reach. I was in hopes the Senator from Iowa would not make the question of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Alabama will be read by the Secretary.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to put it in the $2,500 class, class 6, at the end of that class—to transpose the words "Paraguay: Consul at Asuncion," to the end of line 258.

The SECRETARY. After line 258 it is proposed to add:

Paraguay:
Consul at Asuncion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To which the Senator from Iowa interposes a point of order, the Chair understands.

Mr. ALLISON. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is under the impression that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. GIBSON. I move to insert, after line 292, on page 13, after "Matamoras," the words "Paso del Norte," so that the salary of consul at that town in Mexico shall be $2,000 a year instead of $1,500 a year.

I should like to ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for a moment. I find by reference to a newspaper published in El Paso that in the year 1884 the exports from Mexico to this country from the neighboring city of Paso del Norte amounted to $831,000 and that in the year 1885 the exports were over $7,000,000.

The completion of the railway system at this point has vastly increased the business there. Our relations with Mexico and the inflow of commerce from that country to our own, instead of passing as hitherto to Vera Cruz, comes now mainly by rail to this point, Paso del Norte.

I should like very much if the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations would allow this salary to be raised from $1,500 to $2,000. The gentleman who formerly occupied the position resigned the place. He was a judge in the State of Louisiana at a salary of $3,500 a year, and took this place mainly on account of his health, but it is well known to the Senate that several important questions have arisen which came before him for his consideration, and that at this point—the city is on the border between Mexico and the United States—it is very important that we should have a man of good sense, acquainted with jurisprudence as well as commerce, to occupy the position of consul.

I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and of the Senate to the Cutting case in which this gentleman appeared as I think to much advantage to the country in protecting the individual liberty and rights of our citizens who pass over from El Paso, in Texas, to Paso del Norte, which is just across the river in the Republic of Mexico.

The salary of $1,500, I submit, is entirely inadequate to the support in any style of respectability of a consul at this point, at which I repeat the imports of our country have increased within the past year from $831,000 to between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000. I hope the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations will accept this slight amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. The reference which the Senator from Louisiana has made to the Cutting case induces me to inquire whether we do not want, instead of a consul at Paso del Norte, a good special agent to represent the State Department in that country.

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] makes a suggestion in regard to the person. I do not care for myself to go into the question of the personnel of the Democratic party; but the action of the administration in the Cutting case seemed to indicate that the minister we had at the City of Mexico could not be trusted in the Cutting case. It seems to me, if that case is to be made the basis of this claim, that we had better consider whether we do not want something else besides a consul.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. GIBSON. The Senator from Kansas indulges in an insinuation against the consul at Paso del Norte. As I understand the duties of an American consul anywhere it is incumbent on him not only to protect the commercial interests of our country so far as he can, but to look after the personal rights of American citizens in the country to which he is sent; and in this case I think if the Senator will carefully look into the facts he will ascertain that the consul did no more than his duty; that he exhibited no excess of zeal, and was actuated by no motive to discharge the duties of the American minister to the Republic of Mexico in appearing in court, and a court without a record, in order to ascertain what was the charge made against this American citizen, and what the method and the manner by which the processes of that court were to be conducted and on which the final judgment of that court was to be rendered.

If I understand the object of a consul it is not only to look over the field of commerce and trade, but also to intervene wherever it may be necessary to protect what is dearer to the American citizen than mere commerce and trade, namely, his individual liberty and freedom; and in this case the American consul did no more than his duty, and I think, instead of being censured or reproached for the zeal and the ability which was manifested in the investigation and supervision of that case, he should be commended for the strict observance of his duty.

Mr. PLUMB. I did not intend to be understood as complaining of the action of Consul Brigham in the Cutting case. I was only designing to say that the Administration seemed to regard the consul as not a very important person, whether by the lack of personal qualification or the power of his office I do not know; and about the very important duties which came up in connection with the Cutting case, the administration seem to have had a similar feeling about the minister at Mexico, and in fact the Cutting case caused the sending of a new minister to Mexico, and a new consul to the capital of the country. Both the old officials there have become officially deceased; and the inquiry with me was whether in the place of the consul at Paso del Norte, and the minister to Mexico, and the consul at the city of Mexico we did not need some sort of a traveling agent who could go down there, and by traveling around from place to place represent our interests, and do that which it seems the stationary agents of the Government can not do. Perhaps, however, the consul at Paso del Norte does not get enough salary to enable him to perform duties which would be useful to the country.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to know from the Senator from Kansas whether the resignation of our minister to Mexico grew out of that discussion or had any connection whatever with that matter?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know myself and I shall never know officially from the State Department, because I am advised that that Department does not intend to send to the Senate the correspondence in that case although it has been called for; at least it does not intend to send it at this session of Congress. So my inference, whatever it may be now, will undoubtedly continue.

But, speaking after the manner of men and of newspapers, the impression that I have about this business and the information on which I feel called upon to act is that the Cutting case or the Sedgwick case or the Sedgwick-Cutting case or the Cutting-Sedgwick case, whichever way it may be put, was the occasion of the decease officially of the minister to Mexico and of the consul at that place who came from the State of Missouri, and whether it has also resulted in the official decease of Consul Brigham I do not know; but what I do know is that he has disappeared entirely from the firmament of our foreign service since the time when a man named Sedgwick, probably a planet of greater degree, put in his appearance in the southern heavens.

So I was about to suggest, whether or not in place of adding to the salary of the consul at Paso del Norte we should not provide that our intercourse with Mexico should be put on wheels, so to speak.

Mr. GIBSON. I have offered the amendment, and shall detain the Senate but a moment in regard to it.

I believe that the true policy of our country is to cultivate amicable and friendly relations with Mexico, and if I had my way I would raise our legation to Mexico to a first-class one. I have no doubt that at a time not remote our relations must necessarily multiply with the neighboring republic, and the points that are important right along the line as railways are built and commercial facilities are multiplied will become more and more important. It is in this view that I propose to give to this gentleman who is the consul of the United States at Paso del Norte an increase in his salary from $1,500 a year, which does not amount to the ordinary pay of a clerk, to $2,000 a year.

I was very glad to hear the Senator from Kansas say that he had no information that the resignation of our minister to Mexico was in any way connected with the Cutting affair. I have no knowledge of the considerations which may have constrained any one of the representatives of our country at any time to resign his position; and in the absence of any information on that subject, I, for one, believe that proper delicacy requires us not to criticise either the minister who handed in his resignation to the Government, because he may have had domestic or private reasons for resigning his post, or the State Department which accepted the resignation. We have no knowledge whatever that he had any public reason or any dissatisfaction with the Government of Mexico or the people of Mexico, or any dissatisfaction with the administration of our own Government; and I submit that in the absence of this information it would be highly improper for us to assign to that minister any motive for his resignation growing out of his relations with the Government of Mexico or his own Government.

It is my good fortune to have known for a great many years our late minister to Mexico, General Jackson, of Savannah, Ga., one of the most accomplished men in this country, not only as a soldier and as a diplomat, but as a littérateur, one of the finest belles-lettres scholars and poets of the country, and in every way well-fitted to represent the country at any court in Christendom. I do not have any information, either from private or public sources, and I do not believe it can be obtained, that he was induced to hand in his resignation as minister to Mexico, either from any unpleasantness in his relations with the leading men or Government of Mexico, or with the administration of our own Government.

Mr. President, I rose simply to ask that this small increase in the salary of this consul should be made because the facts show that our trade has increased, the exportations from Mexico through this particular town increasing the business of the consulship there from $800,000 in twelve months after the completion of the railroads to over $7,000,000 a year.

Mr. ALLISON. I made the point of order on this amendment. I do not know that the point of order will lie against it. This increase is estimated for by the Department of State. Up to 1885 we had no consul at Paso del Norte. Prior to that time we had a commercial agent there receiving a compensation of $1,000. In the consular and diplomatic bill of 1885, owing to the growing importance of that region, we increased the compensation of the officer to $1,500 per annum. The committee in making that report retained that salary. Now, I appeal to the Senator from Louisiana to withdraw this amendment and not press it, because if this amendment is adopted it will inevitably lead to the raising of the salaries of all the consuls estimated for by the Secretary of State, because the same rule that applies to this consul at Paso del Norte applies substantially to nearly every consul for whom the Secretary of State has recommended an increased compensation. It is too late in the year and too late in this session for us to enter into a contest with the House of Representatives for the increase of the salaries of nearly all our consular officers.

The Committee on Appropriations have been careful not raise a controversy with the House of Representatives. We have appropriated according to the conditions of existing law with reference to all these consuls, and there is no reason that applies to this consul at Paso del Norte that will not apply to more than twenty-five other consuls whose compensation the Secretary of State recommends especially shall be increased. If we begin with this consul we must go on with the other consuls who are represented in one way or another by Senators on this floor; and I appeal to them to allow this man, who is from the State of Louisiana, who went to this place for the purpose of recovering his health, to struggle on there for another year at the present salary, and then if we can we shall endeavor to increase the compensation in some regular way at the next session of Congress.

The difficulty with reference to these compensations lies in the fact that we have not revised our consular system since 1873, and in the Revised Statutes there are a large number of consuls provided for at fixed salaries. We have probably added to that number of consuls forty or fifty since that time, with reference to whom there is no statutory provision, but they have grown up on the appropriation bills, the President having the power to appoint consuls without reference to statutory authority, and these consuls are appointed by the President from time to time, and their compensation is fixed in appropriation bills only. Much of the controversy in the past with the House of Representatives has grown up from the fact that there are no fixed salaries by law.

This consulate has been appropriated for for two years at $1,500. Prior to that time the compensation was $1,000. I submit to the Senate that we ought not to commence this increase of salaries now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "Matamoras," at the end of line 292, it is proposed to add:

And Paso del Norte.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Iowa to interpose a point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. If, in the view of the Chair, a point of order will lie against it, I make the point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will hear the Senator from Iowa on the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that the point of order will lie against it. There is no law authorizing any salary for this consul. It is fixed in the appropriation bills, but there is no statute respecting it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Iowa does not present any point of order, the Chair can not rule upon it.

Mr. MAXEY. I do not know anything about the present consul, but I do know about the business at that place. Some years ago the custom-house business of El Paso, in Texas, was but a trifle compared with what it is now. It now amounts to millions of dollars, and that results from the fact that the Southern Pacific Railroad has been completed to that point, and the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad, and another road—the name of which I have forgotten—leading from El Paso to the City of Mexico. These various roads have very largely increased the business of our own custom-house at El Paso, up to millions of dollars.

Across the river, the two places now being connected by a bridge, a street railway going across from one town to the other, corresponding to the business at El Paso, that of Paso del Norte has increased with that of El Paso. My judgment is that no man in the world can do the business of a consul there that ought to be done in a satisfactory way for $1,500. It is an important office and it is made so by this vast increase of business which has raised in the last few years El Paso, Tex., to be the second important custom-house in the State of Texas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CALL. I offer an amendment to come in after line 371, which I send to the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed, after line 371, page 16, to insert:

Salaries and expenses, inspectors of consulates: Two inspectors of consulates, to be appointed by the President, at $4,000 each, $8,000; and for the actual and necessary traveling expenses of such inspectors, to be expended under the authority and direction of the Secretary of State, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; in all, $18,000; and such inspectors shall be employed, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to visit and inspect the consulates-general, consulates, and commercial agencies of the United States in foreign countries, to the end of securing the honest and efficient administration of the business thereof: Provided, however, That if the inspection of distant consular offices in a country where there is a consul-general of the United States be deemed proper, the Secretary of State, in his discretion, may direct the consul-general in such country to perform such inspection without additional compensation, and the traveling expenses actually and necessarily incurred in such special service shall be chargeable to the allowance herein made for the like expenses of the aforesaid inspectors.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is new legislation.

Mr. CALL. What is the point of order, Mr. President?

Mr. ALLISON. It is new legislation.

Mr. CALL. Well, I will strike out the proviso entirely.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read as modified.

The CHIEF CLERK. After line 371, on page 10, it is proposed to insert:

Salaries and expenses, inspectors of consulates: For two inspectors of consulates, to be appointed by the President, at $4,000 each, $8,000; and for the actual and necessary traveling expenses of such inspectors, to be expended under the authority and direction of the Secretary of State, $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary; in all, $18,000.

Mr. CALL. Much has been said here to-day in regard to the desire on the part of the other side of the Senate, the Republican side, to place the diplomatic and consular service on a basis that will enable it to render efficient service to the commerce of the country. The Secretary of State, who has devoted his very eminent talents and his great industry to an examination of the necessities of the consular service, has made a report, in which he has stated circumstantially the reasons why this appropriation is necessary for the proper conduct of the consular service abroad. No one has contested it; no one can deny the clearness and force and usefulness of his representations in this respect. It is admitted that the consular service of this country needs examination, that the conduct of the consular agents needs inspection, and the appointment of these inspectors with an adequate compensation is the remedy suggested by the Secretary of State. No reason has been given for disregarding it. The fact of their usefulness, the necessity of their appointment, the necessity of the work they are to do, is admitted and can not be denied. I therefore move that this amendment be made to the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I think it just as well to see if we can not get upon a much more rational and fair basis. I have no doubt under some circumstances such a provision as the Senator from Florida has moved would be judicious, but it is not worth while to adopt it with the existing establishment. We want to recast this entire service; we want to come to thoroughly realize that we have first-class men to represent us abroad and who will go there for something which is useful and practical. We send to the court of St. James, the principal foreign court at which we have a representative, men who do not represent the American people in any practical way, men who are toadies to the British aristocracy, men who discredit the American garb, aping British manners and customs, wearing short clothes and things of that kind, and who are far more desirous of being known and having a reputation among the English people than among American people at home.

When I speak of the present service abroad I am entirely willing to say that it was subject to some criticism in the same regard under preceding administrations and that the gentleman who preceded the present minister to Great Britain was, as I believe, a great deal more proud to regard himself as a cosmopolitan than as a citizen of the United States, and much more considerate of the good-will and approval of the English people than of those whom he assumed to represent.

I think until we can get some American spirit, some American enterprise into this consular and diplomatic service, it is just as well to leave it in its present rut. It is, if not a disgrace, at all events no credit to the American people. It needs recasting, rebuilding from turret to foundation stone. You can not patch a structure of that kind, for every patch you put on it only illustrates the natural inherent deformity of the entire structure.

Mr. CALL. I do not see that there is anything in the suggestions of the honorable Senator from Kansas that evidences the fact that these officers ought not to be appointed or that the grounds and facts on which the Secretary of State has recommended the appropriation and their appointment are in any way controverted. I do not see how the Senator from Kansas can remedy the faults of which he complains, of injudicious appointments, of incapacity in the Executive chosen by the people of the United States, in any other way than that we should make the honorable Senator himself President of the United States. Some of these days, perhaps, he will be so, and he may then select the executive officers who will correspond with his ideas of what is right. But under our form of Government it so happens that, whatever we may think of it, the people will sometimes elect a man of their own selection, of their own ideas as to what is best for the country, and this Executive will make the appointments, sometimes good and sometimes bad; but I venture to say that the Senator from Kansas can not refuse to make proper provision for the public service upon the assumption that the executive appointments are of an improper character.

In regard to the distinguished gentleman who represents this country in England I do not know whether he wears short clothes or long clothes. I do not think it is very important. If he is a man of intellect, if he is a loyal citizen and subject of this Republic, if he is capable of performing his duties, it is not very material in what kind of clothes he may dress. He has made a great reputation for accomplishment, for distinguished learning, for a zealous discharge of the duties of his high office. He is not a Republican, and that is the fault in the judgment of the Senator from Kansas which negatives all virtues.

However, the fact remains that we have an extended consular service that ought either to be appropriated for properly or abandoned. It ought to be made efficient, or the money which is thrown away on it should be kept in the Treasury. I believe that the interests of this free Government, the interests of its people require that there should be an efficient foreign consular service, and that the representatives of our business interests should be supported and paid as liberally as those of other people, and our public interests as well protected.

I believe that the commerce of this country should be extended, that it should be relieved of all unnecessary burdens, and that American talent and capacity, however poor their possessors may be, should be enabled to hold these offices and be compensated out of the public Treasury to a reasonable extent. I believe that the Secretary of State is right when he recommends a liberal public service and when he recommends that the fees should be reduced and commerce relieved of their unnecessary burden instead of paying them into the Treasury of the United States. I regard the administration of the Secretary of State as an able one so far as the diplomatic and consular relations of this country are concerned, and for that reason, I repeat again, there is not and has not been and can not be any objection to the measure which I have asked shall be added in the form of an amendment to this bill. It is only a proper respect to the Secretary of State, whose ability and zeal in the public service is equal to that of any of his predecessors, that his recommendation should be carried into effect.

Mr. MORRILL. I did not quite catch the remarks of the Senator from Kansas in relation to our present representative in Great Britain, but I understood them to be depreciatory of his ability as a man for such service. I desire to say that he is a very able lawyer and one of the most eloquent speakers I have ever heard in any assembly, that he is a learned man, and his recent correspondence in relation to our affairs on the fishery question shows that he is a man of marked ability and perhaps as able a man for the conduct of our present negotiations there as we could have.

Mr. PLUMB. I have not said anything impeaching the ability of the present minister to England. I am informed and believe that he neglects habitually and systematically his duties as minister over there so far at least as they relate to the comfort, the convenience, and the interests of American citizens. I am informed and believe that he is practically a toady to the British aristocracy. However much we may disguise that by saying that when one is in Rome he ought to do as Romans do, there is something due to the importance and dignity of American citizenship abroad. Mr. Lowell and Mr. Phelps are both lacking in appreciation of that, in my judgment, and neither one of them ought to have been a representative of the United States abroad. While I do not say it was a disgrace that they so misrepresented the country, at the same time I think it was a great misfortune and one that would be measurably repaired by the removal of the present minister to England.

Mr. MORRILL. I was only speaking of the public character of the gentleman. As to his private conduct and behavior he can take care of that himself; but I desire to say that the compensation for the office of minister to Great Britain is not quite as large as the pay of a minister to our own capital here, and it is impossible, when we consider the great number of travelers who go abroad from this country, that they should be invited by our minister at London to dine and to take a ride and to go to the opera, for it would absorb much more than his salary. Until we can pay our foreign ministers a larger sum they hardly have much more than enough to pay their rental.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The question being put, a division was called for, and the "ayes" were 9.

Mr. CALL. I withdraw it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The call for a division is withdrawn. The amendment is not agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

ALPHEUS R. FRENCH.

Mr. SAWYER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Alpheus R. French, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the word "thirty" insert "forty;" and that the House agree to the same.

The report was concurred in.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 25th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2935) granting a pension to Robert Baxter;
An act (S. 2393) granting a pension to Anna M. Marshall;
An act (S. 1570) granting a pension to Mary Ann Vars;
An act (S. 773) granting a pension to M. Louise Butler;
An act (S. 1673) granting a pension to Charles G. Paris;
An act (S. 1825) granting a pension to Elizabeth Forgey;
An act (S. 2708) for the relief of Maria L. Strong;
An act (S. 2216) for the relief of Mrs. Elizabeth Rice; and An act (S. 722) for increase of pension to Mrs. Ellen M. Boggs.

ANNA WRIGHT—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 2210, entitled "An act granting a pension to Anna Wright."

The beneficiary named in this bill was granted a pension on the 17th day of November, 1886, dating from May 25, 1863, and is now under the general law receiving precisely the pension which she would receive under the bill herewith returned, if the same should be approved.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 26, 1887.

MRS. SARAH HAMILTON—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I herewith return without approval Senate bill No. 2045, entitled "An act granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Hamilton."

Thomas Hamilton, the husband of the beneficiary named in this bill, enlisted September 2, 1862. Upon the records he is reported present to April 30, 1863; deserted May 27, 1863. His name is dropped from subsequent rolls to February 29, 1864, when he is reported as a deserter in arrest. He is not borne upon the rolls for March and April, 1864; for May and June, 1864, he is reported absent in arrest; for July and August, present under arrest, and for September and October present for duty. He was mustered out with his company May 24, 1865.

He applied for a pension in 1872, alleging that he received an injury to his left leg about February 15, 1863, at Saint Louis, by falling from a ladder causing varicose veins and stiffening of the leg.

He was granted a pension January 29, 1881, to commence May 25, 1865.

He subsequently applied for an increase of pension, claiming that his eyes had become affected as a result of his varicose veins. This application was rejected upon the ground that the disability for which he was pensioned had not increased and that the disease of his eyes was not a result of such disability.

The pensioner died April 22, 1883, twenty years after his alleged injury, of cerebral apoplexy; and a physician states it as his judgment that the varicosed condition of the veinous system was primarily the cause of his disability and death.

His widow filed an application for pension October 31, 1882, which was rejected upon the ground that the soldier's death was not the result of his military service.

Notwithstanding the record of the deceased soldier, stained as it is with the charge of desertion and the entire absence of any record proof of sickness and injury, I should consider myself in favor of his widow, bound by the act of the Pension Bureau in allowing him a pension, and should cheerfully aid her attempt to procure a pension for herself in her needy condition if I was not thoroughly convinced that her husband's death had no relation to his military service, or any injury for which he was pensioned.

To the ordinary mind it seems impossible that apoplexy could result from such a varicosed condition as is described in this case. I do not understand that the physician who gives a contrary opinion bases his judgment upon actual observation at the time the soldier died. The last medical examination by the Pension Bureau before the soldier's death was in October, 1882, and resulted in the following report of the examing surgeon:

"Weight, 180 pounds; age, sixty-nine years; has varicose veins of left leg, but not to such an extent as to increase the size of the leg or result in marked disability; he is entirely blind in both eyes from glaucoma, which does not in any degree, in my opinion, depend upon the pensioned disability—varicose veins."

It appears that the benefit proposed by this bill can neither be properly regarded as a gratuity based upon the honorable service and record of the soldier, nor predicated on his death resulting from a disability incurred in such service.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Printing, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SAWYER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations with the accompanying papers.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SHERMAN, from the Committee on Finance, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. 9110) to amend sections 5191 and 5192 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. VAN WYCK, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1541) to amend an act passed July 5, 1884, "to provide for the disposal of abandoned and useless military reservations," so that the same shall be held for homestead entries only, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Education and Labor, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5541) to prevent the employment of convict labor and alien labor upon public buildings and other public works, and convict labor in the preparation or manufacture of materials for public buildings or other public works, and to regulate the manner of letting contracts therefor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER. I am instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2244) for the relief of J. M. English, administrator of the estate of Richard Fitzpatrick, deceased, to report it without amendment. I desire to state that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] dissents from the report of the majority of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILLIS, Mr. BLANCHARD, and Mr. T. J. HENDERSON, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ALIEN LAND HOLDINGS.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President——

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Senator from Virginia to yield to me until I present a conference report.

Mr. MAHONE. Let me first get up a bill. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 10912, being the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now ask the Senator from Virginia to yield to me informally until I present a conference report.

Mr. MAHONE. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received.

Mr. PLUMB. I submit the report of the conference committee on House bill 3280.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3280) to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, and so forth, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the same with amendments, as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 1, and insert, as follows:

"That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons not citizens of the United States, or who have not lawfully declared their intention to become such citizens, or for any corporation not created by or under the laws of the United States or of some State or Territory of the United States, to hereafter acquire, hold, or own real estate so hereafter acquired, or any interest therein, in any of the Territories of the United States or in the District of Columbia, except such as may be acquired by inheritance or in good faith in the ordinary course of justice in the collection of debts heretofore created: Provided, That the prohibition of this section shall not apply to cases in which the right to hold or dispose of lands in the United States is secured by existing treaties to the citizens or subjects of foreign countries, which rights, so far as they may exist by force of any such treaty, shall continue to exist so long as such treaties are in force, and no longer."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 2, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 2. That no corporation or association more than 20 per cent. of the stock of which is or may be owned by any person or persons, corporation or corporations, association or associations, not citizens of the United States, shall hereafter acquire or hold or own any real estate hereafter acquired in any of the Territories of the United States or of the District of Columbia."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 3, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 3. That no corporation other than those organized for the construction or operation of railways, canals, or turnpikes shall acquire, hold, or own more than 5,000 acres of land in any of the Territories of the United States; and no railroad, canal, or turnpike corporation shall hereafter acquire, hold, or own lands in any Territory, other than as may be necessary for the proper operation of its railroad, canal, or turnpike, except such lands as may have been granted to it by act of Congress; but the prohibition of this section shall not affect the title to any lands now lawfully held by any such corporation."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of section 4, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all property acquired, held, or owned in violation of the provisions of this act shall be forfeited to the United States, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to enforce every such forfeiture by bill in equity or other proper process. And in any suit or proceeding that may be commenced to enforce the provisions of this act, it shall be the duty of the court to determine the very right of the matter, without regard to matters of form, joinder of parties, multifariousness, or other matters not affecting the substantial rights either of the United States or of the parties concerned in any such proceeding arising out of the matters in this act mentioned."

And the Senate agree to the same.

P. B. PLUMB,
H. M. TELLER,
E. C. WALTHALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

T. R. COBB,
H. S. VAN EATON,
L. E. PAYSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. PLATT. I wish the Secretary would read the last amendment again. I was unable to hear it.

Mr. TELLER. The manuscript amendment?

Mr. PLATT. The last paragraph of the report.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Strike out all of section 4, and insert as follows:

"SEC. 4. That all property acquired, held, or owned in violation of the provisions of this act shall be forfeited to the United States, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to enforce every such forfeiture by bill in equity or other proper process. And in any suit or proceedings that may be commenced to enforce the provisions of this act, it shall be the duty of the court to determine the very right of the matter without regard to matters of form, joinder of parties, multifariousness, or other matters not affecting the substantial rights either of the United States or of the parties concerned in any such proceeding arising out of the matters in this act mentioned."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. PLATT. I wish that the chairman of the conference committee on the part of the Senate would explain what changes have been made in the Senate bill by the conference committee. It is very difficult to follow it as the Secretary read it.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill as it is agreed upon is embodied in the report in full.

Mr. PLATT. So that the report presents an entirely new bill?

Mr. PLUMB. No; there were many verbal amendments in the old bill, and for the purpose of bringing them all together with perfect harmony the bill was incorporated in the report. The changes were all of them of a character simply affecting the details of the bill, and not the substance. It remains exactly as it was when it passed the Senate except in regard to these details, which were presented in this shape for the purpose of producing more finished results.

In regard to this matter I want simply to say that this bill was introduced in the Senate on the 5th of May, 1884. It is not by any means a perfect measure, and it is not of as wide scope as I should be glad to have it; but it is a beginning in the right direction. It is an affirmation of the principle that the burdens of American citizenship shall go along with its benefits, and that whoever desires the protection of the American flag, of American institutions, and American law in regard to his property, shall assume the burdens of American citizenship as well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the report of the committee of conference.

The report was concurred in.

ILLINOIS JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the Senator from Virginia to yield to me to dispose of a bill about which there will be no discussion. It is a bill in relation to a United States court in the State of Illinois. The bill was passed with two words in it that ought not to be there, and it has been brought back to the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the bill was passed may be reconsidered, so that I may propose an amendment to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate, if there is no objection, a message from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Clerk of the House be directed in enrolling the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria, to strike out of the sixth section of the said bill the words "district attorney" where they occur in said section and insert the word "clerk;" so that said section will read as follows:

"SEC. 6. That the marshal and clerk for said northern district of Illinois shall respectively appoint at least one deputy residing in the said southern division unless he shall reside there himself, and also maintain an office at that place of holding court."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks that the vote by which this bill was passed may be reconsidered, and also that the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading may be reconsidered. If there be no objection that order will be made and the bill will be open to amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I now offer the amendment which has been read by the Secretary.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1 of section 6 strike out "district attorney" and insert the word "clerk;" so as to read:

That the marshal and clerk for said northern district of Illinois shall respectively appoint at least one deputy residing in the said southern division unless he shall reside there himself, and also maintain an office at that place of holding court.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO THE MOTHER OF WASHINGTON.

Mr. HOAR. I request the Senator from Virginia to yield to me while I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the pending measure and proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2037, Senate bill 3182. I desire that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to lay aside the pending order for the consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 3182) for the completion of the monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburg, Va.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to appropriate $20,000 to be used in the completion of the unfinished monument to Mary, the mother of Washington, at Fredericksburg, Va., and for grading and inclosing with stone curbing and iron fencing a space of 34 feet square around the base thereof, substantially in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Committee on the Washington National Monument in their report to the House of Representatives of June 1, 1874.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TELEGRAPHIC OCEAN CABLES.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be requested to transmit to the Senate, if not inconsistent with the public interest, copies of the conditions on which the Anglo-American Cable Company, The Direct United States Cable Company, and La Compagnie Francaise Telegraphe de Paris at New York were allowed to land their cables on American shores.

And further, that the honorable Secretary transmit copies of all contracts that have been made by and between said cable companies, or by and between any or all of said cable companies, and any other cable or telegraph company or companies.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, presented the credentials of WILLIAM M. STEWART, chosen by the Legislature of Nevada a Senator from that State for the term beginning March 4, 1887; which were read, and ordered to be filed.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MAHONE. I hope the Senator from South Carolina will not insist on that motion until we finish the agricultural bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. Then let us go on with and dispose of the agricultural bill.

Mr. MAHONE. The bill has been taken up.

Mr. BUTLER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. MAHONE. It will not take thirty minutes to finish the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from South Carolina is withdrawn, and the bill (H. R. 10912) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no objection, the usual order will be observed and the bill will be read for amendment, and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations will be acted on as they are reached in the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill. The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was in the appropriation for "Department of Agriculture, botanical division," line 36, to increase the item "for compensation for one botanist" from $2,000 to $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 41, after the word "all," to insert "for botanical division;" and in line 42, after the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and forty" and insert "six hundred and ninety;" so as to make the clause read:

In all, for botanical division, $8,690.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 44, to strike out "Pomolgoical" and insert "Pomological;" so as to read:

Pomological division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Chemical division," in line 54, after the word "dollars," to insert "one clerk, $1,000;" and in line 55, after the word "all," to strike out "eleven" and insert "twelve;" so as to make the clause read:

One chief chemist, $2,500; one assistant chemist, $1,600; one assistant chemist, $1,400; employment of additional assistants in the chemical division, when necessary, $6,000; one clerk, $1,000; in all, $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Division of economic ornithology and mammalogy," in line 64, to reduce the appropriation for the compensation of one ornithologist from $2,500 to $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 69, to reduce the total appropriation for the "division of economic ornithology and mammalogy" from $8,060 to $7,810.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 85, to reduce the total appropriation for the seed division from $8,290 to $8,240.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Miscellaneous," in line 102, after the word "South," to strike out "(section of vegetable pathology), two," and insert "five;" and in line 103, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the Commissioner of Agriculture may use for the purpose of a station for said investigations such abandoned military reservation as the Secretary of the Interior may temporarily assign to him for this purpose.

So as to make the clause read:

Botanical division: For purchasing and collecting specimens of plants and materials for the herbarium, and for labor in preparing them; for traveling and other necessary expenses in the investigations of plants and grasses in the arid districts of the West and South, $5,000; and the Commissioner of Agriculture may use for the purpose of a station for said investigations such abandoned military reservation as the Secretary of the Interior may temporarily assign to him for this purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 108, at the beginning of the clause "For investigating the nature of the diseases of fruits and fruit-trees," &c., to insert "Section of vegetable pathology;" so as to make the clause read:

Section of vegetable pathology: For investigating the nature of the diseases of fruits and fruit-trees, grains and other useful plants, due to parasitic fungi; for chemicals and apparatus required in the field and laboratory; for experiments with remedies; for necessary traveling expenses; for the preparation of drawings and illustrations, and for other expenses connected with the practical work of the investigation, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 127, after the word "experiments," to insert "including the continuation of experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and sugar-cane, and also;" and in line 130, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "eighty-one;" so as to make the clause read:

Chemical division: For chemicals and apparatus for the use of the chemist, and for necessary changes in and additions to fixtures to the laboratory, and necessary expenses in conducting experiments, including the continuation of experiments in the manufacture of sugar from sorghum and sugar-cane, and also including the purchase and transportation of samples and supplies, $81,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 137, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifteen" and insert "twenty;" so as to make the clause read:

Entomological division: For investigating the history and habits of insects injurious and beneficial to agriculture, arboriculture, and horticulture; experiments in ascertaining the best means of destroying them; for publishing reports thereon; and for illustrations, chemicals, traveling and other expenses within the United States, in the practical work of the entomological division, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 137, to insert:

For the promotion of bee-culture, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out, at the beginning of line 139, the word "sericulture;" in the same line, before the word "disseminating," to insert "collecting and;" in line 141, after the word "eggs," to strike out "and purchasing cocoons;" in line 143, after the word "cocoon," to insert "and for expenses incurred in collecting, purchasing, preparing for transportation, and transporting the cocoons necessary therefor, and for necessary traveling expenses;" so as to read:

For collecting and disseminating information relating to silk-culture; for purchasing and distributing silk-worm eggs, and for conducting at some point in the District of Columbia experiments with automatic machinery for reeling silk from the cocoon, and for expenses incurred in collecting, purchasing, preparing for transportation, and transporting the cocoons necessary therefor, and for necessary traveling expenses, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 153, to insert:

For the encouragement and development of the culture of raising raw silk, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Women's Silk-Culture Association of the United States, located at Philadelphia, and to be paid directly to said association; and said association shall make a full and detailed report of the expenditures and results obtained under this appropriation, and also under the appropriation to said association made for the fiscal year 1887, to the Commissioner of Agriculture, who shall transmit the same to Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for the "seed division," after the word "dollars," in line 203, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That in the expenditure of the money herein appropriated no discrimination shall be made in the compensation paid to persons employed in the seed-room for the same class of work.

So as to make the clause read:

Seed division: For the purchase, propagation, and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expenses of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 245, after the words "expenses of," to strike out "representation at" and insert "a representative, to be selected by the President, to attend;" so as to read:

For expenses of a representative, to be selected by the President, to attend the first general session of the International Statistical Institute, and investigation of European statistical methods, $1,500, to be immediately available.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish that not to be agreed to. Some information has come to the committee since the time of the meeting which leads them to the conclusion that the paragraph as it came from the House of Representatives would be better and more satisfactory. I therefore hope the amendmeut will not be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 263, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty;" so as to read:

Salaries and expenses bureau of animal industry: For carrying out the provisions of the act of May 29, 1884, establishing the bureau of animal industry, $150,000.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask that action on that amendment be withheld until the remainder of the paragraph is passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment will be passed over. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations will be read.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, after the word "dollars," in line 264, to insert:

And the Commissioner of Agriculture is hereby authorized to use any part of this sum he may deem necessary or expedient, and in such manner as he may think best; to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia, and for this purpose to employ as many persons as he may deem necessary, and to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals whenever in his judgment it is essential to prevent the spread of pleuro-pneumonia from one State into another.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to amend the amendment proposed by the committee, in line 263, by increasing the item for salaries and expenses of the bureau of animal industry from $150,000 to $500,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to add to the bill the following section:

SEC. 3. That all machinery purchased under the provisions of this act shall be built in the United States, wholly of domestic material.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike out all from line 197, on page 9, down to and including line 231, on page 10.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the Senator makes that motion will he not yield to me to perfect the amendment of the committee, on page 12?

Mr. BUTLER. Certainly.

Mr. PLUMB. I suppose I had better move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was adopted, inserting the clause from line 264 to 272.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be considered as agreed to, if there is no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting, in line 270, after the word "animals," the words "and the quarantine of the same;" so as to read:

And to expend any part of this sum in the purchase and destruction of diseased or exposed animals, and the quarantine of the same, whenever, in his judgment, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I move to strike out that provision in the bill which authorizes the purchase of seeds. If there is an appropriation made by Congress that is useless and absurd and fruitless, I think it is the appropriation for the purchase and distribution of seeds. I trust the Senate will strike it out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Carolina will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out from line 197, on page 9, to line 231, on page 10, inclusive, as follows:

Seed division: For the purchase, propagation, and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expenses of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $100,000.

An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents; and the person receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of the results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture: And provided also, That the Commissioner shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase. But nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Commissioner of Agriculture from sending flower, garden, and other seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of improved and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: But provided, however, That the Commissioner shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seeds of equal value, as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents.

Mr. MAHONE. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina. This has been a long-standing provision in our agricultural appropriation bills, and from my knowledge of and intercourse with the people I do not know of any provision that yields more satisfaction to the public generally. I think it has contributed very largely to the improvement of all manner of seeds and vegetables, and I therefore hope the Senate will not agree to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. BUTLER].

The amendment was rejected; the ayes being 9, less than a majority of a quorum, and no further count being demanded.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MAHONE. It may be well to state before we vote on the bill, for the information of the Senate, that the amount of the estimates for 1888 for the Agricultural Department is $606,680. The amount of the bill as sent to us by the House was $563,730. The increase made by the Senate Committee on Appropriations is $144,000, making the amount of the bill as reported $707,730. The amount of last year's appropriation was $654,715. The bill as reported exceeds the estimates $101,050. It exceeds the estimates for 1887 only $63,015. The changes will be found in a statement which I will not trouble the Senate to read, but will send to the Reporter to go into the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement as referred to is as follows:

Agricultural Department—1888.

|---|---|
| Amount of estimates for 1888 | $606,680 00 |

| Net increase | 144,000 00 |

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN TEXAS AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. COKE. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill (H. R. 4841) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes, this being the bill sought several times to be called up by my colleague [Mr. MAXEY], who is very much interested in it. It has been already partially considered. It certainly will take very little time. It can not produce much debate, and it would be extremely gratifying to my colleague, who will leave this body in a few days, if it can be at least considered and voted upon. I hope that no objection will be interposed to its consideration.

Mr. VEST. I must object. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] proposes to speak upon the bill, as do other Senators.

Mr. CULLOM. I was just going to state that the Senator from Vermont is absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made to the request of the Senator from Texas.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following report; which was read:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 10394) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with the various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 5, 9, 10, and 17.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 4, 6, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 19, and 20, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed in said amendment insert "$7,500;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 16, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the word "twenty" insert "thirty-five" and add at the end of amended paragraph the following: "of which sum $15,000 may be used to carry out the provisions of section 3 of the act approved February 8, 1887, entitled 'An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, and to extend the protection of the laws of the United States and the Territories over the Indians, and for other purposes;'" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 18, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following: "For the purchase by the United States of additional land for farming purposes for the Carlisle Industrial School, being the 'Parker Farm,' so called, containing about 109 acres, $18,000, to be immediately available," and the Senate agree to the same.

H. L. DAWES,
P. B. PLUMB,
WILKINSON CALL,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
S. W. PEEL,
T. G. SKINNER,
B. W. PERKINS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 3342) granting the right of way to the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad through the Fort Crawford military reservation. The railroad is there now desiring to pass through, and the War Department consent to the passage of the bill. It will only take a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. BUTLER. Pending the further consideration of that matter, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator to withdraw that motion and let the bill pass. It will only take a moment. There is no objection to it.

Mr. BUTLER. If I can get the consent of the Senate to go into executive session as soon as it is disposed of, I will agree to let the Senator have his bill passed.

Mr. SABIN. And a bill I have in charge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The doors will be closed and the galleries cleared.

Mr. TELLER. Is it in order for me to ask to suspend that by general consent until the bill can be passed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Nothing can be done while the order of the Senate is being executed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twenty-five minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

DENVER AND RIO GRANDE RAILROAD.

Mr. TELLER. I ask that the bill (S. 3342) granting the right of way to the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad through the Fort Crawford military reservation may be taken up for consideration.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STILLWATER AND COOKE CITY RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. SABIN. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 3225) to authorize the Stillwater and Cooke City Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Crow Indian Reserve, and for other purposes.

There being no objection the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempre. The bill will be read at length.

Mr. MAHONE. The bill was read yesterday.

Mr. MILLER. The bill was up yesterday morning and went over at 2 o'clock. I ask that the reading be dispensed with as it was read yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read, the amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs will be stated.

The first amendment was, in section 3, line 8, after the word "the," to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

Appraisement of three disinterested referees, to be appointed as follows: One (who shall be chairman) by the President, one by the chief of the tribe to which such occupant belongs, and one by said railway company. Before entering upon their duties as such referees they shall take and subscribe, before some judge or clerk of a district court of the United States, or United States commissioner, an oath that they will faithfully and impartially discharge the duties of their appointment, which oath, duly certified by such officer, shall be returned with their award and filed with the Secretary of the Interior within sixty days from the completion of the same. In case of the absence of one of said referees, after due notice of the time and place of meeting shall have been given him by the chairman, or by any two of said referees, the other two may proceed to act; and if either party shall fail to make appointment of such referee within thirty days after the appointment made by the President, the vacancy shall be filled by the President. The chairman of said board of referees shall appoint the time and place of meeting and of all hearings, which shall be within the nation to which the occupant of the land proposed to be taken shall belong. Each of said referees shall receive for his services the sum of $5 per day, and mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile, for each day they are actually engaged in the trial of any case submitted to them under this act, and for the number of miles actually traveled by them in attending the trial thereof, to be computed from the residence of the person authorized to accept service of legal process for the company. Witnesses shall be allowed the same fees and mileage allowed by courts of the Territory of Montana. Disbursements, including the fees of referees and witnesses, shall be made part of such award, shall be thereby fixed and determined, and shall be paid by said railway company. In case said referees can not agree, any two of them may make the award. Either party being dissatisfied with the award of such referees may, within ninety days after the filing of the same, appeal by notice and original petition to the nearest United States court, which court shall have jurisdiction and shall proceed to hear and determine the matter according to the laws of the State or Territory in which the same shall be heard relating to such subject. If upon hearing such appeal the judgment shall be directed for a larger sum than was awarded by the referees, the costs of such appeal shall be adjudged against said railway company; if judgment of the court shall be for a less amount than such award, then the costs shall be adjudged against such claimant. When proceedings have been commenced in court the railway company may pay double the amount of the award into court to abide the judgment thereof, and may then enter upon the property sought to be condemned and proceed with the construction of its road.

And in lieu thereof to insert the words "Secretary of the Interior;" so as to read:

That before said railway shall be constructed through any lands held by individual occupants according to the laws, customs, and usages of the Indian tribe through whose reserve it is to be constructed, full compensation shall be made to such occupants for all property to be taken or damage done by reason of the construction of such railway. In case of failure to make amicable settlement with any such occupant, such compensation shall be determined by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 2, after the word "said," to strike out the word "Territory" and insert the word "reservation;" so as to read:

SEC. 4. That said railway company shall not charge the inhabitants of said reservation a greater rate of freight than the rate authorized by the laws of the Territory of Montana for services or transportation of like kind.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That if the Crow tribe of Indians, their chiefs and headmen, shall, within four months after the filing of maps of definite location, as set forth in section 6 of this act, dissent from the allowance hereinbefore provided for, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior, then all compensation to be paid to such dissenting tribe under the provisions of this act shall be determined as provided in section 3, with the same rights of appeal as therein provided: Provided further, That the amount awarded or adjudged to be paid by said railway company for said dissenting tribe shall be in lieu of the compensation that said tribe would be entitled to receive under the foregoing provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to section 12 the following proviso:

Provided, That no railway shall be constructed within or through any Indian reservation or other lands mentioned in this act until the estimated actual cost of its construction and equipment for successful operation, in cash, shall have been first submitted to any interstate commerce commission created by Congress, or in case no such commission exists, then to the Secretary of the Interior, and by said commission or secretary approved as a fair and reasonable sum required therefor; and if any railway corporation entering upon said lands, and thereon constructing and equipping for operation a railway, shall pay or promise to pay for such construction or equipment a sum, either in cash or other property, at its cash value, or in its capital stock or bonds or other evidences of indebtedness, at their par value, an amount in excess of the cost so estimated and approved, or in excess of such further sum as may be approved by said commission or secretary as necessary to be expended in good faith for said construction and equipment for successful operation, then the right of said corporation, its successors and assigns, and all others claiming by, through, or under them, or either of them, under this act, shall cease and determine, without any further act or ceremony whatever, and all rights, privileges, and property of said corporations within said lands or reservations, from whatever source obtained, shall become forfeited to the United States; and the circuit or district court of the United States for the judicial district in which said lands, or any of them, may lie, shall have jurisdiction, on complaint of the United States, to award the possession of said lands so occupied, and the said rights, privileges, and property, to the United States, and to oust the said corporations, their successors and assigns, and all others claiming by, through, or under them, therefrom.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This completes the amendments reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. In section 5, line 27, before the word "provided," I move to insert:

And the surveys, construction, and operation of said railroad shall be conducted with due regard for the rights of the Indians and in accordance with such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may make to carry out this provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT ACCOUNTS.

Mr. SPOONER. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia to report the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds, amended by the House of Representatives, with the recommendation that the amendment of the House be not concurred in. I move that the Senate non-concur in the amendment made to the bill by the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask for a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made, if there be no objection.

By unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PALMER, Mr. CHENEY, and Mr. HARRIS were appointed.

FREEDMAN'S SAVINGS AND TRUST COMPANY.

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3114) to reimburse the depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company for losses incurred by the failure of said company.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the amendment proposed by the Committee on Finance be read as the original bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be observed, if there be no objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause, and to insert——

Mr. PLATT. I have not heard a word that the clerks have read in the last twenty minutes. I should like to hear what is going on in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has repeatedly appealed to the Senate to observe order. Business will be suspended until order is restored in the Chamber.

Mr. MORRILL. Allow me to say a single word before the bill is read. This bill has been recommended by three or four different Secretaries and other officers of the Treasury Department. I will not make any speech unless it shall be necessary in explanation of any part of it.

Mr. PLATT. I simply wanted to hear the bill read; that was all.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The substitute reported from the Committee on Finance will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That the commissioner of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company, and his successors in office, be, and the same are hereby, authorized and directed to pay, or cause to be paid, under such regulations as said commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, to all depositors of the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company whose accounts have been properly verified and balanced under existing laws, or to their legal representatives, a sum of money equal to the verified balances due said depositors from said company at the time of its failure, less the amount of dividends which have been or may be declared from the assets of said company; and for this purpose the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said amount to be placed in the Treasury, from time to time as may be necessary, to the credit of said commissioner, by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purposes in this act specified; but no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any assignee of any such depositors, and the benefit and relief provided by this act shall extend only to those depositors in whose favor such balances have been properly verified, and to their heirs and legal representatives. All claims not presented for payment under the provisions of this act within two years from and after its passage shall be forever barred; and nothing in this act shall be construed to entitle depositors to the amount of any dividend or dividends barred under existing laws.

SEC. 2. That the assets of the said company then remaining on hand, and all suits, judgments, and claims, and all books, papers, and other property, wherever situated, shall be realized by the said commissioner as soon as such realization can be effected without undue sacrifice of value, and the proceeds thereof placed in the Treasury of the United States.

SEC. 3. That upon the request of the commissioner the postmasters in the several cities and towns in which branches were established and operated by the said company may be designated by the Postmaster-General to act as agents of the commissioner in ascertaining and identifying the persons entitled to the benefits of this act; and such postmasters shall perform the services herein provided for under the general direction of the commissioner; and for such services the said postmasters shall be entitled to receive a reasonable compensation, to be fixed by the commissioner and approved by the Postmaster-General, and to be paid out of the fund appropriated by this act.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I do not propose, as far as I am concerned, that the bill shall go through without my protest against it. There is not the shadow of foundation for any claim against the Government by reason of the creation of this Freedman's Bank. It was one of those unfortunate ebullitions of sectional and party feeling attendant upon the peculiar era in which the act creating that institution was brought into existence. It was based upon the false idea that the people of the South, the former slave owners, would not and could not do anything else but rob these unfortunate people, their former slaves, of what little they might be able to accumulate as freedmen. It was a fallacy, not to say an absolute monstrosity, to suppose any such thing.

The bank was created without any liability placed upon the Government of the United States in the terms of its incorporation. It was put into the hands of a lot of political speculators and plunderers, who proceeded, under amendments to the charter, which they obtained from Congress, to pervert the original charter and to obtain the power to invest in real estate the pittances which these poor, unfortunate people, in their credulity and ignorance, were induced, all over the South, to put into the institution.

I happened at that time, from circumstances over which I had no control, to be a denizen of the State of Louisiana, and I witnessed in the city of Shreveport scenes connected with the branch of the Freedman's Bank in that city which were enough to have melted a heart of stone. I saw these poor, unfortunate creatures, who knew nothing about the ordinary business transactions of life, and who had obtained their little earnings in working from day to day, who considered it a privilege to put their money into this institution in order, as they were taught by the emissaries, the officers of this Freedman's Bank, to save them from the clutches of their old masters, who were engaged in a conspiracy, as they alleged, to rob them, crowd with their few dollars in procession to the doors of this institution, as if their lives depended upon obtaining access to its interior, and their money was put there by their religious and charitable institutions—the Daughters of Rebecca and Sons of Hezekiah, with all the negro nomenclature for their different associations of which they are peculiarly fond. All the savings of these institutions and of individuals were put into this bank to be swept away by a lot of plunderers and robbers, who had no other object in the world except to get this money in any way possible under the forms of law.

There was not and is not to-day one scintilla of liability upon the part of this Government, and I will never consent that the taxed money of my constituents shall be taken out of the Treasury, because in that era of partisan and sectional feeling, when the people of the two sections, irritated by recent strife, had not come to know each other as they do to-day, to pay back, without any liability upon their part, what was robbed from them under these circumstances.

There is a provision in the bill which says that this money shall be paid to no assignee except upon proof of a certain sort:

> And for this purpose the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said amount to be placed in the Treasury, from time to time as may be necessary, to the credit of said commissioner, by the Secretary of the Treasury, for the purposes in this act specified; but no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any assignee of any such depositors, and the benefit and relief provided by this act shall extend only to those depositors in whose favor such balances have been properly verified, and to their heirs and legal representatives. All claims not presented for payment under the provisions of this act within two years from and after its passage shall be forever barred; and nothing in this act shall be construed to entitle depositors to the amount of any dividend or dividends barred under existing laws.

Mr. PLATT. Why should we run the statute of limitations against these people?

Mr. VEST. Why should we pass this bill at all, is my inquiry, not as to a statute of limitations? Why should we create any liability upon the part of this Government at all?

But what I was about to address myself to particularly was the meaning of this word "assignee." I take it for granted, in the absence of any other legislation except what I have read, and that is all that is pertinent to the point I am making, this commissioner or the parties having control of the allowances of these claims will adopt their own practice and their own rules in regard to ascertaining who are the assignees. But I undertake to say to-day that not one-fiftieth part nor a hundredth part (and there may be even a smaller proportion than that) of the claims which are to be provided for in this bill will be in the hands of the original depositors, or their heirs or legal representatives when the bill is passed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the Senator from Missouri understand that the Comptroller of the Currency is ex-officio Commissioner? He speaks of the Commissioner as a person different from the Comptroller. They are one and the same person.

Mr. VEST. I understand that very well, but I was proceeding to say that these claims are not to-day in the hands of the original depositors.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator will allow me to say, as I have had occasion to examine this matter, that the claims have all been adjusted, and no one has been paid a dividend heretofore who was not an original depositor. It is true that assignments have been made, but this bill cuts off all claims under assignments. The money must be paid to the original depositors, the persons whose names were found on the books and who were identified by proof before the authorities that they were the persons who made the deposits. There is no difficulty about that. No one receives the benefit of the bill, or can possibly receive any money under it, except the original depositors. Assignments are not held to be valid at all.

Mr. VEST. I understand that, and I have read the terms of the bill making that provision. I am making my argument now upon the effect of this proposed legislation as I have read it.

It is very true that the bill says that this money shall not be paid to assignees, but I take it for granted it is to be paid to the original depositors or their heirs or legal representatives, because they are not assignees.

It has been stated in the public press, and I have been so informed by entirely credible citizens of this District, that there are speculators here urging this measure on the part of Congress who have obtained the bank-books of the poor negroes in the South, because when they deposited their money—$1, $5, and $10—they were furnished (and that was a great charm to the negroes) with a small book, which certified that the person was a depositor in the Freedman's Bank to the amount that he had deposited, and the poor credulous negroes were taught to believe that this made them stockholders of the Government, and was one of the highest privileges of their newly-acquired citizenship.

I take it when these bank-books are presented, a power of attorney made up at a distance will accompany the check-book, not to draw the money for an assignee, but to draw it for the original depositor, his heirs, or legal representatives.

Does not every lawyer, every man of common sense know what is the result of such legislation? There will be all sorts of fraud, there will be all sorts of indirection for the purpose of drawing this money out of the Treasury. Those of us who have been in public life but a very few years know that when you create a fund and leave it subject to such legislation as I have read there will always be found harpies and plunderers around this city who will contrive means to get every dollar out of the Treasury. Who ever heard of Congress appropriating a dollar that there was not found some claimant to bring the proof necessary to get it out of the Treasury of the people? There will be no assignee, nobody pretends that you will ever hear of an assignee, but there will be attorneys in fact for the original depositors and for their heirs and legal representatives, and every dollar of this money will go to the speculators.

The negroes who made the deposits are dead, scattered, gone to the four corners of the earth or to eternity. Who has been pressing this claim? Not the negroes. It has been these astute gentlemen in the city of Washington who live upon such claims, and who whenever they can find a shadow of sentiment to appeal to the hearts of the American Congress avail themselves of it in order to fill their own pockets. They come here in the name of wounded and crippled soldiers, who make no claim of themselves, but who are informed by these gentlemen, "write to your Senator and member of Congress that he must support a bill to give pensions to a certain class of soldiers." This claim has been worked up—that is the phrase—worked up, not in the interest of these poor negroes, but in the interest of a lot of attorneys and claim aents here, and in my judgment not a hundred dollars of the whole amount will go to the original depositors.

I have nothing to say to any man who thinks that I to-day would grind the African race out of one cent. If any man in this world has reason to be their friend, I am that man—raised with them, nursed by one of them, an humble owner of them as inherited property. I never bought or sold one for gain in my life. They are a docile, gentle, inoffensive race, and the Southern man who would wrong them deserves to be blotted from the roll of manhood. When our wives and children were in their hands during the war, they acted so as to make every man in the South their friend who had one particle of manhood about him.

If these poor negroes were here asking for this money, I would consider their claim, and might support it; but I do not believe one dollar of it will go to them. I believe the whole thing is made up in the way I have indicated, and I will not vote the money of my people for any such purpose.

Mr. MORRILL. The Senator from Missouri is entirely mistaken if he supposes that there has been any lobbying, any claim agents who have appeared since this bill has been under consideration by the Senate Committee on Finance. No man has spoken to me on the subject whatever.

There is some responsibility on the part of the United States for allowing this matter to proceed to the extent that it did proceed, and if the Senator from Missouri has that kindness for the colored race which he professes, I do not see how he can afford to vote against the bill.

In the first place, the bank was chartered by the United States. It was circulated throughout the South that this was for the freedmen, and they were invited all over the South to make their deposits in this bank.

It was entirely safe so long as it was provided that the investments should be made in United States bonds, but in an unhappy hour Congress changed that provision so as to allow the parties to take security on real estate, and in four years after that time there were not $400 invested in United States bonds.

The bill has been carefully prepared, the Committee on Finance giving it a great deal of attention. It has been subjected to the revision of the Comptroller of the Currency, and is a bill recommended by the President of the United States.

I wish to say further, that we are under some obligations of duty to make a refund of this money, whatever the amount may be, but I do not suppose it is going to amount to anything like the sum of a million dollars, for we have taken the property of the Freedman's Bank at $250,000 that to-day would sell for twice that amount of money. On the corner where it is the property would be worth not less and probably more than half a million dollars to-day. Besides that we have some securities of the bank now uncollected that will be turned over to the United States.

Mr. VEST. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to say just a word? I know he would not think of creating any false impression about the purchase of this property. He himself had a good deal to do with that purchase; we were on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds. To the Senator from Vermont is due the credit of having made that investment on the part of the Government; but he knows and I know that we took that property at the price fixed by the Freedman's Bank or by the commissioner.

Mr. MORRILL. By the commissioner.

Mr. VEST. Senator Bruce, of Mississippi, then a member of this body, reported the bill, and the price was fixed at $250,000. I recollect distinctly there was opposition to taking it at that price, but the Senator from Vermont and myself strenuously advocated the purchase. The rise in the property of course has been since that time. We considered it a great favor to the depositors of that bank to pay them $250,000, and it was considered a large price at the time. If there has been an increase in the value of the property it has been the result of events which we then did not foresee. We considered it a fair price for the property at the time, with the possibility of an increase thereafter, but there was no speculation on the part of the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. At the same time we do realize in the value of the property not less than $250,000. I wish to say that there was a large number of depositors, and the sum which is due to them is perhaps in many cases not more than $5, but it is an important item for them.

The Freedman's Savings and Trust Company was created by act of Congress, with Peter Cooper and William Cullen Bryant, with many other prominent names, heading the list of corporators.

The terms of section 5 were:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the general business and object of the corporation hereby created shall be to receive on deposit such sums of money as may, from time to time, be offered therefor, by or on behalf of persons heretofore held in slavery in the United States, or their descendants, and investing the same in the stocks, bonds, Treasury notes, or other securities of the United States.

This provision continued in force until May 6, 1870, when Congress modified the terms of the above section by enacting—

That the fifth section of the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company," approved March 3, 1865, be, and the same is hereby, amended by adding thereto at the end thereof the words following: "And to the extent of one-half in bonds or notes, secured by mortgage on real estate in double the value of the loan; and the corporation is also authorized hereby to hold and improve the real estate now owned by it in the city of Washington, to wit, the west half of lot No. 3; all of lots 4, 5, 6, 7, and the south half of lot No. 8, in square No. 221, as laid out and recorded in the original plats or plan of said city: Provided, That said corporation shall not use the principal of any deposits made with it for the purpose of such improvement.

This amendment, secured by designing persons and with such expedition as to create no debate in the House of Representatives, was the entering wedge which led to the insolvency of the institution, and in four years Congress was forced to pass the act of June 20, 1874, closing up the affairs of the company. At that time only $400 of United States securities were found among the assets. This act provided for a commission of three, to be selected by the trustees. Subsequently, by act of February 21, 1881, in order to reduce expenses, the Comptroller of Currency was substituted for the three commissioners. Under the management of these commissioners dividends have been declared aggregating 62 per centum. During the existence of the bank the total deposits are estimated to have been $57,000,000, received from upwards of 70,000 depositors. When the bank passed into the management of the commissioners, on the 13th of July, 1874—

| At the time of the failure of the bank, in 1874, there were 61,131 depositors, to whom there was due | $2,939,925 22 |
| Five dividends have been declared, as follows: | |

The dividends, aggregating about $1,650,000, were distributed to an average of twenty-four thousand depositors. The depositors who have failed to present claims are very numerous, but their deposits average only about $5 each, while those whose claims have been audited had on deposit an average of $83.

The loans outside the city of Washington have been found to be the most worthless of all, and are largely represented in the uncollectable assets which aggregate $993,638.89.

Estimated claims likely to participate in the proposed appropriation represent $2,500,000 of deposits, and would require, in order to pay the balance due of 38 per cent., $950,000.

The Government has profited by the purchase of the bank property on Pennsylvania avenue, estimating the property at the rates demanded for contiguous ground about $250,000; from uncalled for checks covered into the Treasury, $18,078.93; and there will pass to the control and credit of the Government the $993,638.89 of uncollectable assets, out of which there may be realized a very small additional sum.

I do not desire to detain the Senate further at this late hour, but I can not think that there is any Senator who will be willing to vote against a proposition of this kind.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had occasion during the last three or four years to make some investigation in common with others in regard to this matter. I knew something of its history in the South and elsewhere. The motive of this scheme was entirely a good one, just, benevolent, everything praiseworthy, and it went well enough until, as the Senator from Vermont said, in an unhappy hour it was permitted to loan upon securities other than those previously ordered. If the Senator from Missouri had confined his severe and violent denunciatory language to a certain number of the directors of that concern in the last four years of its life, I would have said amen, and would have added something to it.

Mr. MORRILL. So would I.

Mr. HAWLEY. There were men connected with it who ought to have been in the penitentiary. I do not remember certainly that they loaned to each other, but they loaned upon entirely insufficient security. They loaned upon real estate that they never ought to have thought of taking as security; and their conduct compared with the wise managers of savings banks in our Northern States was simply piratical.

I do acknowledge in a certain sense, not a literal, legal obligation, like that of the indorser of a note, to pay this money back; but I think a generous, rich nation like ours, that ordered this thing constituted for the special purpose of doing a favor to this class of people, who had no savings banks in the South or elsewhere, who ordered this that they might have a safe place in which to deposit their little earnings, and then itself changed the law, which opened the door to fraud and led to these heavy losses—the people of the nation, a nation of our character and profession and standing, in the peculiar and unprecedented condition of the colored race, is quite justified in passing a bill like this.

Mr. HAMPTON. Mr. President, I listened to my friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST], as I always do, with infinite pleasure, and I agree with him that the United States Government has incurred no liability for the repayment of the depositors in the Freedman's Bank. But for the very reasons that he gave as to the credulity, the innocence of these people, and from the fact that he showed that they had been cheated, as I have no doubt they have been, I shall support the bill. I do so because among the depositors in that bank were a great many of those who, to my misfortune perhaps, had been my slaves. I know that they were depositors in that bank. Only a very few days ago I collected, not for one of my former slaves, but for a Federal soldier, a colored soldier who had married one of the women on my plantation, who had tried here for years and years to collect his little pittance—I collected from the Department here a percentage of what was due to him.

I want to see them paid. I want to see those people paid who were, as the Senator from Missouri well said, so faithful during the whole war to our women and children, and who have been deceived; and if it is a gratuity from the United States Government, I for one shall vote for it with infinite pleasure.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish simply to say a word about this bill. The bill was recommended to the Committee on Finance by the President of the United States, by the Secretary of the Treasury, and by the Comptroller of the Currency, who is ex officio in charge of this business. The latter especially took a great interest in it, and I conferred with him in regard to the terms and conditions of this measure with a view to protect those ignorant and innocent creditors of this corporation if possible from any possibility of having this sum misapplied.

When this matter was considered in the Committee on Finance there was no division expressed among us; there was no difference of opinion. We all agreed upon the fundamental principle that there was not a particle of legal claim against the United States, but that still the United States did create this corporation, they did change the terms of the corporation after many of these deposits were made, they changed the form of securities, and although under the custody of the Government it drifted into the hands of corrupt and irresponsible men, men who violated their duty.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Was the loss of this money occasioned by a change in the charter of the company after it was organized?

Mr. SHERMAN. Undoubtedly. Unquestionably if the law had remained providing that the moneys were to be placed in Government funds there would have been no loss. The reason why the change was made was because the bonds had advanced so high that the bank could not afford to have its money invested in that way, as its managers thought, and they therefore asked Congress, probably in good faith, that they should be allowed to take mortgages on real estate in Washington and in other places. Some of this money was loaned in the Southern States. It turned out that those securities in most cases proved insufficient, and the best property they had was the property on which they built their banking-house in Washington, as has been explained. The rest of it was dissipated and lost in the process of collection.

Now, the question is whether on the whole the United States had better pay, not any portion of the money that was lost or squandered, that is gone, but pay the balance due to those depositors on the equitable ground that they were ignorant people who trusted to the flag, you may say, who trusted to the expectation that it was a deposit made in the Government of the United States. In the committee there was no dissent that this should be given simply as a gift to these poor people. That is all there is of it.

Mr. HARRIS rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Perhaps I am mistaken about that. I do not remember any opposition in committee.

Mr. HARRIS. I simply wanted to say to the Senator from Ohio that believing as I did that there was no legal or equitable liability upon the part of the Government, and believing that I had no right as a Senator to take money out of the Treasury and give it as charity, I did not favor the report of this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then the Senator as a matter of course did not agree to it in committee, but there was no general dissent from it. I know that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], who generally speaks his opinion frankly and boldly, said at once he thought that the money ought to be paid. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Kentucky favored the bill in committee.

Mr. GEORGE. I think there is a very strong tendency in favor of these depositors whose money the Government of the United States has. That feeling arises out of the circumstances which the Senator from Missouri has so well stated; but the Senator in stating his objections to the passage of the bill has made the best argument I know of in its favor. I was somewhat struck, though, by the observations of the Senator from Missouri, and with a view to obviate them, as this is purely at the option of the Government, so as to prevent speculators and claim agents from benefiting by this appropriation, I move to amend the amendment of the committee after the word "representatives," in line 25 of section 1, by inserting:

And no payment shall be made to any agent or attorney of any depositor; but all payments shall be made personally to the original depositors, or their legal representatives, or heirs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi will be read from the desk.

The CHIEF CLERK. After the word "representative," in section 1, line 25, it is proposed to insert:

And no payment shall be made to any agent or attorney of any depositor; but all payments shall be made personally to the original depositors, or their legal representatives, or heirs.

Mr. MORRILL. It strikes me that the Senator is repeating the language just prior to where his amendment is proposed to be inserted.

Mr. GEORGE. I want to exclude any interpretation of the statute which would allow the money to be paid to an agent. When direction is made in the statute for payment to a person, a payment to his duly authorized agent is sufficient.

Mr. MORRILL. I inquire of the Senator from Mississippi whether that would not embarrass the matter? This payment will be made at the post-offices in places where branches of the bank were established.

Mr. GEORGE. Let the postmaster be the agent of the Government.

Mr. MORRILL. Would it not embarrass some of these men to travel some distance in order to get their money?

Mr. GEORGE. I want to exclude every person in the world except the original depositor, if he is alive, and, if he is dead, his legal representative, or his heirs.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well.

Mr. GEORGE. For the reason stated by the Senator from Missouri, that these persons are ignorant. They know nothing about this law, and they will be beaten by some claim agent. They will be written to, and probably will be made to agree to have the claim collected for one-half or one-third, or something of that sort, and the result will be, in my opinion, unless some provision of this sort is put in the bill, that the great benefit of the bill will not inure to the persons who are entitled to it, but to those sharks and agents who manage to get up such cases.

I am in favor of the passage of the bill because I think these ignorant and credulous persons who trusted to the Government, and they did trust to the Government, ought to be reimbursed, especially since the Senator from Ohio has stated that after the bank went into operation the Government made an important change in the charter of the bank, and through that change the money was lost.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Will the Senator allow me to suggest to him that this very ignorance will be the cause of failure to recover the amounts that they have severally deposited in the bank, and that the better way would be, as they will be obliged to have counsel in many cases, to limit the amount that any attorney shall receive for the collection of any deposit? Very many of these people will be obliged to have counsel in order to make up their cases.

Mr. GEORGE. The scheme of the bill is very well adapted to reaching these persons without the agency of any third party. The supposition of the Senator from Virginia that these depositors, or their heirs, will not find out about the passage of this law, I think, is not well founded. I have no doubt they will find it out. The only trouble will be that, being ignorant and credulous, they will trust somebody who will get the lion's share of the appropriation.

When I was interrupted by the Senator from Virginia I was going to call the attention of the Senate to the message of the President of last December, in which the following language is used:

I desire to call the attention of Congress to a plain duty which the Government owes to the depositors in the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. This company was chartered by the Congress for the benefit of the most illiterate and humble of our people, and with the intention of encouraging in them industry and thrift. Most of its branches were presided over by officers holding the commissions and clothed in the uniform of the United States. These and other circumstances reasonably, I think, led these simple people to suppose that the invitation to deposit their hard-earned savings in this institution implied an undertaking on the part of their Government that their money should be safely kept for them.

I have no doubt of the truth of that statement. I have no doubt they believed when they made the deposits that they were depositing with the Government itself.

I hope the bill will pass, but I trust the amendment which I have offered, and which I think is essential to the protection of these parties, will also be adopted.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion to him? This money will simply pass into the hands of those who will pay it out to the claimants in precisely the same way that the dividends heretofore paid have been already distributed, which have been paid in installments. Every claimant is known; every claimant is now communicated with as fast as anything is realized out of the property of the bank, and he has a bank-book. This money falls into the same custody, and is paid out precisely in the same way.

There can be no claim agents, and there can be no method of robbing these claimants any more than already exists. There has been no complaint that the distribution of the assets of the bank has not been made in a perfectly satisfactory way. I do not see any difficulty that can arise, or any occasion for the amendment, if I state the facts as they are.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to be in favor of the payment personally to the depositors.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly; and that is now being done. There have been several instalments paid from the funds realized from the sales of the assets of the bank. Every one who is entitled to anything, necessarily has established his claim already, and the distribution has been effected of a certain percentage several times. Here comes from a source outside of the ordinary assets of the bank enough, say 30 per cent., to pay the balance, which will be determined just as the 70 per cent. already has been.

Mr. GEORGE. Of course, if the instalments have been paid to agents of these parties heretofore, this will be paid them.

Mr. BLAIR. This will be paid in the same way; but during the four or five years this process of paying the amount due the depositors has been going on, there has been no complaint of any wrong, so far as I have ever heard,

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know of any complaint, but this is a payment to be made by us which we are under no legal obligation to make; it is to be paid on account of the equity in favor of the original depositors, and I want to make provision which will secure the payment of the money to those parties, and not to anybody who has swindled them out of it by paying them any sum, however trifling. If the Senator from New Hampshire agrees with me as to the propriety of paying these parties he ought not to object to the amendment which secures that result.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not make objection to any such amendment if it be necessary, but it seems to me that from the fact that during these years there has been no complaint on the part of any one that the payments were not made, a continuance of the same system can work no wrong.

Mr. MORRILL. I will not object to the amendment, but I think it really will work hardship to some of these colored people who have moved from one place to another; but I am anxious to have a vote.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I trust the Senate will pardon me for a moment, inasmuch as I have taken a very great interest in this question.

When I first entered the other House it was my fortune to introduce a bill in relation to this subject, and from the introduction of that bill I believe originated afterward the investigation into the condition of the Freedman's Bank. I regard it as a sound legal proposition that a legal duty follows from a moral obligation. In my opinion it is a high moral obligation on the part of the Government, looking to the history of this institution and its progress, that it should pay this money to the depositors.

In 1866, when I was not a voter, when I was disfranchised, when many of my friends who are now upon this floor were exiles from their States, this charter was granted as a measure for reorganizing society in the South, in view of the difficulties that then surrounded that portion of this country, those difficulties being grave and serious, ay, more serious than ever confronted the population of any country—the solution of moral, social, and political questions. My sympathies then, as now, ran out to this race who were, as a result of the war, emancipated. But they were houseless and homeless, and the men who formerly owned them were poor indeed, unable to discharge their moral obligation to this race. So, houseless and homeless, like a flock without its shepherd, it was natural that this race should look to the Government that had emancipated them. They did look to it in the most perfect faith in the means that that Government held out by its legislation at that time to recover their condition, which was an invitation to rely on the faith of the Government, as they believed, and making their deposits in this institution they did it in good faith, they did it in confidence and trust. The Government invited them to make it. They did so. Then afterwards the Government, without consultation with them, without petition from them, without any request on their part, changed the law under which the trust had been invited, and in that manner perpetrated a wrong upon this race.

Now, sir, I join with my friend from Missouri and my friend from South Carolina in the tribute which they have paid to the fidelity of this race; and I accepted, for one, this effort—a failure, as it turned out in part—as one of the measures of reorganizing society in the South, and I believe it to be a duty on the part of the Government wherever loss occurred to make that loss good to the individual. So believing, I shall support the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. GEORGE. I think it very important.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have an amendment that covers the same point that I think will reach the object the Senator has in view; and that is, after the word "verified," in line 24 of section 1, to insert the words "if living," and then after the word "and," to insert "if dead, then;" so as to read:

But no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any assignee of any such depositors, and the benefit and relief provided by this act shall extend only to those depositors in whose favor such balances have been properly verified, if living, and if dead, then to their heirs and legal representatives.

Mr. MORRILL. There is no objection to that.

Mr. GEORGE. That does not prevent the payment to an agent.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the amendment of the Senator from Missouri is a good amendment.

Mr. GEORGE. I read the bill carefully, and I saw nothing in it that would prevent the payment of any of this money to a claim agent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the Chair understand the Senator from Mississippi to modify his amendment?

Mr. GEORGE. No, sir; I insist on the adoption of my amendment. Let us divide on it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi calls for a division.

Mr. VEST. In law the payment to an attorney in fact is a payment to the principal, and if a claim agent in the city of Washington appears with the proper bank-book and with authority to collect the money, it will go into his hands and then he will pay what he pleases to the depositor.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am astonished at my friend from Mississippi that he is not willing to allow the payment of this money to rest on the sound discretion of the Comptroller of the Currency. He pays it. He has an agent who has paid it all the time, and it has been going on for ten years nearly. When I was in the Treasury Department, I know it was scrupulously paid. Now the payment is to be made to the same identical persons who have received a dividend of the funds heretofore paid by the Comptroller of the Currency, under his direction; and he is officially responsible and, I believe, is also under bond for the proper application of this money.

I do not care about the matter particularly, except, for instance, in such a case as that stated by the Senator from South Carolina, where he had called and obtained for persons named their money, and would you deny the right of a man to perform an act of kindness of that sort? Would you require the negro man to come up to receive the money when the amount of his dividend might not be over one or two dollars? These deposits run down to a dollar and they range from $1 up, and a dividend of 30 per cent. might in some cases amount to only 30 cents. You ought to leave a matter of this kind to the discretion of the executive officer, who is as disinterested as a man can be.

I have no objection to the amendment, except that it will complicate the matter and give more trouble.

Mr. GEORGE. I think it ought to be complicated to the extent that we should make it secure that the person for whom we intend this money shall get it. I am satisfied that without some provision of that sort not one dollor out of every two we give, or one dollar out of every five will ever reach those who made the deposits.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question? Suppose under the provisions of this bill a party who had made a deposit should be entitled to receive five hundred or a thousand dollars, or any other amount, and his wife should want that amount, does the Senator mean to say that the depositor, without any other resource on earth, should not be allowed to employ an attorney to protect his rights and secure him, and be paid out of this fund?

Mr. GEORGE. The bill provides that the money shall only be paid to those persons whose accounts have already been verified.

Mr. KENNA. Suppose that the very account itself is assailed and charges made that it was verified on false or perjured testimony?

Mr. GEORGE. I presume no case of that sort will arise. I only say that, unless some provision of this kind is put in the bill, the money we intend for these parties, the men who intrusted money to the bank on the faith of the Government, will never reach them.

Mr. TELLER. Has any of it ever been stolen?

Mr. GEORGE. I do not know whether it has been or not. They had a right to do as they pleased with the deposits they had in bank. This, however, is in some respects a gratuity. I do not propose to vote a gratuity out of the Treasury of the United States to anybody but the person who is morally entitled to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator insists on his amendment?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A division is called for on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The question being put, the ayes were 9——

Mr. GEORGE. I give it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I believe my amendment was accepted.

Mr. MORRILL. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment suggested by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 24, after the word "verified," it is proposed to insert "if living;" and in the same line, after the word "and" where it first occurs, to insert "if dead, then;" so as to read:

But no part of the money hereby appropriated shall be paid to any assignee of such depositors, and the benefit and relief provided by this act shall extend only to those depositors in whose favor such balances have been properly verified, if living, and, if dead, then to their heirs and legal representatives.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment of the Committee on Finance as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I am informed that he would vote "yea," if present, and I therefore record my vote "yea."

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KENNA (when Mr. STANFORD'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from California [Mr. STANFORD.]

Mr. MANDERSON (when Mr. VAN WYCK'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. VAN WYCK] is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY.] My colleague would vote for this bill if he were present.

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 35, nays 6; as follows:

YEAS—35.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Farwell, | Mahone, | Riddleberger, |
| Allison, | George, | Manderson, | Sawyer, |

Theodore F. Rose, to be postmaster at Ivoryton, in the county of Middlesex, and State of Connecticut.

John Hornstein, to be postmaster at Boone, Boone County, Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of John Hornstein to be postmaster at Boone, Iowa, in place of Newton W. Simmons, suspended, has considered the same and reports:

That this is a partisan suspension. No attack has been made in the case on the character or reputation of Mr. Simmons either as a man or an officer. He makes no contest, has made other business arrangements, and as the nominee appears to be a competent person to discharge the duties of the office, the committee recommend the confirmation of John Hornstein.

Thomas A. Massie, to be postmaster at Logan, Harrison County, Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the nomination of Thomas Massie, to be postmaster at Logan, Iowa, vice Allen K. Grow, suspended, has considered the same, and reports:

That from the evidence supplied in the case it appears that there was no reasonable cause for the suspension of Mr. Grow. He appears to have been a competent and faithful officer, and there is nothing in the case that in any degree reflects injuriously on him either as a citizen or an officer. His suspension rests on political grounds. He is a member of the Republican party, and his place was wanted for a Democrat. Hence Mr. Massie was nominated. His competency and character seem to be well vouched for, and the committee recommend that he be confirmed.

---

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 26, 1887.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Amos M. Thayer, of Missouri, to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Missouri.

POSTMASTER.

James N. Smith, to be postmaster at Glasgow, Barren County, Kentucky.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 26, 1887.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CHARLES DE ARNAUD.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on the Library, reported back without amendment joint resolution (H. Res. 223) granting a gold medal to Charles de Arnaud; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SINGLETON submitted the views of the minority; which were also ordered to be referred, and ordered to be printed.

[The foregoing was omitted from reports of committees filed yesterday.]

RETURN OF BILL FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the resolution of the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring) I return herewith the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 25, 1887.

The SPEAKER. There was an error in this bill, the word "attorney" being used when the word "clerk" should have been used. If there be no objection that error will be corrected and the bill will be again engrossed and communicated to the Senate.

There was no objection.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3095) granting to the Rocky Fork and Cooke City Railway Company the right of way through a part of the Crow Indian Reservation, in Montana Territory; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent to put that bill on its passage now. It is identical with a House bill on the Calendar that has been approved by the Committee on Indian Affairs unanimously and by the Secretary of the Interior. This is a short bill and similar to a right of way bill passed and approved this session relating to the reservation of the Indians in Montana north of the Northern Pacific Railway.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Does this relate to an Indian or a military reservation?

Mr. NELSON. It is an Indian reservation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HERBERT. I object. I know a great many of these bills ought to pass; but it is necessary that the appropriation bills should be proceeded with.

Several members called for the regular order.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3296) to authorize the printing of the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late John A. Logan; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3165) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CRISP. The House committee has reported a bill identical with that; and each of those bills contains every provision to protect the public, to wit, that the bridge shall not be built until the plans are approved by the Secretary of War, and every other railroad company requiring the use of it shall have the right to do so. The right to alter and amend is expressly reserved. It seems to me there can be no reason why the bill should not pass. I ask unanimous consent to put the bill upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to consider this bill at this time.

Mr. HERBERT. I demand the regular order. The Senate must have the appropriation bills.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2930) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Red River of the North; which was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2898) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the East River between the city of New York and Long Island; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CRISP. I make the same request as to that bill.

The SPEAKER. But the regular order is demanded, which cuts off all these requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. HERBERT. There will be no difficulty about these bills if they are deferred for a while.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3039) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Great Kanawha River below the falls, and to prescribe the dimensions of the same; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3160) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge by the Chicago, Saint Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railway Company across the Missouri River at Sioux City, Iowa, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be now considered; and this is the only request of the kind I have made to the House. This bill has been reported by the Committee on Commerce favorably, has passed the Senate, and is an important improvement. If it goes on the Calendar it is dead.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Where is the bridge?

Mr. SCOTT. The bridge is to be constructed at Sioux City. It is a bridge bill which was reported, I think, by the gentleman who asks me the question.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Oh, no.

Mr. SCOTT. It was reported by Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that this bill be now considered.

Mr. STRUBLE. I feel compelled to object.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 3104) to authorize the construction of a railroad bridge over the Mississippi River at Grand Tower, Ill.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MILLS. I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded by several gentlemen, which cuts off all such requests.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

HOUSE BILLS WITH SENATE AMENDMENTS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 34) to authorize the East and West Railroad Company of Alabama to maintain a bridge across the Coosa River, with Senate amendments, and a request for a committee of conference.

Mr. CRISP. This bill, as I understand, requests a conference.

The SPEAKER. There has been no disagreement. The House has not disposed of the Senate amendments.

Mr. CRISP. Is there objection to concurring at this time in the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate be concurred in.

Mr. CRISP. It is a House bill with slight amendments by the Senate changing the phraseology.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. CRISP. Then I ask that the House non-concur in the Senate mendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is the demand for the regular order withdrawn?

Mr. MILLS. It is not.

The bill, with the amendments of the Senate, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 3853) to authorize the Talladega and Coosa Valley Railroad Company of Alabama to erect a bridge across the Coosa River, with Senate amendments, and a request for a conference.

The bill, with the Senate amendments, was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 6974) to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States, with the amendments of the Senate thereto.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that a conference be agreed to on that bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made, and the bill and amendments will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (H. R. 9858) to authorize the Louisiana North and South Railroad Company to construct and maintain a bridge across the Red River in Louisiana, with an amendment by the Senate; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (H. R. 10040) to provide for holding terms of the United States courts at Mississippi City, Miss., with an amendment of the Senate thereto.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in. It is merely formal.

Mr. MILLS. Regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The bill and amendment will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MRS. ALMIRA AMBLER.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill (S. 2159) granting a pension to Mrs. Almira Ambler, the Senate having disagreed to the amendments of the House and asked a conference thereon.

Mr. SEYMOUR. I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference requested by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House, Mr. SWOPE, Mr. NEECE, and Mr. CONGER.

REPORT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the concurrent resolution of the Senate providing for the printing of the report of the Smithsonian Institution and of the National Museum for the year ending June 30, 1886; which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. VAN EATON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the amendments of the Senate to the bill to provide for holding terms of the United States court at Mississippi City, and request a conference.

The SPEAKER. That has been asked, and objected to.

Mr. VAN EATON. No; I asked unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be concurred in, and that was objected to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demanded the regular order.

Mr. VAN EATON. He will withdraw the demand for this purpose.

Mr. MILLS. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

UNVEILING OF THE GARFIELD STATUE.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following communication; which was read and referred to the Committee on the Library:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 23, 1887.

DEAR SIR: On behalf of the Society of the Army of the Cumberland I have the honor to invite the members of the House of Representatives of the United States to attend the ceremonies of unveiling the statue of the late Maj. Gen. James A. Garfield, ex-President of the United States, in this city on the 12th day of May, 1877.

As Congress will probably not be in session on the date named, and inasmuch as it appropriated $30,000 to provide the pedestal for the statue, I would respectfully suggest that it would be very gratifying to the society should the Speaker appoint a committee to attend the unveiling ceremonies to officially represent the House of Representatives.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General and President Society Army of the Cumberland.

Hon. J. G. CARLISLE,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for the remainder of the session.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. VAN EATON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House certain deeds filed in connection with the claim of James Burleson, upon leaving certain copies of the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, I understand that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS] will withdraw the demand for the regular order for the purpose of allowing me to ask unanimous consent that on Monday next a recess be taken from 5 o'clock until half past 7 p. m., the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of bills providing for the construction of bridges, not including the Memphis bridge bill; and also with the understanding that if the Committee on Appropriations need the evening it shall be devoted to the consideration of appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the request of the gentlemam from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest that an exception be made in favor of the naval appropriation bill and the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. CRISP. I have distinctly stated that if the Committee on Appropriations should need the evening, it is agreed that bridge business shall be dispensed with.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that no particular appropriation bills be specified. There is the deficiency bill also.

Mr. CRISP. It is understood that if the Committee on Appropriations should need the evening for any bill, the order of business in regard to bridge bills shall not be insisted upon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess next Monday at 5 o'clock p. m. until half past 7 o'clock, the evening session to be devoted exclusively to the consideration of bills authorizing the construction of bridges, not to include the Memphis bridge bill, and if the evening should be required by the Committee on Appropriations for any general appropriation bills the order to be vacated.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILLIS. I move to suspend the rules so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of House bill No. 10419, commonly known as the river and harbor bill, to disagree to the Senate amendment, and agree to the conference asked.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. On that motion I demand a second.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I rise to ask permission to have read a resolution which will explain my objection made a moment ago to the request of gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to have a resolution read.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Then I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi withdraws his objection to the request made by the gentleman from Georgia. Is there further objection?

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I desire to know what is the pending question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] moves to suspend the rules and non-concur in the amendment of the Senate to the bill known as the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIS. And agree to the conference asked.

The SPEAKER. And the gentleman from Kansas demands a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the House do now adjourn, and pending that motion I move that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. MILLS. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman can not make the motion to adjourn till Tuesday next pending the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HERBERT. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is proceeding with the regular order. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] moves that when the House adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Tuesday next.

Mr. HATCH. The point of order is made that the motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. For what reason?

Mr. HATCH. Pending the motion to suspend the rules but one dilatory motion is in order—a motion to adjourn.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. This is not a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. HATCH. It is. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] makes that motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But a second has not been ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point that but one dilatory motion is in order—the motion to adjourn; and that the gentleman's motion to take a recess is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not made a motion to take a recess, but has made a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HATCH. And that when the House adjourn, it to be to meet on Tuesday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order; that pending a motion to suspend the rules it is not in order to move that when the House adjourn it adjourn to meet on a particular day.

Mr. HEPBURN. May I ask to have the rule read?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule. The gentleman has a right to move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HATCH. That is the only motion he can make.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Has he not the right to move a recess?

Mr. HATCH. No, sir.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the rule.

The Clerk read clause 8, Rule XVI, as follows:

Pending a motion to suspend the rules the Speaker may entertain one motion that the House adjourn; but after the result thereon is announced he shall not entertain any other dilatory motion till the vote is taken on suspension.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on that motion.

The question having been put,

The SPEAKER said: The noes seem to have it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I call for a division.

The question was again taken; and there were—ayes 5, noes 102.

So the motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I demand a second on the motion to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] has not yet been read.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understood it was agreed that a second be ordered; that the gentleman from Kansas withdrew the demand for a second on that understanding.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No sir; I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. WILLIS. I understood the gentleman from Kansas that way.

The SPEAKER. After the proposition has been read, the Chair will appoint tellers to take the question on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SPRINGER. It is required to read only the amendment in controversy, I believe.

The SPEAKER. There is but one amendment, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will state it.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is it in order now to demand the reading of the bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has directed the reading of the Senate amendment.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will not take up the time of the House in this manner. It will not accomplish anything.

Mr. HEPBURN. I desire that this bill as it came to us from the Senate shall be read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will direct the Clerk to read the entire bill and amendment.

The Clerk read the bill and the Senate amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bills of the following titles, namely:

A bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections; and

A bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains.

Also, that the Senate disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2382) granting a pension to Alice Kelly; and asked a conference with the House thereon, and had appointed Mr. BLAIR, Mr. SAWYER, and Mr. CAMERON, managers on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the act supplementary thereto.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] demands a second on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, and Mr. WILLIS were appointed tellers.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 189, noes 3.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Under the rules of the House thirty minutes are allowed for debate, fifteen minutes in support of and fifteen in opposition to the motion. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] to control the time in opposition, and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] in support of the motion.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky in charge of the bill if he prefers to take his time now.

Mr. WILLIS. I prefer to take no time whatever. I am ready for a vote now. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

I reserve my time to be used if necessary.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I yield, then, ten minutes or such time as he may want to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HEPBURN. It is not at all surprising, Mr. Speaker, that the gentlemen who are intent upon the passage of this bill should cry out for an immediate vote. It is a natural law, I think, that the man who is intent upon the perpetration of a wrong and outrage always wants to get through with it as quickly as he can.

I want to call attention, Mr. Speaker, not with the expectation of changing the sentiment of any gentleman who will vote for this bill, but to challenge the attention of the country, to the iniquity involved in this river and harbor appropriation. First, I call attention to the fact that a document was laid upon our tables months ago showing that $16,000,000, from the first day of last November, were subject to the call of the Secretary of War for the purpose of carrying on these improvements—$16,000,000 unexpended from the appropriations that have heretofore been made. Notwithstanding that fact the River and Harbor Committee reported a bill carrying nearly seven and a half million dollars more. The manner in which that was passed is known to the members of this House. The wrong, the outrage, that was perpetrated upon our rules in trying to force that measure through, and in forcing it through the House, is known to every member of the House. And it is a significant fact that the membership, who ought to have had regard for the rules that we ourselves made for our government, would submit to their prostitution, would submit to their outrage, in order to secure these local advantages to local representatives. After the passage——

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia (interrupting). Do I understand the gentleman from Iowa to say that the members of this committee had submitted to their prostitution?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know how the gentleman understood me.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Did the gentleman say that?

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, I think there is no necessity for any explanation at all to my choleric friend. What I said was plain: that there was on the part of the membership of this House a submission to the prostitution of the rules of this House in order that this iniquity might become a law.

The bill with nearly seven and a half millions of dollars goes to the Senate after having been passed here without one moment of consideration. No appropriation was discussed; no effort was made toward enlightening it; no reason was assigned why this large sum should be added to the unexpended balance in the hands of the Secretary; no one spoke in favor of one of the improvements proposed in this bill to be carried on. But the whole thing was railroaded through in violation of our rules.

The bill goes to the Senate, and there three millions more are added, making a total that will be in the hands of the Secretary of War, if we may believe the documents laid upon our desks, of twenty-six and a half millions of dollars to be expended in these so-called improvements—improvements, sir, not ten of which, in my humble judgment, could receive a majority of this House if they stood alone and upon their own merits.

But that is not the policy of preparing these bills. The policy pursued is that of exciting the local pride or the local interest of different members, and in that way in order that one may secure some benefit for his own locality he is willing that another shall have his share of the swag, and in that way the bill gets through.

Why, Mr. Speaker, there are some of the gentlemen from my own section opposed to this bill who, induced by specious amendments in the Senate, are now thought to be ready to support it. The Hennepin Canal, the most important of the contemplated improvements that now agitate the country, was not in the bill before. The improvement of New York Harbor in proper manner was not in the bill before. But the Senate have added certain propositions by which it is supposed that the friends of the Hennepin Canal will be induced to support this bill.

There is in the measure suggested, however—and I want to call the attention of these gentlemen to this fact—in my judgment, an entire abandonment of the proposition to construct the Hennepin Canal. There is not necessarily one dollar of appropriation for the old scheme of the construction of a Hennepin Canal as it has been commended to us by the press and the various conventions that have assembled in the West in advocacy of that measure. On the contrary, in so far as the eastern end of that improvement is concerned, an entirely new scheme is now brought before Congress. It is proposed in this amendment to abandon all of the old Illinois Canal between the city of La Salle and the city of Joliet, a distance of 50 miles, and to take up another method of improvement, namely, the improvement of the Illinois River by a series of locks and dams.

Then there is a scheme to survey new routes from that point to Lake Michigan, one by the way of the Calumet River, and the other by the Kankakee River, leaving it optional, if the commission should so determine, to utilize some part of the old canal between the city of Joliet and the city of Chicago. But so far as the old Hennepin Canal is concerned there is no recognition of it of any kind or character except the permission that is given to the Secretary to locate, by the approval of a particular survey, a route that will strike the Mississippi River somewhere between the mouth of the Rock River and Lake Itasca, the language of the bill being "at a point above the mouth of the Rock River."

Gentlemen tell us there is a recognition of the canal. It is just the same kind of recognition that for six years it has had at the hands of the Congress. There is not a dollar appropriated for construction. There is not a necessity created for even marking it out upon the surveys of the route. It will have the same paper extension the same paper recognition that it has had heretofore, and nothing more.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman allow me a single question?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have only ten minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman indicate what paragraph of this bill recognizes the construction of the Hennepin Canal or makes any appropriation for it?

Mr. HEPBURN. I confess I am unable to find it. But the friends of the measure, the gentlemen who have had it in charge—I am myself as friendly to that measure as any man in this House—but the men who have had it particularly in their charge tell me there is in the bill a clear and distinct recognition that I can not find. I either fail to understand the language or the language is not there.

Mr. HATCH. I am opposed to the Hennepin Canal, and if there is anything in the bill in favor of the Hennepin Canal I am opposed to the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

Mr. DINGLEY. The question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to suspend the rules and non-concur in the Senate amendment which covers the entire river and harbor bill as passed by the Senate. If a majority of the House should vote "no" on the motion to non-concur in the Senate amendment they would practically vote to pass the bill as it came from the Senate, for the defeat of the motion to non-concur would be followed by a motion to concur.

Therefore those who are in favor of the bill as it came from the Senate will necessarily vote "no" on the motion before the House. But if a majority of the House are opposed to the bill as it came from the Senate they will vote aye on the motion to non-concur, and thus prevent the passage of the bill as it came from the Senate, and pave the way for an agreement to the conference asked by the Senate.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] does not desire to speak I will take the floor. I claim the right to close the debate. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. Speaker, in one minute I desire to say that this is simply a proposition to disagree to the Senate amendment and to agree to the conference. There is no provision under the rules for such a motion. There is no large fund on hand, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] to the contrary notwithstanding.

The last report of the Chief of Engineers, dated January 5, which I hold in my hand, shows that the appropriations will be exhausted in the present fiscal year, and this bill, as gentlemen all know, contains appropriations for the coming fiscal year.

As to the Hennepin Canal, to which the gentleman from Iowa has referred, he very skillfully undertakes on the one hand to discourage the friends of that project, and on the other to arouse its enemies. I do not think the gentleman's efforts in that direction have been a success. There is a provision in this bill for a survey of the Hennepin Canal. It has not been considered by the committee of conference, and this is simply a proposition on the part of the House to allow the committee of conference to confer upon that. There is no provision for the Hennepin Canal in the bill, as the gentleman knows.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the rules——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. One word on the Hennepin Canal before you leave that subject. Does not the provision in that bill locate the canal?

Mr. WILLIS. It authorizes location and survey.

Mr. HEPBURN. Have there not been already three surveys of that canal, and is it contemplated that there shall be an additional survey between the city of Hennepin and the Mississippi River?

Mr. WILLIS. I say to the gentleman that my understanding is that there is to be another survey, and that to that extent only the Senate has put this amendment in the bill.

Mr. HEPBURN. Another survey between the city of Hennepin and the Mississippi River?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know what part of the route; but I understand that there is to be another survey.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. The Senate amendment not only provides for a survey, but also for locating the canal, does it not?

Mr. WILLIS. That is my understanding.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with regard to the rules, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has spoken of the abuse of the rules. I submit to the House that there is a use of the rules and there is an abuse of the rules. Under these rules any gentleman on this floor—any page, if he had the right—could take the floor in the middle of July any year and precipitate an extra session by simply doing what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has done; that is, making formal amendments in Committee of the Whole to every proposition embodied in any of the appropriation bills.

The rules contemplate a fair and just consideration of appropriations, not mere formal amendments proposed for purposes of delay. Now, we are asking of this House simply a disagreement with the Senate's action, and the privilege on the part of the House of conferring with the Senate, and reporting the measure back to the House for its final action. There is nothing in this motion to antagonize even the enemies of the river and harbor bill. The motion is made in the interest of the public business, to get this bill out of the way, so that other pressing business may come to the front and be disposed of. I now ask for a vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] has five minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, this motion is very specious. It is simply a motion to non-concur in the Senate amendment, but in effect it means the passage of a bill which, when it was first brought before the House some days since, received consideration only as to the first eight lines. There was not a single item in the bill making an appropriation at any point which was considered by the House. The bill went to the Senate, and the Senate now sends back a bill of fifty-three pages, appropriating over ten millions of dollars, and this motion, if agreed to, will simply have the effect of making these proposed appropriations without the possibility of the examination of a single item by this House.

I am frank to say that it strikes me as an attempt to override not simply the rules, but all the ordinary equities—an attempt entirely in keeping with a bill of combined appropriations for works all along the Atlantic coast, all along the Pacific coast, and on all the rivers and the lakes. I am opposed to it on principle. This motion is simply intended to cause the passage of the bill, I presume as a measure of Democratic "economy and reform," without the possibility of debate, consideration, or amendment. That is what the motion means, and I oppose it on that ground. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask a vote.

The SPEAKER. If no other gentleman desires to speak, the Chair will put the question. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS] to suspend the rules, non-concur in the Senate amendment, and agree to a conference.

The question was taken by a viva voce vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not able to determine.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. No, no.

The yeas and nays were refused—ayes 26, noes 158.

The SPEAKER proceeded to put the question on the motion of Mr. WILLIS.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I ask for a division on the original motion.

Mr. DUNN. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNN. After the vote has been taken on ordering the yeas and nays and they have been refused, is it in order to go back and demand a division on the original motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair had not actually announced the result, but simply the number of votes.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. WILLIS; and it was agreed to—ayes 162, noes 32.

The SPEAKER. More than two-thirds having voted in the affirmative, the motion is agreed to. The Chair will appoint the managers on the part of the House during the day.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. That motion is not in order until after the morning hour for reports from committees, unless that hour should be dispensed with.

Mr. HERBERT. I move to dispense with the morning hour.

Mr. HATCH. I will not antagonize that motion if unanimous consent be given that members of committees having reports to make be allowed to hand them in at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

Mr. ROGERS. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] moves to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees, which requires a two-thirds vote.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 125, noes 30.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point that no quorum has voted, and I call for tellers. Gentlemen may as well understand that we are going to make these reports; and they will save time by allowing us to do so.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HERBERT and Mr. HATCH were appointed.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 124, noes 47.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 28 voting in favor therefor—not one-fifth of the last vote.

So the motion of Mr. HERBERT to dispense with the morning hour was agreed to, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof.

Mr. HERBERT. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

Mr. THOMPSON addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. THOMPSON] rises, as the Chair understands, to make a privileged report from a committee of conference.

ALPHEUS S. FRENCH.

Mr. THOMPSON. I ask the Clerk to read the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Alpheus S. French, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of "30" insert "40;" and that the House agree to the same.

A. C. THOMPSON,
I. S. STRUBLE,
N. B. ELDREDGE,
Managers on the part of the House.

P. SAWYER,
H. W. BLAIR,
D. M. SABIN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The explanatory statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Statement of committee of conference on Senate bill 1582, granting a pension to Alpheus S. French.

The only change made in the bill as amended by the House is to strike out the word "thirty" and insert "forty;" so as to grant a pension of $40 per month instead of $30 per month.

A. C. THOMPSON,
J. S. STRUBLE,
N. B. ELDREDGE,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move the adoption of this report, and on that motion call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. THOMPSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had chosen Hon. JOHN J. INGALLS, a Senator from the State of Kansas, to be President pro tempore of the Senate, in place of Hon. JOHN SHERMAN, resigned.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 170) authorizing an investigation of the books, accounts, and methods of Pacific railroads which have received aid from the United States, requested a conference with the House on said joint resolution and amendments, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HOAR, Mr. EVARTS, and Mr. PUGH.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a resolution (in which the concurrence of the House was requested) to print extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries for the year 1886.

TAXATION OF DISTILLED SPIRITS.

Mr. MORRISON. I rise to make a privileged report—the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 4833) relating to the taxation of fractional parts of gallons of distilled spirits. I ask unanimous consent that the report, with the accompanying statement, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will that include the Senate amendments?

The SPEAKER. That will be included, if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection; and the Senate amendments, together with the report of the committee of conference and the statement of the House conferees, will be printed in the RECORD.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, August 2, 1886.

Resolved, That the bill from the House of Representatives (H. R. 4833) entitled "An act relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits," do pass with the following amendments:

Page 1, lines 4 and 5, strike out "May, 1886," and insert "the second month succeeding the month in which this act is approved."

Page 1, lines 11 and 12, strike out "May, 1886," and insert "the second month succeeding the month in which this act is approved."

At the end of the bill add the following sections:

"SEC. 2. That the provisions of an act entitled 'An act relating to the production of fruit-brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same,' approved March 3, 1877, be extended and made applicable to brandy distilled from apples or peaches: Provided, That each of the warehouses established under said act, or which may hereafter be established, shall be in charge either of a storekeeper or of a storekeeper and gauger, at the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

"SEC. 3. That any producer of pure sweet wines, who is also a distiller, authorized to separate from fermented grape-juice, under internal-revenue laws, wine-spirits, may use, free of tax, under such regulations and after the filing of such notice and bonds, together with the keeping of such records and the rendition of such reports as to materials and products, as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe, so much of such wine-spirits so separated by him in the preparation of such sweet wine as may be necessary to fortify the same for the preservation of the saccharine matter contained therein: Provided, That the wine-spirits so used free of tax shall not be in excess of the amount required to introduce into such sweet wines an alcoholic strength equal to 14 per cent. of the volume of such wines after such use: Provided further, That such wine, after such fortification, shall not contain more than 24 per cent. of alcohol, as defined by section 3249 of the Revised Statutes of the United States: Provided further, That such use of wine-spirits free from tax shall be confined to the months of August, September, October, November, December, January, February, March, and April of each year. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in determining the liability of any distiller of fermented grape-juice to assessment under section 3309 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, is authorized to allow such distiller credit in his computation for the wine-spirits used by him in preparing sweet wine under the provisions of this section.

"SEC. 4. That the wine-spirits mentioned in section 3 of this act is the product resulting from the distillation of fermented grape-juice, and shall be held to include the product commonly known as grape-brandy; and the pure sweet wine that may be fortified free of tax, as provided by said section, is fermented grape-juice which does not contain any substance introduced before, during, or after fermentation as a substitute for grapes or fermented grape-juice, nor any coloring matter not produced from grapes during the process of wine-making, nor any ingredient known to be deleterious to the health of consumers, and which does contain not less than 4 per cent. of saccharine matter, which saccharine strength may be determined by testing, with Balling's saccharometer or must-scale, such sweet wine, after evaporation of the spirit contained therein, and restoring the sample tested to original volume by addition of water."

"SEC. 5. That any person who shall use wine-spirits, as defined by section 4 of this act, or other spirits, on which the internal-revenue tax has not been paid, otherwise than within the limitations set forth in section 3 of this act, and in accordance with the regulations made pursuant to this act, shall be liable to a penalty of double the amount of the tax on the wine-spirits or other spirits so unlawfully used. Whenever it is impracticable in any case to ascertain the quantity of wine-spirits or other spirits that has been used in violation of this act in mixtures with any wines, all alcohol contained in such unlawful mixtures of wine with wine-spirits or other spirits in excess of 10 per cent. shall be held to be unlawfully used: Provided, however, That if water has been added to such unlawful mixtures, either before, at the time of, or after such unlawful use of wine-spirits or other spirits, all the alcohol contained therein shall be considered to have been unlawfully used. In reference to alcoholic strength of wines and mixtures of wines with spirits in this act, the measurement is intended to be according to volume and not according to weight.

"SEC. 6. That under such regulations and official supervision, and upon the execution of such entries and the giving of such bonds, bills of lading, and other security as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, any producer of pure sweet wines, as defined by this act, may withdraw wine-spirits from any special bonded warehouse, free of tax, in original packages, in any quantity not less than 80 wine-gallons, and may use so much of the same as may be required by him, under such regulations, and after the filing of such notices and bonds, and the keeping of such records, and the rendition of such reports as to materials and products and the disposition of the same as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe, in fortifying the pure sweet wines made by him, and for no other purpose, in accordance with the limitations and provisions as to uses, amount to be used, and period for using the same set forth in section 3 of this act; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, is authorized, whenever he shall deem it to be necessary for the prevention of violations of this law, to prescribe that wine-spirits withdrawn under this section, or any other spirits, shall not be used to fortify wines except at a certain distance prescribed by him from any distillery, rectifying-house, winery, or other establishment used for producing or storing distilled spirits, or for making or storing wines other than wines which are so fortified, and that in the building in which such fortification of wines is practiced no wines or spirits other than those permitted by his regulation shall be stored. The use of wine-spirits free of tax for the fortification of sweet wines under this act shall be begun and completed at the place of original production where the grape-juice is fermented, under the immediate supervision of an officer of internal revenue, who shall make returns describing the kinds and quantities of wine so fortified, and shall affix such stamps and seals to the packages containing such wines as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall provide by regulations the time within which wines so fortified with the wine-spirits so withdrawn may be subject to inspection, and for final accounting for the use of such wine-spirits, and for rewarehousing or for payment of the tax on any portion of such wine-spirits which remain not used in fortifying pure sweet wines.

"SEC. 7. That wine-spirits may be withdrawn from special bonded warehouses at the instance of any person desiring to use the same to fortify any wines, in accordance with commercial demands of foreign markets, when such wines are intended for exportation, without the payment of tax on the amount of wine-spirits used in such fortification, under such regulations, and after making such entries, and executing and filing with the collector of the district from which the removal is to be made such bonds and bills of lading, and giving such other additional security to prevent the use of such wine-spirits free of tax otherwise than in the fortification of wine intended for exportation, and for the due exportation of the wine so fortified, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and all of the provisions of law governing the exportation of distilled spirits free of tax, so far as applicable, shall apply to the withdrawal and use of wine-spirits and the exportation of the same in accordance with this section; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Treasury, to prescribe that wine-spirits intended for the fortification of wines under this section shall not be introduced into such wines except under the immediate supervision of an officer of internal revenue, who shall make returns describing the kinds and quantities of wine so fortified, and shall affix such stamps and seals to the packages containing such wines as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Whenever such wine-spirits are withdrawn as provided herein for the fortification of wines intended for exportation by sea, they shall be introduced into such wines only after removal from storage and arrival alongside of the vessel which is to transport the same; and whenever transportation of such wines is to be effected by land-carriage, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe such regulations as to sealing packages and vehicles containing the same, and as to supervision of transportation from the point of departure, which point shall be determined as the place where such wine-spirits may be introduced into such wines, to the point of destination, as may be necessary to insure the due exportation of such fortified wines.

"SEC. 8. That all provisions of law relating to the reimportation of any goods of domestic growth or manufacture which were originally liable to an internal-revenue tax shall be, as far as applicable, enforced against any domestic wines sought to be reimported; and duty shall be levied and collected upon the same to the extent of the distilled spirits contained therein which were originally liable to internal-revenue tax; and in case it is impracticable to determine the exact amount of such distilled spirits liable to tax, the rule for levying the duty thereon at the port of entry shall be by considering all the alcohol in such wines, other than sweet wines, in excess of 15 per cent., to be subject to duty at the rate of 90 cents per proof-gallon, or at the same rate for each fractional gallon; and all domestic wines containing more than 24 per cent. of alcohol sought to be reimported from foreign countries shall be classed as alcoholic liquors, and taxed at the port of entry at the rate of 90 cents per wine-gallon for each gallon of such liquors, if not exceeding in strength that of proof-spirits, and if exceeding the strength of proof-spirits, then at the rate of 90 cents per proof-gallon: Provided, however, That if any distilled spirits have been added to such wines of domestic growth after they have been exported to foreign ports, or if such wines have been compounded with any foreign wines or other substances not produced from grapes, the rate of duty levied and collected on the same, when reimported, shall be equal to that levied and collected on foreign products of a similar nature.

"SEC. 9. That any person using wine-spirits or other spirits which have not been tax-paid, in fortifying wine otherwise than as provided for in this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $2,000; and for every offense other than the first also by imprisonment for not less than thirty days nor more than one year.

"SEC. 10. That wine-spirits used in fortifying wines may be recovered from such wine only on the premises of a duly authorized grape-brandy distiller; and for the purpose of such recovery wines so fortified may be received as material on the premises of such a distiller, on a special permit of the collector of internal revenue in whose district the distillery is located; and the distiller will be held to pay the tax on a product from such wines as will include both the alcoholic strength therein produced by the fermentation of the grape-juice and that obtained from the added distilled spirits."

Resolved, That the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the said bill and amendments.

Ordered, That Mr. ALDRICH, Mr. JONES, of Nevada, and Mr. HARRIS be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Attest: ANSON G. McCOOK, Secretary,
By CHAS. W. JOHNSON, Chief Clerk.

IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES UNITED STATES, December 11, 1886.

Resolved, That the House non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4833) relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. MORRISON, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. McKINLEY be the managers of the said conference on the part of the House.

Attest: JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House No. 4833, relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1 and 2, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same amended to read as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following sections:

"SEC. 2. That the provisions of an act entitled 'An act relating to the production of fruit-brandy, and to punish frauds connected with the same,' approved March 3, 1877, to be extended and made applicable to brandy distilled from apples or peaches: Provided, That each of the warehouses established under said act, or which may hereafter be established, shall be in charge either of a storekeeper or of a storekeeper and gauger, at the discretion of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

"SEC. 3. There shall be an allowance of drawback of the tax, represented by tax-paid stamps, on wine-spirits, the product resulting from the distillation of fermented grape-juice, including the product commonly known as grape-brandy, used in the fortification of sweet wines manufactured for exportation and actually exported. The wine-spirits to be used must be received on the premises of the manufacturer of the wine, in the original distiller's packages to which the tax-paid stamps are affixed. The use of the wine-spirits, the manufacture and exportation of the wine, and the allowance of drawback shall be under such regulations, bonds, and bills of lading as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall from time to time prescribe. The penal sum of the bonds shall be equal to double the amount of the tax to be secured, and shall be with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the collector required by the regulations to take the bond. The sums found to be due under the provisions of this section shall be paid by the warrant of the Secretary of the Treasury on the Treasurer of the United States out of any money arising from internal duties not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the allowance of drawback shall be computed on the quantity of brandy in taxable proof gallons actually used from each package for the purpose herein authorized. And no claim for such drawback shall be entertained or allowed unless accompanied by such portion of the tax-paid stamp from each such package as shows the serial number thereof, the number of the package from which it was removed, the date of payment of tax, the name of the distiller, and the quantity of brandy contained in the package upon which tax has been paid, such portion of the tax-paid stamp to be removed by the United States gauger who determines the actual contents of the package at the time it is mingled with the wine. And every person who fraudulently claims, or seeks, or obtains an allowance of drawback on wine-spirits, or fraudulently claims any greater allowance or drawback than the tax actually paid thereon, shall forfeit and pay to the Government of the United States triple the amount wrongfully and fraudulently sought to be obtained, and shall be imprisoned not more than ten years; and every person who knowingly aids or abets in the fraudulent collection or fraudulent attempts to collect any drawback upon, or knowingly aids or permits any fraudulent shipment of, any wine-spirits or wine, shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 and imprisoned not more than one year. Every person who intentionally relands within the jurisdiction of the United States any wine which has been shipped for exportation under the provisions of this act, or who receives such relanded wine, and every person who aids and abets in such relanding or receiving of such wine, shall be fined not exceeding $5,000 and imprisonment not more than three years; and all wines so relanded, together with the vessel from which the same were relanded, within the jurisdiction of the United States, and all boats, vehicles, horses, or other animals used in relanding and removing such wines shall be forfeited to the United States.

"SEC. 4. That wine-spirits as herein described may be withdrawn from special bonded warehouses at the instance of any person desiring to use the same to fortify any wines, in accordance with commercial demands of foreign markets, when such wines are intended for exportation, without the payment of tax on the amount of wine-spirits used in such fortification, under such regulations, and after making such entries, and executing and filing with the collector of the district from which the removal is to be made such bonds and bills of lading, and giving such other additional security to prevent the use of such wine-spirits free of tax otherwise than in the fortification of wine intended for exportation, and for the due exportation of the wine so fortified, as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury; and all of the provisions of law governing the exportation of distilled spirits free of tax, so far as applicable, shall apply to the withdrawal and use of wine-spirits and the exportation of the same in accordance with this section; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is authorized, subject to approval by the Secretary of the Treasury, to prescribe that wine-spirits intended for the fortification of wines under this section shall not be introduced into such wines except under the immediate supervision of an officer of internal revenue, who shall make returns describing the kinds and quantities of wine so fortified, and shall affix such stamps and seals to the packages containing such wines as may be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury. Whenever such wine-spirits are withdraw as provided herein for the fortification of wines intended for exportation by sea, they shall be introduced into such wines only after removal from storage and arrival alongside of the vessel which is to transport the same; and whenever transportation of such wines is to be effected by land-carriage, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, shall prescribe such regulations as to sealing packages and vehicles containing the same, and as to supervision of transportation from the point of departure, which point shall be determined as the place where such wine-spirits may be introduced into such wines, to the point of destination, as may be necessary to insure the due exportation of such fortified wines.

"SEC. 5. That all provisions of law relating to the reimportation of any goods of domestic growth or manufacture which were originally liable to an internal-revenue tax shall be, as far as applicable, enforced against any domestic wines sought to be reimported; and duty shall be levied and collected upon the same to the extent of the distilled spirits contained therein which were originally liable to internal-revenue tax; and in case it is impracticable to determine the exact amount of such distilled spirits liable to tax, the rule for levying the duty thereon at the port of entry shall be by considering all the alcohol in such wines, other than sweet wines, in excess of 15 per cent., to be subject to duty at the rate of 90 cents per proof-gallon, or at the same rate for each fractional gallon; and all domestic wines containing more than 24 per cent. of alcohol sought to be reimported from foreign countries shall be classed as alcoholic liquors, and taxed at the port of entry at the rate of 90 cents per wine-gallon for each gallon of such liquors, if not exceeding in strength that of proof-spirits, and if exceeding the strength of proof-spirits, then at the rate of 90 cents per proof-gallon: Provided, however, That if any distilled spirits have been added to such wines of domestic growth after they have been exported to foreign ports, or if such wines have been compounded with any foreign wines or other substances not produced from grapes, the rate of duty levied and collected on the same, when reimported, shall be equal to that levied and collected on foreign products of a similar nature.

"SEC. 6. That any person using wine-spirits or other spirits which have not been tax-paid, in fortifying wine otherwise than as provided for in this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, on conviction thereof, be punished for each offense by a fine of not less than $200 nor more than $2,000, and for every offense other than the first also by imprisonment for not less than thirty days nor more than one year.

"SEC. 7. That wine-spirits used in fortifying wines may be recovered from such wine only on the premises of a duly authorized grape-brandy distiller; and for the purpose of such recovery wines so fortified may be received as material on the premises of such a distiller, on a special permit of the collector of internal revenue in whose district the distillery is located; and the distiller will be held to pay the tax on a product from such wines as will include both the alcoholic strength therein produced by the fermentation of the grape-juice and that obtained from the added distilled spirits."

Amend the title to read "An act providing for the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits, for the warehousing of fruit brandy, and for the fortification of wines.

And the Senate agree to the same.

STATEMENT.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., February 25, 1887.

The undersigned, managers on the part of the House, make the following statement in respect to the conference report on bill H. R. 4833, "relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits."

The Senate left the bill of the House unchanged in relation to taxing fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits, except as to the date when it is to take effect, but added amendments—

First. To extend to brandy made of apples and peaches the warehouse privileges now extended to brandy made of grapes.

Second. To allow the use of wine spirits (grape brandy) untaxed to be used in fortifying wines for export and for home consumption.

The report of the conferees as agreed upon leave the dates, warehousing provisions, and the provision for fortifying wine for export added by the Senate; the Senate to abandon its provision for fortifying wines to be sold and used at home.

W. R. MORRISON,
H. R. HARRIS.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

Mr. TURNER. I desire to submit the report of a conference committee, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, and agree to the bill of the House with the following amendment thereto in the nature of a substitute, as follows: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following in lieu thereof:

"That section 127 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be so amended as to read as follows:

"All officers taking testimony to be used in a contested-election case, whether by deposition or otherwise, shall, when the taking of the same is completed, and without unnecessary delay, certify and carefully seal and immediately forward the same, by mail or by express, addressed to the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the United States, Washington, D. C.; and shall also indorse upon the envelope containing such deposition or testimony the name of the case in which it is taken, together with the name of the party in whose behalf it is taken, and shall subscribe such indorsement.

"The Clerk of the House of Representatives, upon the receipt of such deposition or testimony, shall notify the contestant and the contestee, by registered letter through the mails, to appear before him at the Capitol, in person or by attorney, at a reasonable time to be named, not exceeding twenty days from the mailing of such letter, for the purpose of being present at the opening of the sealed packages of testimony and of agreeing upon the parts thereof to be printed. Upon the day appointed for such meeting the said Clerk shall proceed to open all the packages of testimony in the case, in the presence of the parties or their attorneys, and such portions of the testimony as the parties may agree to have printed shall be printed by the Public Printer, under the direction of the said Clerk, and in case of disagreement between the parties as to the printing of any portion of the testimony, the said Clerk shall determine whether such portion of the testimony shall be printed; and the said Clerk shall prepare a suitable index to be printed with the record. And the notice of contest and the answer of the sitting member shall also be printed with the record.

"If either party, after having been duly notified, should fail to attend, by himself or by an attorney, the Clerk shall proceed to open the packages, and shall cause such portions of the testimony to be printed as he shall determine.

"He shall carefully seal up and preserve the portions of the testimony not printed, as well as the other portions when returned from the Public Printer, and lay the same before the Committee on Elections at the earliest opportunity. As soon as the testimony in any case is printed the Clerk shall forward by mail, if desired, two copies thereof to the contestant and the same number to the contestee, and shall notify the contestant to file with the Clerk within thirty days a brief of the facts and the authorities relied on to establish his case. The Clerk shall forward by mail two copies of the contestant's brief to the contestee with like notice.

"Upon receipt of the contestee's brief the Clerk shall forward two copies thereof to the contestant, who may, if he desires, reply to new matter in the contestee's brief within like time. All briefs shall be printed at the expense of the parties respectively, and shall be of like folio as the printed record; and 60 copies thereof shall be filed with the Clerk for the use of the Committee on Elections."

The explanatory statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

Statement of the House conferees on the bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections:

The only material change in the bill agreed upon in conference from the House bill as it originally passed the House is the transfer of the duties that in the original House bill devolved upon the clerk of the Committee on Elections to the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

H. G. TURNER,
C. E. BOYLE,
SERENO E. PAYNE.
Managers on the part of the House.

The report of the committee of conference was adopted.

Mr. TURNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

BRANCH HOME FOR DISABLED SOLDIERS.

Mr. BRAGG. I rise to submit a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, with an amendment as follows: Amend by striking out the name of "James A. Waymire" and insert in lieu thereof the name of "William Blanding;" and the Senate agree to the same.

EDW. S. BRAGG,
C. M. ANDERSON,
JAS. S. NEGLEY,
Managers on the part of the House.
W. J. SEWELL,
JOS. R. HAWLEY,
WADE HAMPTON.
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement accompanying the report was read, as follows:

Mr. BRAGG, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on bill of the House No. 2075, to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains, submits the following report, to accompany the report of the conferees:

The original bill provided an appropriation of $100,000 for the erection of the Home. The Senate amendment increased this appropriation to $150,000, and added a section increasing the board of managers in number from nine to ten, and named James A. Waymire, of San Francisco, Cal., as the additional manager.

The conference agreed upon the sum of $150,000, as provided in the Senate amendment, and also upon the increase of the number of managers for the homes; but the house conferees named Capt. William Blanding as such additional member of the board of managers, and the Senate have concurred therein.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CONFERENCE ON RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 10419) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, Mr. WILLIS, Mr. BLANCHARD, and Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HERBERT. I move the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

For expenditure towards the construction and completion (exclusive of armament) of the five double-turreted monitors, the four vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1885, and the vessels authorized by the act of August 3, 1886, $2,500,000.

Mr. SAYERS. I move, after line 875, to insert the following:

The Clerk read as follows:

For the construction of two swift double-bottomed steel cruisers, each of about 4,300 tons displacement, of the type of the Newark, except boilers and machinery, four of about 1,700 tons displacement of the type of gunboat No. 1, each, and one swift torpedo-boat, said vessels to cost all together, exclusive of armament, not more than $4,950,000, the sum of $2,470,000 is hereby appropriated.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, that is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order is this: There is no law authorizing the construction of those vessels.

Mr. BUCK. I think the committee is in favor of this amendment.

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; this is offered on the part of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. BUCK. The committee considered this matter, and are in favor of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The appropriation is excessive now. There is no law authorizing the construction of these vessels.

Mr. HERBERT. The point of order is not well taken. This amendment does not change any law. It simply proposes to make an appropriation of money in accordance with existing law providing for a further increase of the Navy. The Navy exists by law, and the President has authority to give instructions in reference to and to control the construction of vessels. The Navy has been added to, from time to time, for the past hundred years.

And I claim we have the right to appropriate money for new ships; we have the right to appropriate money to be used in machine-shops in navy-yards, for machinery, or for guns, or for ships. Whoever supposed it was necessary to pass a special law authorizing the purchase of ordnance, or for the purchase of any one of these things I have mentioned. There is power under the general law for all such purposes. We have the right by virtue of the general law. All that is required is appropriation of money. Congress has not only the right to appropriate money in this bill for the support of the Navy, but it has also the right to designate the specific or particular purpose for which each appropriation is made.

Look at the bill just reported by the honorable gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]—the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill—and you will find a dozen, perhaps a hundred, items not specifically mentioned in any law passed by this Government. They are appropriated for without the passage of a law specifically naming them, because they are necessary to carry on the functions of the Government. It is not necessary there should be a law specifically naming any one of them. They are under the fostering care of the Government. For instance, the Navy exists by law. There are officers, about eight hundred in number, appropriated for year by year, and about seven thousand men and boys appropriated for year by year. They are the foundation of the Navy. Ships are necessary for these officers and men, just as ordnance is necessary for the ships, or the machine-shops are necessary for the repairs of the ships. So I say it is clear that the point of order is not well taken. The Navy exists by law, and we have the right to increase it by appropriations specifying the purposes for which we devote the money.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. RICHARDSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate insisted on its amendment disagreed to by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. 10793) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department, &c., and asked a further conference thereon, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK managers on the part of the Senate.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, if the views of my friend from Alabama be correct, then it follows that there is no limit whatever upon the appropriation of money which may be made to carry on the business of any department of the Government. I think that view, however, will hardly prevail. I concede that where a work has been entered upon, for instance, in the construction of a ship, that then the appropriation may be made in accordance with our rules, and properly made from time to time for its completion. This bill, in harmony with that rule of practice adopted by the House, contains, as will be seen, some four or five appropriations of money to carry on such existing works. These are not subject to the point of order, of course, for the reason I have stated.

Every vessel provided for now, named in this bill, for which appropriation is made for the completion or continuation of work upon it, is a vessel that has been already provided for by law, beginning with the act of 1882, and the appropriation is made in pursuance of law. But there has been no law passed authorizing the construction of either of the vessels named in this amendment.

I therefore submit that under the third clause of Rule XXI in express terms this provision is not allowable on an appropriation bill, but is subject to and must be ruled out on the point of order. It is not, as the Chair will observe, the continuation of a public work. I repeat, if such work had been entered upon in pursuance of law heretofore made, the appropriation would properly be carried by this bill, but not otherwise. And this rule is imperative.

You can not construct a public building without authority of law. You could not provide for the construction of your public buildings in a general appropriation bill without making every provision of that character subject to the point of order; and yet the construction of our public buildings is but a part of a general system of buildings being ordered by law and carried forward under the auspices of the Treasury Department. Nevertheless, although the system has been entered upon, you can not construct a building without previous law. I care not how inconsiderable the expenditure may be that you provide in an appropriation bill, the authority for such expenditure must precede the appropriation of money or be contemporaneous with the appropriation.

You can not upon one of these appropriation bills make provision for a public officer at a salary of $2,000 a year or any other sum, unless previously provided for by law. I concede that instances have occurred where by unanimous consent, without objection, in the House legislative provisions have from time to time been ingrafted upon appropriation bills. But every provision not directly authorized by law is, under the rule to which I have referred, unquestionably subject to the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, it would be a remarkable fact indeed if a ship costing millions of dollars, an enormous expenditure like that proposed here of upwards of $4,000,000 for the construction of specific vessels, naming their character—I say it would be a remarkable fact if the appropriation could be made and their construction proceeded with on an appropriation bill where no previous law has authorized it. If it can be done here, so far as this bill is concerned it is taken from under the operation of this rule, which has no application to any of its provisions; and it is eminently fit and proper that in the appropriation of large sums of money the Committee on Appropriations of the House should be confined to the proper performance of its legitimate duties, that is, the appropriation of money heretofore authorized by existing law. I hold, therefore, that until the law is passed the appropriation can not be made; and I ask the Clerk to read the third clause of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto for any expenditure not previously authorized by law unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to add one word further. The construction the gentleman from Alabama insists shall be put upon the rule is, that if this is a public work in progress, then the appropriation here is proper and not subject to the point of order; and that this is a public work in progress, that it is the continuation of the increase of the navy. Why, Mr. Chairman, if that logic prevails the same may be said of every public building, every public office, for which appropriation is made in any appropriation bill. Every ship, I admit, is a part of the navy, but it is as separate and distinct an object of appropriation as any public building or any public office.

The CHAIRMAN. The general rule has been stated by the gentleman from Indiana. It is laid down in subsection 3 of Rule XXI, and provides that—

3. No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law.

But to that general rule there is an express exception, as follows:

Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

That is to say, if the work be a public work, or if the object is a public object, and it is already in progress, then there need not be any previous legislation authorizing it. The Chair believes that the construction of a navy is a public object or a public work, and the language of the bill which we have been considering, and the appropriation made at the last session show that the construction of the Navy is in progress. It may be said, also, that the proposed amendment providing money for the construction of vessels does not change existing law, and is not prohibited by law.

It is very agreeable to the present occupant of the chair to be able to refer to a precedent bearing upon the point of order now raised. In the Forty-sixth Congress (Mr. CARLISLE in the chair) it was decided "that appropriations for public works and objects" already in progress could be included in general appropriation bills or could be inserted as amendments; and that the word "objects" meant something in addition to the word "works," and must be held to include the public Departments of the Government, and the civil, military, and naval establishments recognized by law and supported by the Government. The Government has undertaken to maintain, and is annually maintaining, a naval establishment, and under the rule appropriations may be made for it in a general appropriation bill, and such has always been the practice until last session, when appropriations for the construction of ships for the Navy and armaments for them were made in a separate bill. Before the last session such appropriations were made in the naval appropriation bill, under the rule exactly as it now is.

There is no law prescribing the number of ships that shall constitute the Navy, or the number of guns they shall carry. Those matters depend entirely on the amount of money appropriated for those purposes, just as the number of clerks and other employés in the Departments depend upon the appropriations made.

The present Speaker of the House, as has been stated, has already ruled on this point of order, and the Chair believes the ruling was correct, and feels it his duty to decide this question in accordance with that ruling. This decision allows an important amendment to be offered, but it gives to the Committee of the Whole the right to pass upon this interesting question, and an opportunity to say whether it is in favor of increasing the Navy or not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to make this inquiry, not having the ruling referred to before me: Whether that ruling referred to a specific authority to construct a vessel of war by name and specification; whether it made a specific appropriation of money for a specific object, as a public building or a public ship.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say to the gentleman from Indiana that he read the exact language used by the present Speaker. The present chairman of the Committee of the Whole does not feel justified in reversing a decision made by the present Speaker of the House which he believes correct.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that if this is a work in progress all public works may be so considered and may be specifically appropriated for in appropriation bills. And all public offices stand upon the same footing. For it may be said upon the same principle that they are in continuation of public works and in continuation of a Department of the Government. I submit that any such interpretation of the rule is destructive to any limitations restricting new legislation upon appropriation bills.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not willing to admit that the construction given to the rule by the Chair does not break down all barriers as to appropriation bills. If I understood the Chair he decided that his construction referred to an increase of the Navy only.

The CHAIRMAN. That only.

Mr. RANDALL. And the Chair cited a precedent for his construction of the rule in that connection. I only rose to say that the precedent cited seems to bear out the occupant of the chair in his construction, but I do not want it shall be admitted that it goes any further than an increase of the Navy, as the gentleman from Indiana would seem to think.

The CHAIRMAN. That is as far as the Chair intended to decide. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the amendment may be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SAYERS rose.

Mr. STORM. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STORM. In the decision of this question, did the Chair take into consideration the fact that the rules governing this body in the Forty-sixth Congress were different from those governing the present House?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the rule governing the Forty-sixth Congress, so far as this ruling is concerned, was identically the same as the rule cited by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not desire to occupy the time of the committee in speaking in support of the amendment further than to say that the Committee on Naval Affairs for some time had under consideration a bill for the increase of the Navy, and the amendment is the substance of the reported bill. I desire to have the Clerk read a portion of the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS], so far as it refers to vessels of the Newark type, and also the type of Gunboat No. 1.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Newark is the latest and best type of a modern man-of-war of the 4,000-tons-displacement class, and if supplied with triple expansion engines and the best modern boilers and machinery, will undoubtedly be the best and swiftest vessel of her class in the world. Two of this type, to cost not exceeding $1,300,000 each, are recommended.

The vessel of the 1,700-tons-displacement class, known as Gunboat No. 1, is the heaviest-armed gunboat in the world, and will probably have a speed of nearly 19 knots per hour, and the ability to overtake or escape from 99 per cent. of all the vessels of the navies or merchant marines of the world. Four of this type, to cost not exceeding $550,000 each, are recommended.

As torpedo-boats can be speedily built when needed, your committee have thought best to recommend the building of only one at this time, to serve as a pattern, in case a large number should be needed hereafter. The pneumatic dynamite-gun torpedo-boat now being constructed by the Government promises to be a most terrible and effective engine of modern warfare, and will probably supersede all other types of the larger torpedo-boat, in case the expectations of the inventor and the Navy Department are realized when the vessel is completed and tested.

At least a year must elapse after the close of this Congress before a bill can properly be considered and passed authorizing the construction of war vessels; therefore your committee urge upon the House, with the greatest possible earnestness, the imperative necessity for providing at once for building the vessels suggested in the substitute.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, at the proper time I desire to offer a substitute for that amendment. If this is the proper time I will send it to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can send it up and let it be read.

The amendment was read, as follows:

That the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, by contract, ten protected steel cruisers, with such armament for each as the Navy Department may deem suitable, each of said vessels to have a maximum speed of not less than 20 knots over the measured mile, such speed to be exhibited under such test or tests and conditions as the Navy Department may impose. The cost of all of said cruisers, in the aggregate, complete, exclusive of armament, shall not be more than $15,000,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during five years from March 4, 1887. That in the construction of the aforesaid vessels all of the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled "An act to increase the naval establishment," as to material for said vessels, their engines, boilers, and machinery, the contracts under which they are built, the notice of and proposals for the same, the plans, drawings, and specifications therefor, and the method of executing said contracts, shall be observed and followed, and said vessels shall be built in compliance with the terms of said act, so far as the same relate to vessels constructed under contract, save that in all their parts they shall be of domestic manufacture. The contracts for the construction of said vessels shall contain provisions to the effect that the contractor guarantees that when completed and tested for speed, under conditions to be prescribed by the Navy Department, the vessel shall exhibit a maximum speed of at least 20 knots per hour; and for every quarter knot of speed so exhibited above said guarantee the contractor shall receive a premium over and above his contract-price of $50,000, and for every quarter knot that said vessel fails of reaching said guarantee speed there shall be deducted from the contract-price the sum of $50,000; and for the purposes provided in this section the sum of $2,000,000, or so much of the same as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

That for the armament of the vessels hereinbefore provided for the sum of $4,800,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during five years from March 4, 1887. In making proposals for contracts for building the vessels authorized to be constructed under this act, it shall be required that three of such vessels shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, three of them on or near the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, or the waters connecting therewith, and four of them on or near the coast of the Atlantic Ocean, or the waters connecting therewith, and at such places on or near such coasts or waters as the Secretary of the Navy shall approve. If it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for said contracts, when the same are opened and examined by him, that said vessels can not be constructed at a fair cost on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or the Gulf of Mexico, he shall suspend the construction of the vessels herein required to be built on or near said coasts, or either of them, until the further action of Congress, and shall report the reasons for such suspension to Congress with all convenient dispatch.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I recognize the amendment of my colleague from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] as a step in the right direction. I am heartily in favor of the result which he seeks to accomplish. My only criticism is not as to the essence of the proposition, but simply that it does not go far enough. In the debate which we had here yesterday there was a disposition manifested by a part of the House to refuse to expend the amount of money required to repair even a few of our wooden vessels, the refusal being based upon the ground that we ought to be provided with modern ships for all the purposes of the Navy. I believe in that. Every man who has examined the question or given any thought to the necessities of our situation knows perfectly well that we require more ships than have been contracted for, and more ships than will be provided by the amendment of my friend from Texas. We want a fleet of naval ships. We want them as fast as they can be built properly.

We have in this country all the facilities required for building ships. We have at this time, as never before, ample money in the Treasury of the United States to build them. There are in this country to-day large masses of the laboring population ready to go to work upon this great business of building up the American Navy. This bill provides for building simply ten of these steel cruisers. Everybody understands that we need more than ten, and there is no valid reason why we should not begin now to make at least that contribution toward the rehabilitation of the American Navy.

This is a national proposition. This bill provides that three of these ships shall be built upon the Gulf coast, if possible; that three of them shall be built upon the Pacific coast, if possible, and that four shall be built upon the Atlantic coast; thereby enabling all parts of our common country to unite in the work, furnishing an opportunity for the great iron industry of Alabama and other sections of the South to find practical application in the building of our war ships, furnishing incentive and stimulus to the enterprise of the men who have built up great ship-building establishments upon the Pacific coast, and also furnishing incentive and stimulus to the great ship-building establishments of our North Atlantic seaboard. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is not an excessive contribution to ask at this time from the Congress of the United States toward this great work. The building of these ships will be a work of years. The construction of these vessels and the fitting of them with their armament is a work that will require years for its accomplishment, and unless we begin now to make an adequate contribution to the work we shall go on for the next eight or ten or fifteen years in the same state of practical inefficiency.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DINGLEY was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, we have already accomplished so much of the work of beginning the rehabilitation of our Navy as consists in the comparison of plans and the completion of designs. The Secretary of the Navy tells us that we have already, by study of foreign ships and models and by stimulating the inventive genius of our naval architects, engineers, and experts, secured plans for the construction of steel cruisers which, when completed, will be superior in all the attributes of a vessel of war of that description to anything that is now afloat.

This bill does not necessitate the laborious completion of new plans. It does not propose any experiment. It simply proposes that we shall do now just as we have done in the periods of the greatest success of our Navy. It proposes that, having secured a fine type of ship, an approved design and model of a war ship, we shall go to work and put afloat a fleet of vessels representing that design and model; just as we did in the time of the Merrimac, the Wabash, the Minnesota, and the Richmond.

When our Naval Construction Bureau had completed the designs of that class of ships, we went to work and put afloat a fleet of ships built upon that model; and those vessels carried the flag of this country to all the nations of Europe, and became the envy of the naval constructors of the world. After the model of those ships, even England herself, claiming to be the "mistress of the seas," copied the great fleet of war ships which she built for the Crimean war.

I propose that we shall do now just as we have done before—be sure we are right, and then go ahead. We have now under contract, or at least have the designs completed, for a steel cruiser which our naval experts, the Secretary of the Navy, and all who are most interested and best informed, assure us will be superior to any vessel afloat. Now, let us have ten such ships. Let us have them built by contract. Let us give the necessary authority to the Democratic administration, which is responsible for the executive management of the Government of the country. Let us give this administration authority and power commensurate with the responsibility we place upon it.

The Democratic party claim that they desire to rehabilitate the American Navy. I want to assure my friends on the other side that if they intend to do this they must utilize the brief period of their authority. You can not do a great deal in two years toward building up a navy, if you do your best. If you do anything less than your best, you will fail to improve your opportunity. This proposition provides simply for a reasonable addition to the Navy of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee rose informally, when a message from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 10305) to increase the appropriation for the public building at Brooklyn, N. Y.

An act (H. R. 7775) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.

An act (H. R. 7508) granting the right of way to the Annapolis and Baltimore Short-Line Railroad Company across the Government farm connected with the Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union resumed its session.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, this proposition of the committee is the substance of a bill carefully considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs and reported to the House during the present session by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS]. It provides for the construction of ships, which altogether, exclusive of armament, are to cost not more than $4,950,000. The limit of the cost of the whole of them is within $5,000,000. The limit, as I understand, proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Maine is $15,000,000. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, after full reflection, that the Committee on Naval Affairs was right in limiting the cost of the new ships to be constructed to less than $5,000,000. We certainly do need more ships, but we need to go slowly in that direction. We ought not only to utilize the experience of foreign nations, but we ought also ourselves to acquire carefully experience as we progress.

The ships here provided for are not of a large class. Four of them are what we called in a former bill, passed at the close of the Forty-eighth Congress, gunboats of 1,700 tons each. A model for these gunboats has been constructed and a contract let, so that a seventeen-hundred-ton "steel cruiser," as it is denominated in this bill, will, we know, cost altogether, exclusive of armament, less than $550,000. The ships we had in former times when they were made of wood, such as the Wabash and the Minnesota, cost more money than that. We propose in this bill the construction of four ships of that kind. As cruising vessels they will take the places of the ships now so rapidly dropping out of use. Four of our vessels were condemned during the last year; and I think five have been or will be condemned during the present fiscal year. Our old navy is rapidly passing away. It is really worthless; and we propose gradually to replace it with a better one.

I do not think it would be advisable to build ten ships at once, costing as much as $15,000,000; but I do think we can afford now to begin the construction of six new vessels and one torpedo-boat, the cost of these being not less than four and a half million dollars. The House ought to understand just here how many ships we have authorized by law to come into use when they are constructed. I have the list.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes, sir.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I understand that this bill already carries from nine to ten million dollars altogether for ships—I mean the bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. HERBERT. Let me answer that question. For ordnance for all ships that have been authorized and for armor of all ships that have been authorized, an appropriation is made in full in this bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is for the increase of the navy—the immediate increase?

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman, I hope, will permit me to finish my answer. I am answering him just as directly as I can, and I hope the answer will be satisfactory. It will, at any rate, give the facts, whether they be satisfactory or not. We appropriate $6,128,000, I believe, for all the ordnance of ships heretofore authorized and for armament of vessels heretofore authorized. In addition to that we appropriate two and a half million dollars toward the further construction of vessels heretofore authorized. These amounts put together make $8,628,000. The whole of this sum can not be expended in less than three years.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, obtained the floor and said: In order that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] may continue his explanation I yield him my five minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, then, Mr. Chairman, these $8,600,000 can not all be expended within less than three years; but it is necessary to appropriate it now in order to have contracts made advantageously.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I can understand that; but what do we want five millions, ten millions, or fifteen millions for? What is that for? The gentleman from Maine says it will give employment to some men to make iron. It would be the same if it were sunk in the ocean.

Mr. BOUTELLE. It would give us a navy. We want something to float on the ocean.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. We want an answer to the question.

Mr. HERBERT. I want to answer every question. I want to put the House in full possession of all the facts.

I have completed my answer to the other question. All the ships authorized last year, monitors to be armored, would cost all together about $14,000,000. The amount appropriated in this bill to which the gentleman has just called my attention would be in full for all ships heretofore authorized except two and a half millions of dollars to be appropriated. That is an answer to the question.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What do you want to do?

Mr. HERBERT. The second question is why do we want any more? The answer to that is, we have authorized in the Forty-seventh Congress, the Forty-eighth Congress, and the Forty-ninth Congress altogether these ten cruisers, five to be armored battle-ships, and four monitors, and provided for two small torpedo-boats. We have only authorized ten cruisers. This authorizes six more. That will make sixteen.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What has been done on the ten cruisers—anything?

Mr. HERBERT. Yes; the Dolphin is already built. The Chicago, the Boston, and Atlanta will soon be completed.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Has not the money for all these cruisers been appropriated heretofore or in the bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. No; not a dollar in the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. The money has been appropriated.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How much?

Mr. HERBERT. What is required for these ten cruisers has been appropriated. One million eight hundred and ninety-five thousand dollars is appropriated here. Two million five hundred thousand dollars was appropriated the last time.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How much more will be required to complete the ten cruisers?

Mr. HERBERT. About $2,500,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. How long will it take?

Mr. HERBERT. About three years. Now let us put the two questions together.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. That is right.

Mr. HERBERT. When you add that money together, $14,000,000, and $2,500,000 appropriated in the Forty-eighth Congress, and other cruisers which will cost about $5,000,000, we will have authorized the expenditure of $19,000,000 during the four years since the first was authorized.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it proposed to appropriate money enough to build all these vessels?

Mr. HERBERT. I have answered the gentleman when I tell him——

Mr. GOFF. What bill?

Mr. HERBERT. The appropriation bill proposes to appropriate money to build them all, with the exception of $2,500,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. What is the necessity of appropriating that amount.

Mr. McMILLIN. When it can not be expended.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Yes, when it can not be expended for three years.

Mr. HERBERT. One reason is this: We can use $2,500,000 on construction and ordnance and armor. We require this money so we can make advantageous contracts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. LORE. The American people are very far in advance of Congress in respect to an American navy, and I for one am heartily in favor of preparing ourselves to meet any attacks which may come upon us from the ocean. We have no fear of any of the nations on this continent. Whenever the attack may come, it will come from across the seas. The American people almost unitedly are at the door of Congress to-day asking for something with which we may meet the foe away from our coast when he comes.

The only limitation that occurs to me in building our Navy to-day depends on questions of wise economy of means and ends in view. The questions frame themselves in this wise: How much money can we now appropriate and advantageously use with all the plants that we have and may reach in the building up of a navy?

The committee after a careful examination of this subject have settled upon the number of vessels that are represented in this amendment. A larger amount probably could not be advantageously used. More vessels could not be built by all public and private plants in the country.

There is another reason and with me a very pregnant one. I am not sure that to-day the best type of the American vessel is the one we now have. If the dynamite gun prove a success the vessel you are building to-day may become a creature of the past; one that will have no future usefulness.

Again, there are types of vessels proposed which deserve the most careful examination. I hold in my hand here a description of one that is already suggested by Robert M. Fryer, a distinguished naval architect of New York. He proposed to build a vessel similar to the model of the Herreschoff celebrated Stiletto, but greatly modified. He guarantees it shall cross the Atlantic Ocean in six days, and that it shall have a speed of 25 knots an hour.

If that be so, if this be a success, then even our present type of cruiser will not meet the national need of a first-class navy. We may be just on the eve of a revolution in the improvements of our naval architecture, just as we were at the time when the Merrimac and Monitor met and the whole system of naval architecture was changed by one single combat. There is another gentleman, a fellow-countryman of Ericcson, the man who built the Monitor, I am speaking now of Lundborg, another Swedish marine architect who has come to our shore, who has brought to us his brains and his lifelong skill and experience, and has become a citizen, anxious to aid in making us once more the leading naval power. He has a model of vessel which is approved by many of the European naval architects and even by our own Chief Constructor, Mr. Wilson. It is certainly approved by many of the ship-builders of this continent. If that be a success we may have in that respect a revolution in our naval architecture, as it differs widely from prevailing types.

Then, sir, if from these causes the model of our modern ships shall be changed, how unwise would it be to build up so large a fleet as the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] suggests on present models. We are heartily with him in the desire to build up an American navy; but we want to go safely in the light of modern developments; we want to know what is the best and highest type of the American steamship that will meet the naval exigencies of to-day. Those exigencies change with changing condition. We should take advantage of the combined experience and skill of all the marine architects of the day. Then we shall have that class of vessels that will meet any of the exigencies that may happen and place us in the van of nations.

For these reasons I am in favor of the amendment of the committee. Do not let us burden this bill in such a way that we shall not get so much of a navy as will place us on an equal footing with fourth-rate naval powers.

I append to my remarks a notice of "the coming American steamship" to which I have referred. It is from the New York Commercial News of February 26:

THE POCAHONTAS—THE COMING AMERICAN STEAMSHIP—ACROSS THE ATLANTIC IN SIX DAYS—MARINE ARCHITECTURE REVOLUTIONIZED.

There is at last a certainty that the English, French, and German steamship lines will cease to control the passenger traffic of the Atlantic to the at present complete exclusion of the American flag. The Arrow Steamship Company, which was incorporated nearly three years ago, and has been quietly perfecting its plans ever since, has now begun actual work on the pioneer vessel of a new line, to carry the American flag between New York and Liverpool. This pioneer vessel will be named the Pocahontas, and will be of an entirely new type of marine architecture, and of such a model and of such power that she will readily be able to make 25 miles an hour. The inventor and patentee of the system is Mr. Robert M. Fryer, a distinguished mechanical engineer of this city, and he is the engineer in chief of the Arrow Steamship Company. The list of officers, &c., is as follows: T. O'Meara, president; W. H. Clarkson, secretary; David A. Curtis, corresponding secretary: M. M. Searing, treasurer; Robert M. Fryer, engineer-in-chief.

James H. Connelly, T. S. Weaver, with the president, executive committee.

The principal offices of the company are in the Boreel Building, 115 Broadway, and a reporter for this paper yesterday called there, and some interesting details relative to the plans of the company were obtained.

The length of the Pocahontas over all is 540 feet; between perpendiculars, 515 feet; beam, 40 feet; extreme depth, 46 feet; draught at bow, 20 feet, and at stern 25 feet 3 inches; tonnage, 5,200 tons; capacity of engines, 12,000 nominal horse power, with capability for development to 27,000. From her bow, which is almost as sharp as a knife-blade, she slopes back 207 feet to her amidship section, and from that tapers again a like distance to her stern. Her model is almost that of Herreshoff's famous launch, the Stiletto, that has a record of 23.7 miles per hour—a speed never until now attained by any other vessel. But while the greatest amidship sectional area of the Pocahontas is only 18.2 times as great as that of the Stiletto, her engine power is 21.3 times as great, without forcing it beyond the requirements of ordinary service.

As the reader may suppose, such a vessel as this is not designed for freight carrying, but for an express passenger service. General John Newton, of Hell-Gate fame, one of the foremost of living authorities upon matters of this kind, says that there is no question but a vessel built according to Mr. Fryer's designs can easily sustain a speed of 25 miles an hour.

It has only been claimed for the fastest Atlantic steamship now afloat—the Etruria—that she has made a fraction over 20 miles per hour, and she has actually demonstrated her ability to make a little more than 19 miles an hour; so that with a steamer like the Pocahontas to begin with, there is not the least doubt but the ocean traffic of the world would soon be completely revolutionized. The system of construction can not be used by any other company, the most complete protection by letters patent having been secured in all countries in which steamship building is a possible thing.

One great obstacle to American steamship building heretofore has been in the cost of the iron, which is greater than the amount that has to be paid by the ship-builders of the Mersey, the Tyne, or the Clyde. The Arrow Steamship Company have overcome this difficulty. They are contracting for sufficient supplies of Tennessee and Alabama iron, which can be obtained for much less than Pitisburgh or other Northern iron, and considerably less than the iron employed in English iron-ship building. A yard in which to build the Pocahontas has been secured at Alexandria, Va. Her ways are in process of building, and in about ten days from now the actual laying of her keel will be commenced, and it is expected that she will be launched with her engines and boilers in by next November. It would take up several pages of this issue to give anything like an accurate description of all the features of this wonderful vessel. But it must be said that the newspapers are enthusiastic in their praises of this stupendous undertaking. The Maritime Reporter, the representative journal of the shipping interest of America, is jubilant about it. It says:

"It would not be possible at this stage of the world's progress to produce anything else than such a vessel as this that would so seriously affect such a vast amount of European invested capital; that would be likely to influence such stupendous changes in existent national and commercial relations, and that would be so glorious a triumph for Americans. This is speaking simply of what she will do as a peaceful passenger carrier. But the same principles that apply in her construction to make her perfect for that use are of equal and inestimable value—in the opinion of the most capable engineers and naval constructors in New York and Washington who have carefully studied her plans—for the building of the ideal war ship, one that shall develop such velocity, strength to resist and power to attack, as have never heretofore been deemed possible."

The highest praise is due to Mr. Fryer, who for twenty-two years has made the designing of such a ship the object of his life. He is a native of Albany, N. Y., and in youth was a marine engineer, and in later years has been consulting and constructing engineer to various important concerns all over the country. It is certain that his name will go down to future generations in the pages of history with the names of Watt, Morse, Stephenson, and Fulton.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. The question has been asked several times as to the number of vessels already authorized by law, vessels comprising what is known as the new or the modern navy. We have what is known as the five double-turreted monitors, the Amphitrite, the Monadnock, the Terror, the Miantonomoh, and the Puritan, which are still incomplete. All of these vessels are afloat. The boilers and machinery of all except the Monadnock have been finished and are in the vessels. The armor has been purchased and is now being put on the Miantonomoh. The armor for the other four double-turreted monitors has not yet been contracted for or manufactured.

As I said before, the machinery of the Monadnock (which is at the Mare Island navy-yard) has not yet been completed. Provision is made in this appropriation bill for the completion of these five monitors.

The next vessels were those authorized by the act of March 3, 1883, known as the Dolphin, the Boston, the Chicago, and the Atlanta. All four of those vessels are afloat.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How much time will be required to finish the five monitors?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I am asked what length of time will be required to complete the five monitors. Six months will complete the Miantonomoh so far as everything except her guns is concerned. Two years at least will be required to make the guns for the Miantonomoh. It will require at least two years more to complete the Amphitrite, the Terror, the Puritan, and the Monadnock.

As I have just stated, the four vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1883, were the Chicago, the Boston, the Dolphin, and the Atlanta. Those vessels were authorized by the Forty-seventh Congress, were built under the direction of the Naval Advisory Board, and are all afloat with machinery complete. The Dolphin and the Atlanta are in commission; the Boston will be in commission within three weeks. The protective armor and guns for all these vessels are about complete.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I will yield for a question, but I have only five minutes.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What armament has the Atlanta?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Two 8-inch guns and six 6-inch high-power breech-loading rifles, the best guns of modern construction.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I asked the question because we were advised that 10-inch steel guns had been put on the Atlanta, and that she had been compelled to return on account of defects in her guns.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. It never was proposed to put a 10 or a 12 inch gun on the Atlanta. She was designed for two 8-inch guns, and six 6-inch high-power breech-loading rifle guns. There never has been a 10-inch high-power rifle built in the United States. There is not one in the United States at this time. The largest modern high-power breech-loading rifles are the 8-inch guns, the guns built for the Atlanta, the Boston, and the Chicago. There are two 10-inch guns in course of construction at the navy-yard here, which are to be used for the Miantonomoh, when completed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having answered the gentleman's question, I will say to him that no such gun has ever been built in the United States as that about which he has asked me, to say nothing of its having been put on board the Atlanta. There was at one time a report that one of the 8-inch guns constructed at the navy-yard here had been tested and found defective. That was a misrepresentation.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED was recognized, and yielded to Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I thank the gentleman. Mr. Chairman, the test to which the gun was put showed that our officers had reached the very acme in gun construction. Both the 8-inch guns and the 6-inch guns reached the highest initial velocity and showed the greatest penetrating power of any guns ever built in any land, and it is unfortunate that we have so few of them.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is what is the matter.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. We have not enough of them and we have not the plant at present to build them fast enough.

Mr. REED. We have got the money.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Yes, we have plenty of money in the Treasury, and I hope that this Congress will appropriate enough to build not only ships but guns for our Navy.

Mr. Chairman, to proceed, under the act of 1885 there were authorized to be built four other vessels, and by the act of August 3, 1886, six additional vessels. One of these vessels is known as gunboat No. 2, and is of 780 tons displacement. It is armed with most effective high-power guns, and is of the usual modern type of gunboat. That vessel is being built now at Baltimore under a contract recently entered into.

The next is what is known as gunboat No. 1, having a displacement of 1,700 tons. It is to be armed with six 6-inch high-power rifles, two 5-inch high-power rifles, single-shot Hotchkiss guns, 57 millimeter revolving cannon, and a lot of torpedo appliances. It will be the heaviest armed gunboat in the world. It is provided with deflective armor running fore and aft and athwart-ships. There is no more reason why it should be called a gunboat than that the Great Eastern should be so called. It is a sloop of war in all that goes to make up a sloop of war, and one of the best types of that size ever designed by man.

The next is what is known as the Newark. She is a 4,000-ton vessel, designed to have triple expansion engines, modern machinery, and to have a speed approximating 19 knots an hour. She is provided with protective armor of 3-inch steel, running fore and aft and athwart-ships. She is provided with 6-inch high-power, breech-loading guns; has two-thirds sail-power; has all the modern appliances of a naval man-of-war, and will be the fleetest of all the cruisers afloat in the world to-day. Then comes the vessel known as the Charleston, which is of the type of the Naniwakan, that celebrated vessel built by Sir William Armstrong & Co. for the Japanese Government. I did not deem it an act of profound wisdom to adopt that vessel as a model, as she is built in what I should call a slop-shop fashion.

She is on the Chatham Street order. The problem presented to Sir William Armstrong, the designer of the vessel, was, "For how small an amount can you build a vessel that will go so many knots an hour?" This being what was required, he built the celebrated Naniwakan. She was made to cost the least possible sum consistent with reaching the required rate of speed. She is a fancy ship, magnificent in external appearances, but no more to be compared with the Newark in point of endurance, efficiency, and all that goes to make up a first-class man-of-war than the average American citizen is to be compared to a Digger Indian. But she is in course of construction now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH obtained the floor, and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. The next vessel is one that is being constructed by Cramp & Sons, at Philadelphia. It was known across the water as No. 27, and has sometimes been facetiously referred to in English literature as "The Rejected." It is the plan of vessel designed by Sir William Armstrong for the Spanish Government. But that government, on looking her over, concluded she was not what they desired for their navy; and so she was rejected. The present Secretary of the Navy bought the designs, the drawings, and the working model of this rejected No. 27, and also of the Naniwakan; and those two vessels are now in course of construction. They will undoubtedly have a high rate of speed and be infinitely more efficient as men-of-war than anything we now have, except those vessels which have been built according to American designs.

We have also two armored vessels authorized by the act of August 3, 1886. Those vessels were proposed to be built after the type of the Riachuela, a celebrated ship recently built in England for the Brazilian Government, and which is said to be one of the finest armored cruising vessels in the world. She has reached the highest rate of speed, and is the best protected so far as armor is concerned, and has the best fighting capacity of any armored cruising vessel in the world. For, mark you, there is a distinction between what is known as an ironclad and an armored cruiser. This vessel (the Riachuela) has reached a speed of about 18 knots an hour. She is armed with very heavy modern ordnance.

These two vessels are to be of 6,000 tons displacement, and are to cost, exclusive of armament, $2,500,000 each. Neither of these vessels has yet been contracted for, the plans having not yet been completed. The contract for building the Newark has not yet been let, although the plans, specifications, and working drawings have all been adopted. Then there is what is known as a first-class torpedo-boat authorized by the act of August 6, 1886. That vessel has not yet been built, nor have the plans been finally adopted by the Department.

Mr. REED. Has the armament for the 6,000-ton ships been decided upon?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I think not; I am not certain. I believe, on reflection, that the Department has finally determined (but it has not yet been made public) what the armament for the 6,000-ton ironclads shall be.

Mr. REED. That must have been decided by the Department, if it has issued the plans.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. The plans for those vessels have not been issued. Plans for the construction of the armor and the gun metal have been issued, but as for the ships, I think the plans have not finally been adopted. In fact, I am informed by the Department that they have not been, although they are almost completed and are about ready to be submitted to the board for adoption.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What is the character of the torpedo-gun which is contemplated?

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. It was proposed that the torpedo-boat should be built after the plan of the "Thornycroft" torpedo-boats which have been employed by the English and French Governments.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am speaking of the character of the torpedo-gun itself.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. That has not yet been determined. There is a great contest going on as to what sort of torpedoes we shall have.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] has told us in substance that we must live on light and love; that we must rest on the consciousness of our glorious manhood; that in this way we must be prepared to meet the peerless navy of Great Britain, the almost incomparable navy of France, and the navy of Spain, which is to-day threatened to be used against us in order to coerce us into the adoption of a certain commercial treaty. We are told that we must stand up and offer as a defense against all this naval and military force of the English, the French, the German, the Spanish, and the South American countries that "manhood" which is so glorious to contemplate but which would be so totally ineffectual in case our cities should be laid under contribution.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. MCADOO obtained the floor.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] to withhold his remarks for a moment. I wish to see if we can not agree upon some limitation of the debate on this amendment and the amendments thereto. Can we not, by common consent, agree that after thirty minutes more of debate on all these propositions we shall have a vote. I need not remind gentlemen how important it is that we should send this bill to the Senate as early as possible.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. And it is also important that these questions should be properly understood by means of sufficient discussion.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in thirty minutes.

Mr. REED. I would like to occupy about ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto terminate in thirty minutes. Is there objection?

Several members objected.

Mr. HERBERT. Do not gentlemen think we can get through in forty minutes altogether?

Several MEMBERS. Make it an hour.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I think that half an hour on each side would be only fair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in thirty minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

Mr. HERBERT. I desire to reach some agreement if possible.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I think we ought to agree on an hour—half an hour on each side.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask, then, unanimous consent that the debate be limited to thirty minutes on each side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama and the gentleman from Illinois ask unanimous consent that debate on the pending amendment and amendments thereto be closed in one hour, thirty minutes to be allowed on each side. Is there objection?

Mr. COBB. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCADOO] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. HERBERT. I trust the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBB] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. COBB. Make the time thirty minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. I have tried my best to have that agreed to, but objection is made. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not object to the present proposition.

Mr. COBB. I withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that debate on the amendment and amendments thereto be limited to one hour, to be equally divided between the two sides of the question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MCADOO. Mr. Chairman, I deeply sympathize with the efforts of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to be consistent in his efforts in saving the Treasury. I wish to say to him that I am as jealous of the growth of military power as the gentleman himself, and if this were a question of the increase of the regular Army of the United States beyond what it should be in time of profound peace I would join in protest with him against the passage of the bill.

But there is no man on this floor who knows better than the gentleman from Indiana that the statesmen of the infant Republic, including such men as President Monroe, always drew a clear line of demarkation between a standing army and a navy. The guns of our Navy frown over the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific and our Northern and Southern borders, but never imperil the rights or liberties of any citizen of New Jersey or Indiana. It was the remark of one of the most profound of our earlier statesmen that the guns of a navy had never been turned against the liberties of a country and a people, and every dollar of these appropriations for the building of a navy and for the making of guns is for an armament which will be turned not against the country itself but against its invaders. Never against republican institutions, but against foreign aggression—in protecting our coast or defending our citizens abroad.

I believe, with the gentleman from Indiana, that this country never will be successfully invaded by an alien army. But the gentleman from Indiana must himself know that while our soil may never be polluted by the foot of an invader, that the cities on our coast are now at the mercy of the smallest navies in the world.

The gentleman from Indiana says why this great cry from the financial centers (meaning the sea and lake board cities), from the centers where great wealth and population has aggregated there comes up the demand for a navy. The gentleman from Indiana must know that the cause of that cry is because the financial centers and great cities are mostly located at exposed points for naval attack. It is not, for instance, because capital in New York is threatened by the citizens of New York, but it is because all the people of New York, without regard to condition, know that the city of New York is exposed to bombardment and destruction by naval powers, which we could neither oppose nor punish. The gentleman says he views with alarm the growth of military power in these efforts to defend our coast and to increase naval armament.

The gentlemen who occupied this House in 1859, and for many years prior to that time, who were true republican-democrats in the universal sense and stanch defenders of liberty, and as careful of the rights of man as the gentleman from Indiana, did not express any alarm—and we then had about the greatest naval power on earth—that the liberties of the citizens of the Republic were imperiled.

The gentleman from Indiana says we have already made vast appropriations. Well, we have made vast appropriations for numerous new post-offices and river improvements in his own and other States for instance. We have already appropriated for nine modern steel cruisers, and we now propose two more of the Newark type. Does not the gentleman from Indiana know we have reached a crisis in the history of the American Navy, that within a few years, and it may be months, about forty-five wooden vessels will, under the 20 per cent. dead line, be cut off the Naval Register.

A MEMBER. That is the thing the Government ought to bless.

Mr. MCADOO. Yes, but we want something to be put upon our naval list to replace them. We have to replace them now only four completed cruisers. Is that a monstrous and improper thing to do? Does that endanger the liberties of the country? If we had thirty new vessels not one additional fighting man would be enlisted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will take the floor and yield the time to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HERBERT. I control the time, and will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. MCADOO. I thank the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Does the gentleman control the time against it?

Mr. SAYERS. He [Mr. MCADOO] is speaking on the Sayers amendment, and I control the time on that amendment.

Mr. MCADOO. It is a simple and plain proposition. When you have a number of vessels about to be retired and at present in the service commanded by officers who have a life tenure and who can not be taken off the register, that you should provide new vessels to give service to these officers in manning ships that will be available for defense of the country and the maintenance of our rights abroad. We have now made provision to replace those wooden vessels only nine modern war ships of the cruiser type. All that is contemplated by the gentleman from Texas is two additional cruisers and four gunboats to those already authorized by law, making eleven vessels of modern design to uphold the dignity of the Republic abroad and its safety at home and provide for the moderate personnel of officers and men of the American Navy.

It may be that the gentleman from Indiana is making up in his discussion on the floor in behalf of economical expenditure for some lapses from virtue of a very recent date.

Mr. MILLIKEN. Give us the details.

Mr. MCADOO. And when he brings to the aid of an argument against this very moderate increase of the armament of the Navy of the United States an attempt to prejudice the minds of the members of the House by appealing to them as representatives against military power he is doing that which, in my opinion, with all deference and the greatest respect for him, is unfair to the House and calculated to mislead the country. The people of this country have during our whole history stood by the naval establishment, and they are earnest now in demanding its rehabilitation.

No man in these United States, however humble and however great, and no State of this Union will be in any peril of his or their rights and liberties by this increase of the navy. We are not building up the navy for the purpose of foreign aggression. Our flag, I trust, will never be floated over any foreign soil by way of conquest. God made our country to bless, not curse and oppress, mankind. It is not the policy of this Government to interfere with outside nations, save when they infringe our domestic rights.

But unhappily for us, and unhappily for all mankind, we have not yet arrived at that latitudinarian condition of universal politics wherein wars and rumors of wars have ceased; and when the gentleman from Indiana appeals to this House to arm the defenses of the country with nothing more formidable than delusive rhetoric, as if we were in the millennium period, he forgets the divine edict that until the end of time, unfortunately on account of our weak and wicked human nature and the irrepressible conflict between good and evil, and because of the selfishness of nations, the hand of man will be raised betimes offensively or defensively against his fellow-man.

Within the limits of my own country I believe in the doctrine of the fullest individual and local liberty, but I have not yet arrived at that period where I can indorse the sentiment that the nations of the earth have joined together in the bonds of fraternal love and friendship, and that all envy, and hatred, and selfishness, and evil have been eliminated from the heart of man. It is unfortunate, but it is true, that the selfishness and the cupidity of nations is like the selfishness and cupidity of individual man himself; and that as an undefended country, though the richest in the world, we are exciting the cupidity as well as the jealousy of all the nations of the earth.

As earnestly as any man who loves his kind I deprecate war even when necessary and just under existing conditions as cruel and brutal, and trust that as intelligence and modern civilization advance it may become infrequent and finally cease. On the other hand, the sword has frequently made way for liberty and afterwards defended its existence against its enemies; and as against universalism in politics I am deeply impressed that the spirit of nationality has elevated and ennobled our advanced mankind and secured the freedom and prosperity of people against the incursions of their more ignorant, debased, or vicious neighbors. The mission of nations and races has not yet ceased, much as we may desire the consummated fraternity of all mankind. I take the liberty of again presenting to the House some views presented on this naval question presented at the first session of this Congress and appropriate, I think, at this time:

In the discussions which took place at the formative period of our Government a clear line of demarkation was ably pointed out between maintaining a regular army and these other arms of governmental power. A large regular army was looked upon with dread and suspicion. The States, as well as the people, were determined that no great military establishment should ever be placed in the hands of the central government. The people had painful and acute memories of the result of the resplendent and powerful military establishments of Europe.

"Freemen," as John Randolph said in the Eleventh Congress, "needed not to be defended by hirelings." The militia are freemen in arms to maintain the laws made by freemen in council. Our laws being the result of popular action, power to enforce an orderly obedience to them is part of our system. The military arm of the State conserves both the State and the Union.

Now, as to the naval establishment, I repeat what I have so often said here before; that is, that the Navy represents the power of our country not as against its own citizens, but as in defense of them, its own rights and dignity, against foreign aggression and interference. I take the liberty to repeat from the RECORD what I said a few days ago on this subject:

"I agree with all that has been so well and eloquently and frequently said on this floor that the United States was able to defend itself successfully against any nation on the face of the earth. So long as we are a united people, and I thank heaven we are, there never will be an invasion of our soil, and no foreign nation, however powerful and great and warlike, that has trouble with the United States will ever undertake to land an army on our shores. The armies of Napoleon and Wellington combined could not invade the United States with its sixty million free people and its enormous territory and great wealth. But our seacoast cities and harbors are in peril.

"A navy and a proper fortification of our coast are not in the line of monarchical government. A standing army affects our own people, but the Navy and seacoast defenses only menace foreign powers. I am opposed to paternal government and for the man against the State just as much as the upright defender of the constitution from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] or the able gentleman, Judge HOLMAN, from Indiana. But a government ceases to be a government when at its border lines it is not, as against foreign interests and foreign arms, protective, defensive, and paternal in the broadest and most sacred sense in guarding the lives, liberties, rights, and properties of its citizens and in upholding its own dignity and honor.

"That is the very essence of government—to protect its citizens; and as against foreign nations or foreign interests I would provide the strongest defenses that can be produced by the energy and skill of man. Full freedom within, but unyielding, determined, undying, and eternal protection and defense against foreign interference in whatever form it may come. I do not advocate wild and extravagant navies and forts looking to foreign intermeddling and conquest, but sufficient to assert our rights and defend our coasts. Let the robber governments of Europe maintain tremendous military establishments. They need them; free and contented people do not."

Shall we build up and maintain a respectable naval establishment? Shall we protect our coasts at home and our citizens abroad? The wise and good men who directed the steps of the infant Republic answered this question in the affirmative. I have taken the trouble to collect a few brief extracts from the State papers of our earlier history on this important question. I might read many, but content myself with a few from sources entitled to the greatest weight—that devoted band who, watching with untiring vigilance the rise and flow of the primal founts of popular government, gauged with an accuracy almost incredible the scope, breadth, and depth of its future progress and development.

Hon. Benjamin Stoddart, Secretary of the Navy, as early as 1798 thus expressed himself on this question:

"The protection of our coast, the security of our extensive country from invasion in some of its weaker parts, the safety of our important commerce, and our future peace when the maritime nations of Europe war with each other, all seem to demand that our naval force should be augmented; so much augmented, indeed, as to make the most powerful nations desire our friendship—the most unprincipled respect our neutrality. The peaceful character of America will afford to the world sufficient security that we shall not be easily provoked to carry the war into the country of an enemy; and it will become the wisdom of America to provide a cheap defense to keep it from our own.

* * * * * * *

"Thus, in whatever view the subject is considered, whether our object be to prevent invasion, to protect our commerce, to obtain a speedy and a proper peace, to maintain peace hereafter, or by affording security to every part of our country to guard against the long train of ills which must result from disunion, the wisest, cheapest, and most peaceable means of obtaining the end we aim at will be prompt and vigorous measures for the creation of a navy sufficient for defense, but not for conquest."

In December, 1815, Secretary Crowninshield said in his report to Congress as to a naval establishment:

"The importance of a permanent naval establishment appears to be sanctioned by the voice of the nation, and I have a satisfaction in stating that the means of its gradual increase are completely within the reach of our national resources independently of any foreign country.

* * * * * * *

"The commerce of the United States, increasing with the resources and population of the country, will require a commensurate protection which a navy alone can afford; and the experience derived from the active and vigorous employment of a limited navy during the period of the late war has demonstrated its efficient utility."

Mr. Bassett, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, on November 27, 1812, thus vigorously and accurately stated the naval question. It is as apropos as if delivered to-day. The whole question is briefly, admirably, and tersely stated. An American navy for defense and protection is the popular demand now as then, and now as then let us answer with a law to increase the Navy of the United States:

"It is a bright attribute in the history of the tar that he has never destroyed the rights of the nation; in its defense only is he to be found. Thus aided by economy, and fortified by republican principle, your committee think they ought strongly to recommend that the fostering care of the nation be extended to the naval establishment. It is far, very far, from your committee to extend their views of a navy to the mad and wicked prospect of foreign conquest or a silly contest to be mistress of the ocean. Their view is limited to their own defense and to enforce respect to their just rights.

"To the objection that it is the nature of man to run into extremes they answer that it is the end, not the beginning, we should guard against. It is surely yielding much of the argument to surrender all of the subject that is good and require submission to evil that good may come thereof. Rather separate the wheat from the chaff—show the good and the bad. Let it be impressed on every citizen that to use force to protect and maintain the rights and liberties of his country is his first duty, while it is the greatest of crimes to attack with force the rights of others. It can require no sublety to enforce the distinction between defense and offense; neither can it require argument to prove the first ought not to be abandoned as being more than life is worth, though the other may be deprecated as the communication of wickedness. Limited to the view of defense and protection, the committee directed their chairman to ask leave of the House to report a bill to increase the Navy of the United States."

Listen to the voice of the statesman from South Carolina, Hon. Langdon Cheves, speaking in the Twelfth Congress, 1811, from the Committee on Naval Affairs. The voice of wisdom speaks here, my masters! History does indeed repeat itself, and human nature has changed little in all the ages, for he pictures here the very objections of our own day. As it is said in Scripture, "Wisdom is justified of all her children." How eloquently, ably, and strongly he presents the case:

"That the subject referred to your committee in its several relations presents a question of the highest importance to the interest of the people of this country, inasmuch as it embraces one of the great and leading objects of their Government, and that which above all others laid the foundations of the happy Union of these States, your committee need hardly say they mean the protection of maritime commerce, an interest which, though when superficially viewed seems to affect only the Atlantic portions of the country, yet really extends as far as the utmost limits of its agriculture and can only be separated from it in the opinion of your committee by a total blindness to the just policy of Government.

"The important engine of national strength and national security which is formed by a naval force has hitherto, in the opinion of the committee, been treated with a neglect highly impolitic, or supported by a spirit so languid as, while it has preserved the existence of the establishment, has had the effect of loading it with the imputations of wasteful expense and comparative inefficiency. No system has hitherto been adopted which though limited by the dispensing security of the times, and the just economy of our republican institutions, was yet calculated to enlarge itself gradually with the progress of the nation's growth in population, in wealth, and in commerce, or expand with an energy proportioned to a crisis of particular danger.

"Such a course, impolitic under any circumstances, is the more so when it is demonstrably clear that this nation is inevitably destined to be a naval power, and that the virtue of economy, if no other motive could be found, would recommend a plan by which this force must be gradually increased, the necessary expenses diminished, and durability and permanency given to the strength which they may purchase.

"That a naval protection is particularly secured to the interest of commerce by our great political compact is proved by that part of the Constitution which expressly gave to Congress the power 'to provide and maintain a navy,' and is confirmed by the history of the times and the particular circumstances which led to its institution; but it is alike secured by the fundamental nature of all government which extends to every interest under its authority a protection (if within the nation's means) which is adequate to its preservation; nor is this protection called for only by the partial interests of a particular description of men or of a particular tract of country. A navy is as necessary to protect the mouths of the Mississippi, the channel through which the produce of the agriculture of the Western States must pass to become valuable, as the bays of the Chesapeake and Delaware, and more necessary than on the shores of the Eastern or the Southern States."

President James Monroe, in his message to Congress on the subject of the Navy on January 30, 1824, thus spoke wisely and well. If he was living now he would learn how much more important in the view of some gentlemen it is to improve ghostly and undiscovered rivers and marine hallucinations under the guise of harbors that, however much they may trouble the Treasury, have no place in the thoughts of geographers. Here are a few extracts from his message:

"If a system of universal and permanent peace could be established, or if, in war, the belligerent parties would respect the rights of neutral powers, we should have no occasion for a navy or an army. The expense and dangers of such establishments might be avoided. The history of all ages proves that this can not be presumed; on the contrary, that at least one-half of every century in ancient as well as modern times, has been consumed in wars, and often of the most general and desolating character. Nor is there any cause to infer, if we examine the condition of the nations with which we have the most intercourse and strongest political relations, that we shall in future be exempt from that calamity within any period to which a national calculation may be extended. And as to the rights of neutral powers, it is sufficient to appeal to our own experience to demonstrate how little regard will be paid to them whenever they come in conflict with the interests of the powers at war, while we rely on the justice of our cause and on argument alone.

"Two great objects are, therefore, to be regarded in the establishment of an adequate naval force—the first, to prevent war, so far as it may be practicable; the second, to diminish its calamities when it may be inevitable. Hence the subject of defense becomes intimately connected in all its parts, in war and in peace, for the land and at sea. No government will be disposed in its wars with other powers to violate our rights if it knows we have the means, are prepared, and resolved to defend them. The motive will also be diminished if it knows that our defenses by land are so well planned and executed that an invasion of our coasts can not be productive of the evils to which we have heretofore been exposed.

"The great object, in the event of war, is to stop the enemy at the coast. If this is done, our cities and whole interior will be secure. For the accomplishment of this object our fortifications must be principally relied on. By placing strong works near the mouths of our great inlets, in such positions as to command the entrances into them, as may be done in many instances, it will be difficult if not impossible for ships to pass them, especially if other precautions, and particularly that of steam batteries, are resorted to in their aid."

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, there are always pretexts for taxing the people. Especially do we find pretexts here for the continuation of excessive taxation upon the American people. All this cry about a "new navy," "great guns," and "armaments," by which we are to be prepared for war in time of peace, comes from a spirit, sir, that desires to perpetuate in this country an onerous system of taxation, the burdens under which the people of the country yet groan, and which have ground them down into poverty. I believe, myself, that in time of peace is the time we should prepare for war. But how is that to be done? I reply that it is by reducing our national debt. That is the first step.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask, in view of the fact that this debate has been limited to thirty minutes, in whose time is the gentleman speaking?

Mr. BLAND. I am opposed to the substitute, in fact I am opposed to the whole bill appropriating money for the Navy.

Now, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HERBERT. I insist that the gentleman is not speaking in the time allowed on this side.

Mr. BLAND. I hope I will not be interrupted.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman is certainly not occupying any time under my control.

Mr. BOUTELLE addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. I say, the proper way to prepare for war is to reduce taxation, to reduce your public debt.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I simply wish to say that I have no objection whatever to the gentleman proceeding with his remarks, but that he does not and can not occupy the time belonging to this side.

Mr. BLAND. I think I have the floor, and hope I will not be interrupted.

What has been the history of the American Navy?

Mr. BOUTELLE. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, as a parliamentary inquiry, in whose time the gentleman is speaking? He says he is opposing the substitute, and of course he can not speak in the time of this side.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I insist, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman having been recognized should be allowed to proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized in opposition, as the Chair understands, to the amendment.

Mr. BLAND. I hope this will not be taken out of my time.

Within the last twenty years, Mr. Chairman, we have squandered on this navy over half a billion of the public money, under the same pretexts that we are here to-day asked to vote a large appropriation to increase the navy, because foreign powers are doing so, and because we must prepare for war in time of peace. Over $500,000,000 have been squandered under this pretext in years past; money which should have been applied to the payment of the public debt and the relief of the people from the burdens of interest. Now, if we want to prepare for war, let us begin by wiping out the one billion of interest-bearing debt we have to-day, and then we are ready for anything that may arise. This can be done easily by stopping these wasteful and unnecessary appropriations and applying the money to the payment of the public debt.

Why Germany to-day, in order to hold her people in bondage and subject to taxation, is making the pretext of war against France; and France is taxing her people to death to prepare for war under the pretense that it is defending against Germany. We are called upon here to further burden the American people on the plea that the whole world may dump their armaments down upon us and destroy some seaboard city. I repeat, sir, that the proper way, and the only way, to prepare for war in time of peace, is to build up the citizens of the country in their wealth and prosperity, wipe out national and State debts, and then, when war comes, we will be in a situation to meet it; for at last all success in war depends upon the financial ability of the people to carry it on; and in order to be prepared, financially, for any war that may come, we want in time of peace to stop this infamous policy of imposing burdens upon the people to continue taxation for the purpose of perpetuating the public debt.

We are in no danger of war, and this whole bill, for the purpose of building fast cruisers and war ships, is simply an excuse to tax the people of the country in order to squander in a few large cities the amount of the appropriation—a perfectly useless expenditure of money, as has been shown by the operations of twenty years past, during which time, as I have said, five hundred millions have been expended—squandered—in such useless protection as these ships are said to afford.

Let us stop it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Would you object if the navy was to be built of silver?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED. The subject which is now before the House is of sufficient importance to warrant discussion even in the present deplorable condition of the appropriation bills. This country has 4,000 miles of seacoast lined by great cities filled with wealth which is almost incalculable. No nation at any time in the history of the world has been free from danger of war; and this generation and many more will pass away before the fear of war will pass away from the earth.

There never has been since the foundation of the world any other time to prepare for war than the time of peace, and the truth of that maxim is more impressive to-day than it ever was before. In the time of our fathers it required but rude fortifications and rude artillery to protect any nation against invaders. One single fact will show and one single sentence will demonstrate the tremendous change which the last thirty years alone have given rise to.

In 1856 the largest cannon that was built in France cost 2,600 francs. To-day it will cost twice that sum to fire once the biggest cannon in France. Twice the cost of the largest cannon of thirty years ago is the price of the single discharge of the greatest cannon of to-day.

Years ago the preparation of ordnance was a matter of but short time, and I venture to say that I shall surprise some members even of this House when I say that the utmost skill of our mechanics or of the mechanics of any nation on the earth can give us an 8-inch gun only at the expenditure of eighteen months of time; and that a manufacturer with the best equipped plant in Europe will not dare to promise you a 16-inch gun in a less period than three years, and nobody dares to promise it with certainty in this country in less than four.

Now, every man who has noticed the fortifications along our coast knows that we have not a single fort which can stand for one single day the impact of a ton of cold cast-steel flung with a velocity which can send it 11 miles through the air.

Under those circumstances, and with the additional facts staring us in the face that of all these great guns we have but two, and those only of 8-inch caliber, while it takes 18 months to build the smallest and four years to build the largest, and that we have cities along our shore the ransom of which would be worth the whole empire of Rome—under those circumstances to this terrible ordnance the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], with the simplicity of the earlier and better days, would oppose "free hearts and free foreheads!" What an amazing statement for a man to make to three hundred intelligent men, that to-day of all the days we need no preparation for war. Why, to-day we need it more than we ever did.

What is the proposition before us now? It is that we shall build ten war ships in addition—to what? In addition to a great navy equipped with ordnance ready to take the seas and beat from our coast any invading enemies? Why, no. We have two or three war ships afloat, and in all we have a dozen ships that may be finished at some time or other; and when everything is completed, with these ten ships which are proposed by my colleague [Mr BOUTELLE], we shall have a navy of twenty steel ships. Everything else the Democratic chairman of the committee states is worthless. And we all know that against modern guns, against modern armored ships, we are in precisely the condition of helplessness which ought to awaken the attention of every citizen, and is awakening the attention of every citizen outside of Congress, and inside where they have no other schemes on hand.

Why do we hesitate to build these ships? Is it because we are poor, while a surplus that threatens to burst the vaults of the Treasury exists in the revenues of the United States to-day? Never was there a time when we needed more to do this work. Never in the history of the country was there a time when we could afford to do it as we can now.

The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] says that this is a scheme to spend the money of the people. Who is it that is presenting this scheme? Look in every newspaper, look at every expression of public sentiment, and you will find that it is the people of the United States who demand that this disgraceful situation shall end. And have not the people of the United States a right to expend their own money when it is overflowing the Treasury? The gentleman from Missouri does not want all the other money of the country to keep company with his silver dollars as they are hoarded in the Treasury vaults. We should expend it for the needs of the people. Is that economy? Is it honest economy? I stand here to say that it is.

Why do we raise money? For what purpose? For what object? What excuse have we for filling the Treasury except that the money is to be used for the purposes for which the people demand expenditure? Is it the right thing to buy a dollar's worth for a dollar when you have got the dollar? That is our situation. We want fortifications; we want guns; we want a navy; and, thanks to the wise administration of the Republican party for twenty-five years, we have got the money in the Treasury to pay the bills for the things which we want and which the nation demands. [Applause on the Republican side.] And I say to this House to-day that it is not going to be the fault of the Republican party if the nation does not have what it wants and what its necessities demand.

Mr. SPRINGER. Why did not you give it to them in the Forty-seventh Congress, when you had full control?

Mr. REED. Look at the gentleman from Illinois. [Laughter.] He is the only man that does not appreciate the gravity of the situation. [Renewed laughter.] He is the only man in this House that interposes with the frivolous, the threadbare, the worn-out objection of "Why didn't somebody else do this in times past?" Why, the gentleman never got within a decade of the present in his life, and his party surrounds him where he stands. [Laughter.] I recognize a leader when I see him, and so does his side, and they will vote with him; they will vote to refuse to the people of the United States the expenditure of their own money for the purposes for which they want to expend it. And what is the object? Politics. They want to pile up money in the Treasury which they may use as a means of attack upon the protective system of the United States. They do not dare to make a straight-out attack upon that system; but they are trying by every means in their power to flank it. They are trying to fill the country with cries of "surplus;" they are saving and hoarding away from proper use and proper expenditure money in the Treasury, so that they may make a loud clamor about a "surplus" that has got to be reduced.

Let us pay the expenses of this Government, the legitimate, honest expenses. Let us buy what the people actually want and what common sense and reason demand that they shall have, and then meet the other question when it arises. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HERBERT. How much time have I left, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has twenty minutes left on his side.

Mr. BOUTELLE. How much time is left on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. HERBERT. I yield five minutes to my colleague from Alabama [Mr. OATES].

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, no man desires more than myself the maintenance of the honor of this nation. I want to maintain its honor because I believe that in form, conception, and design it is the wisest and best government that man has ever devised.

Ours is the only Government which has demonstrated the wisdom and utility of a written Constitution as a limitation upon its power.

From an infant republic of four million population one hundred years ago we have grown to sixty million, and are keeping abreast with the foremost nations of the earth in all that develops and marks national greatness. The martial tread of soldiery drowns not the hum of industry, for we have no army except a skeleton, and need none except a few regiments to prevent Indian depredations in our Western Territories.

We have no navy and no coast defenses, yet the flag protects our commerce, which mounts up into the millions annually in value, just as securely as though we had the finest navy afloat. And now, sir, when this country is in a state of profound peace and amity with all other powers, when there is not the slightest probability of a rupture of those relations, nor the most remote prospect of war, it is gravely proposed to expend $25,000,000 for the building of ships of war and floating batteries, and twenty-one million more for coast defense. These expenditures are proposed in addition to the increase in our naval establishment already provided for at the last session and the present, which I regard as ample. A few swift-sailing cruisers as a nucleus for a navy in case of war are all the vessels that we need.

The nations of Europe maintain great navies and immense standing armies which they are constantly increasing; they watch each other like gladiators in the prize ring, ready to strike for supremacy and conquest the moment any prospect of success is discovered; while the United States, as a nation content with her own, presents to the world in strong contrast at once a theme for the philosopher, the statesman, and the historian, which can but add to the greatness of the American name.

The people of the old monarchies of Europe, in addition to the unrest of constant apprehension, are loaded down with burdens of taxation almost unbearable to keep on a war footing the armies and navies of their royal masters, who may at any moment plunge into war to support their imperial dignities, titles, or possessions. Hundreds of thousands of those unhappy people, over whose future hangs like a funeral-pall the eternal black cloud of war, despairing of peace and rest in their fatherland, have annually flocked to our peaceful country, which is not only the asylum for the oppressed of every land, but also by our too liberal policy for their paupers and criminals as well. Now, sir, under whatever pretext measures are seriously urged which in my judgment will inaugurate a policy of maintaining a large and expensive naval establishment I shall oppose them.

If that were accomplished a demand would soon follow for a corresponding increase of the standing army, all of which would of course impose new and permanent burdens of taxation upon the people. They have to foot the bills, and I am not willing to impose upon them a dollar's expense for that which is unnecessary. I contend, sir, that we need no navy except that which has been provided for during the present Congress. I contend, sir, that a large naval establishment, like a large army, is inconsistent with the spirit and genius of our Government, inconsistent with economy, and dangerous to the liberty of the people. I deny that any necessity exists for the naval establisment proposed by the two Senate bills. There is nothing in the foreign policy of this country which renders it necessary.

Our isolation—the great oceans intervening between this and every other powerful nation—relieves us from complications in the quarrels of others, and of itself frees us from the necessity of being prepared for war in time of peace. When other considerations are also weighed, it is next to impossible that this country can be involved in war if her people and Government do not turn their attention to preparations for it.

But, sir, whenever a nation, like an individual, is weaponed—armed to the teeth—and prepared for war, that nation will soon find some pretext for it. Belt a pistol around the most peaceable citizen and let him never go among men without it, and ere long that man's character will undergo a change, and he will shoot some one or be involved in personal rencontre with his fellow-man.

The character of a nation is always indicated by if not identical with the individual character of the people who compose it.

Again I ask from what source is there any danger to be apprehended? Have we anything to fear from Great Britain? The relative situation of the two countries forbids it. The relative situation of the two countries furnishes a complete answer in the negative. English bottoms transport to and from this country nearly all our commerce, which amounts to hundreds of millions annually, as the following tables from the Bureau of Statistics will show:

The imports and exports of the United States in our trade with the United Kingdom during the last fiscal year were as follows:

| Imports into the United States from United Kingdom: | |
|---|---|
| In American vessels | $3,406,715 |
| In foreign vessels | 150,048,863 |
| Total | 153,455,578 |
| Exports from the United States to United Kingdom: | |
| In American vessels | $9,256,373 |
| In foreign vessels | 339,197,277 |
| Total | 348,453,650 |

It can not be stated exactly what portion of the value of the merchandise imported and exported in our trade with the United Kingdom was transported in British vessels. I think that the relative percentage of the British tonnage employed in the trade between this country and the United Kingdom would approximately indicate the information desired.

The tonnage entered and cleared in our trade with the United Kingdom during the year ending June 30, 1886, was as follows:

| Foreign vessels entered. | Number. | Tons. |
|---|---|---|
| British | 1,657 | 3,206,547 |
| All other | 347 | 253,746 |
| Total | 2,004 | 3,460,293 |

Per cent. of British tonnage, 92.66; 92.66 per cent. of $150,048,863 equals $139,035,276.

| Foreign vessels cleared. | Number. | Tons. |
|---|---|---|
| British | 2,418 | 4,045,503 |
| All other | 731 | 560,693 |
| Total | 3,149 | 4,606,196 |

Per cent. of British tonnage, 87.83; 87.83 per cent. of $339,197,277 equals $297,816,968.

Very respectfully, WM. F. SWITZLER, Chief of Bureau.

Can she afford to lose such an immense carrying trade? When did Great Britain in all her history, except when insanity pervaded her counsels and caused her to lose her American colonies, did she ever go to war when it was pointedly against her commercial interests? By a war with the United States her commerce would be practically destroyed. Look at her possessions stretching entirely across the continent on our northern border. These we hold as hostages for the empire's good behavior. She will never sacrifice them.

Is there any danger of a war with Spain? The Queen of the Antilles and her sister islands with her depleted coffers and heavy debt furnish us absolute security against danger from that direction. There is no friction between this country and France, Germany, or Russia. Wherein can there arise any cause for war between this country and any other? It has been said by some whose apprehensions had obtained ascendency over their judgment, that owing to the defenseless condition of our seaboard we were liable to be humiliated at any time. That the little South American state of Chili might send one of her ships of war into New York Harbor and lay that city under contribution or in ashes. Let the possibility of that assertion be granted. What of it? Will it ever occur? Are the rulers of Chili idiots seeking self-destruction? May we not assume that they are men of some sense and some knowledge of the history, numbers, and resources of this country?

Have they not heard of a war among ourselves which occurred a quarter of a century ago and continued four years, in which the total enlistment of soldiers on each side exceeded thirty-three hundred thousand, and which cost more than $3,000,000,000? Do they not know that if they were to assault one—even the smallest—of our defenseless seacoast cities that before many months elapsed Chili would have no place on the map of nations except as an outlying territory of the United States?

It is utterly reckless to assert even the possibility of such a course upon the part of Chili or any power similarly weak, and hence that illustration of the necessity for numerous ships of war or coast defenses has no force. Sir, it is utterly impossible for a sufficient number of nations ever to combine or form an alliance and bring men enough to our shores to whip us. With all the States united in defense of the flag, as they now happily are, the Union is invincible and can defy the world in arms.

Mr. Chairman, upon the subject of coast defense it does seem to me that the lessons we learned in our late civil war should not be forgotten. Was it not demonstrated time and again that no masonry—brick and mortar and stone, however skillfully put together—can resist the heavy projectiles which powerful guns can hurl against it? Nothing has yet been discovered which can resist them but earthworks, and these can be constructed with comparative rapidity and upon an emergency.

A very few first-class heavy guns may and I think should be constructed for coast defense and placed in New York Harbor and a few other important points. But with no prospect of early need for them, and the constant inventions and improvements in gunnery and engines of war which are going on at the end of every decade renders all those previously cast almost or entirely useless, I am unwilling to vote any large sum for this purpose.

To use the mildest term applicable to a greater appropriation, I say it would be recklessly improvident. For twenty years we have had no coast defenses and no navy worthy to be called such, and yet no nation has had the temerity or insanity to molest our commerce, insult our flag, or violate our rights. Whence comes the clamor now, in the face of this long experience and profound peace, for both coast defense and a navy? Some New England fisherman has lost his bait.

I do not like, when I can avoid it, to question the motives of others, but most obviously these three Senate bills providing for the expenditure in the aggregate of $46,000,000 originated and are advocated in obedience to either a mere sentiment of national ostentatiousness, a fear of invasion which is ridiculous because baseless, or they are the result of a well-devised scheme to take advantage of that unsubstantial and transitory popular idea in favor of building a navy, to make a permanent disposition of the surplus revenue, and thereby dispense with the necessity of revising the tariff and reducing taxation.

But it is said by way of reply that forty-six million will not dispose of the surplus; I grant that. But will there be no further demand for coast defense appropriations? Why, sir, the total coast line of the United States is 12,681 statute miles, indented by hundreds and thousands of bays, rivers, and harbors, where an enemy might land troops and do immense damage. Are all these to be fortified, or only a favored few? To put all in a state of defense $500,000,000 would not suffice. The following statement, furnished to me at the office of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, shows in detail the entire ocean and sea frontage of the United States:

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1887.

SIR: I delivered to your clerk yesterday a memorandum of the following distances for your use:

| | Statute miles. |
|---|---|
| 1. Atlantic coast, Quoddy Head, Maine, to Cape Sable, Florida | 2,732 |
| 2. Gulf coast, Cape Sable to the Rio Grande | 1,163 |
| 3. Pacific coast, from the boundary, near San Diego, northward, thence through the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Gulf of Georgia to the forty-ninth parallel of latitude | 1,663 |
| 4. Alaska Territory, from Portland Channel, around Alaska Peninsula, through Behring Strait, to Demarckation Point | 4,818 |
| 5. Aleutian Islands (Alaska Territory), ocean and sea frontage | 2,305 |
| Total United States coast-line | 12,681 |

These values give the length of the seacoast of the United States as measured upon the small scale charts of the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific coasts, upon a line drawn near to and parallel with the coast and avoiding all the minor indentations.

Yours, respectfully,

B. A. COLONNA,
Assistant, in charge of Office.

Hon. W. C. OATES,
House of Representatives.

One small but well-equipped gun factory, where experiments in the construction of a few first-class heavy guns may be made and subjected to the severest tests, is all that we need, and all that I will vote for in that direction. But these three Senatorial war bills are not the only inventions of that body which tend to relieve the Treasury of redundant revenue. The bill to refund the direct taxes laid during the war, and paid by the States which maintained the Union, about seventeen million of dollars, and that other grand scheme which has aroused the cupidity of so many States and statesmen, the Blair educational bill, seventy-nine million more, which, with the heavy appropriations for pensions, would have a depleting tendency, no man can doubt.

The Republicans of this House and the Senate have, with but few exceptions, made their record squarely against any reduction of tariff duties and in favor of every proposition to expend money, the purpose of which I need not name.

The right thing to do is to revise the tariff and reduce taxation and modify the internal-revenue laws so that there will be no surplus in the Treasury; leave that surplus in the pockets of the people, where it rightfully belongs. The Government has no right to take from them, either directly or indirectly, by any system of taxation, a single dollar more than is required to meet the absolute necessities of the Government. Until such a revision and reduction of revenues can be made I am in favor of applying the surplus to the extinguishment of the public debt, upon which we are now paying $48,000,000 annually in interest.

We are often reminded of the injunction of the Father of his Country, "In time of peace prepare for war." That was full of wisdom when uttered. But the United States was a different country then from the United States of to-day. Then we were weak in numbers and resources, could scarcely stand alone, vast and powerful only in future possibilities. To-day, taking into the count all our advantages of numbers, resources, extent, and situation of territory, intelligence, courage, and patriotism of our people, this is the most powerful nation of the earth.

Money and credit are the real sinews of war, and that nation which in time of peace secures the most money and the best credit makes the best possible preparation for war. Pay our debts with the surplus revenue and stop the interest from running against the people. It is better for them that the surplus should be buried in mid-ocean than devoted to placing the country upon a war footing.

War is the greatest calamity to which a nation can be subjected. Let the people continue their peaceful pursuits. Let this great country continue to depend for its defense upon the affections of the people. Like a great giant, in the consciousness of his strength, let this nation, with no unrighteous schemes of diplomacy or conquest, unarmed but defiant in the maintenance of its rights, remain a marvelous example of peace and prosperity.

What need is there for such a naval establishment as the bills I have referred to provide for? Can we hope to compete with Great Britain, and in this respect become the rival of the mistress of the seas? That would involve this country in an annual expenditure which no administration could survive. Sir, we have provided for the building of as many ships of war as we need. I am astounded to find gentlemen in this and the other end of the Capitol professing to be the warm advocates, if not the champions, of tax reduction, favoring all these appropriations. Large appropriations and reduction of taxation are utterly antagonistic propositions. The true friend of the people, who honestly desires to reduce the amount of taxes collected from them, can not be the friend and supporter of these propositions, involving such large expenditures.

Gentlemen should be consistent and get on the one side or the other of this question. You can not ride both horses at once. Sir, I prefer to take the side of the people and lower taxes. This country has no use for coast defenses, a navy, and an army. Their maintenance would add many millions to the annual expenditure, and they might be used to overawe the people and diminish the individual liberty of the citizen.

Wherever a great navy and a standing army are established in time of peace they have always become permanent institutions of the nation and are never reduced. Let gentlemen consider well of the probable consequences before they vote to saddle such burdens upon those who are to succeed us.

Sir, there is too much of a disposition among some of our people to imitate European countries even in our legislation as well as in habits and manners. It is un-American and I despise it. Our Government is unlike every other in the world, and consequently the conduct of others should be of no force as precedents here. Let the burdens of this Government and its restraints of natural liberty rest so lightly upon the citizen that he scarcely feels them and contentment and comfort will be constant visitors to the poor and will knock with even hand at the doors of the palace and the cottage.

For the defense of such a Government in case of invasion a million of the best soldiers that ever enlisted in any cause would, in less than sixty days, be on the march to meet our country's foes. The seas would swarm with our privateersmen, and with our exhaustless resources and limitless credit the best ships of war would appear under our flag as though constructed by the hand of magic. Let us so legislate as to maintain a healthy sentiment within our own country; we have nothing to fear from without.

I shall vote against all the pending amendments to this appropriation bill providing for the construction of new ships of war because they are not needed, and therefore the expenditure is not warranted.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, to proceed with the discussion of the question from the point where I left off, there are of unfinished vessels now in course of construction and yet to be let out by contract, the five double-turreted monitors—for the completion of which appropriations are made in this bill—the steel cruiser Newark, which is to cost $1,300,000, two armored cruisers of the Riachuelo type, to cost $2,500,000 each, and one torpedo-boat, which is to cost $100,000.

Two years at least must elapse before these vessels now authorized by law can be completed, before the armor and the armament for them can be manufactured. With these facts before our eyes, and recognizing at the same time the demands of the people for a further extension of the Navy, the committee concluded that the seven vessels mentioned in the bill introduced and reported by me from the Committee on Naval Affairs, and now proposed as an amendment to this bill by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS], were as many as could be undertaken by the Department economically and safely within the next year. The vessels authorized by my bill—which received the unanimous indorsement of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and which is now on the Calendar—are exactly the ones contemplated by the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

It authorizes the construction of two vessels of the type of the Newark. I have already explained the excellence of that plan and that type. It was thought best to duplicate that vessel for the reasons that it costs $25,000 to make the plans, specifications, working drawings, and model of a single new vessel and requires four months of time. Hence, by this duplication, $50,000 and four months of time will be saved on these two vessels. We take the 1,700-ton gunboat, a model of which is in the room of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and we authorize the construction of four more of those. As we follow plans, specifications, and drawings already prepared, there is a saving of $25,000 on each of these vessels, and also a saving of four months of time. These are the reasons why we have provided for the duplication of the above vessels.

We propose the building of seven new vessels, to cost in the aggregate $4,900,000. The present bill, outside of this proposition, contains appropriations amounting to $6,800,000 for the completion of vessels already authorized.

It is true there is a great demand for some torpedo-boats, especially torpedo cruisers; and I shall be glad to see the authorization of the building of some fast, armored dynamite cruisers—vessels which will be able to throw a thousand pounds of dynamite a mile with reasonable accuracy. A few vessels of that kind would be very effectual in protecting our coast.

As to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maine, no type of vessel is given. No war vessel in the world now reaches the speed of 20 knots an hour; and the plans of the vessels now in course of construction could not be adapted to that speed. A greater weight of engines, boilers, and machinery would be required, and it would be necessary to either reduce the size of the guns or increase the displacement of the vessels. I believe, and a majority of the committee appeared to think at the time when this matter was under consideration, that seven additional vessels are as many as we can advantageously build during the coming fiscal year. Therefore I support the amendment of the gentleman from Texas, which is, as I have said, substantially the bill reported by me to this House, by the unanimous voice of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HERBERT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, in considering a subject so grave as the national defense I think it scarcely worthy a member of this House to bandy words. But when the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] asserts that to the Republican party alone is due the construction of a navy, I wish to call his attention to the fact that the Republican party controled this Government for fifteen years after the war of secession, absolutely during which time hundreds of millions of dollars were spent upon the Navy, yet no ships were left us at the end of that period of Republican rule.

But that is not the question before this committee. The question is, whether the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] shall prevail in his proposition that ten ships be constructed at a cost not exceeding $15,000,000, or whether the proposition offered by the gentleman from Texas, Governor SAYERS, on behalf of his committee, shall be adopted—that six ships and one torpedo boat be constructed at a cost not exceeding four and a half million dollars. That, sir, is the question.

Mr. Chairman, we are rapidly advancing in new methods of shipbuilding and naval architecture and warfare. We are threatened by foreign foes it is said. Some are undertaking to frighten this committee into extravagant expenditures. Sir, the old ships are going out of fashion; new projectiles are being invented, and new powers of projection are being created. But the appropriation asked for by the gentleman from Texas seems ample for a safe development of a navy.

When it is proposed to place in the hands of the Executive fifteen millions of money for the construction of ships at once, the gentleman from Maine can scarcely remember that there are other means of naval warfare than those waged by large ironclads. Why, sir, this country has nearly eighteen hundred swift yachts, and at the sound of the first gun of an enemy they and other rapid ocean crafts, that would be at once purchased for the purpose could dart upon any commerce on the ocean and destroy it.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, we have never in our naval discussions estimated properly and fully what would be the power of a volunteer navy sent out to defend our shores. All the seas would be covered with our vessels carrying letters of marque and reprisal, and no nation to-day—Germany, France, or England—claiming to control in any degree the commerce of the oceans, seas, or lakes would venture to attack us reaching as we do in territory from Atlantic to Pacific, and embracing nearly an entire continent, with a population of 60,000,000 of intelligent, aggressive people, without the gravest cause. A volunteer navy, such as I have suggested, would reduce England to starvation in thirty-days or cause the flag of her merchant marine to vanish. Her great ships might bombard our cities, but would be helpless in protecting her bread-carrying vessels. There is no danger of foreign war. Domestic wars are what we have most to dread. Against them our statesmen must guard and protect our country by wise legislation. In this matter and at this juncture I, for one, am willing to trust to the patriotism and judgment of the chairman and members of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and will vote with them.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I have ten minutes remaining and will yield six minutes of that time to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF].

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Chairman, we have less than one week's time before the Speaker's gavel will announce the adjournment of Congress, and we have a great deal to do in that short space. I wish to call attention to the fact that if we are to do anything at all for the increase of the Navy it will have to be done in this bill. The bills which have been offered especially for the construction of additional ships of war, will not be reached, and if we are to authorize the Department to enter into the construction of new vessels we must take advantage of the present bill.

Now, I hear to-day for the first time on this floor that we have more ships in the Navy than we need. I understood that to be the essence of the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], that we have now in fact more ships of war than this Government has use for.

Mr. Chairman, during the next six years there will not be remaining a single one of our present wooden fleet, if we can judge the future by the past. When that period rolls round we will not have more than half a dozen of these well constructed modern vessels of war unless we now authorize the Navy Department to enter into the construction of additional ones. Why is it—and the question has often been asked on this floor—why is it the Department has been so slow in the construction of these vessels? Why is it the distinguished gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] made the remark he did a few moments ago, that it is impossible to procure in the United States armor or guns unless we wait eighteen months or two years for their construction? It is because our legislation of the past has been, as our friends propose to-day it shall continue to be—it is because we have been doling out these appropriations in small sums authorizing one vessel this year and another vessel the following year.

We have not made such appropriations as would induce the manufacturers of the country to enter into the manufacture of armor and guns. Gentlemen, it takes a million of dollars to establish one of these plants for the construction of guns. What inducement is there to an American manufacturer to establish such a plant costing a million and a half of dollars? Gentlemen, we are wasting money, we are spending more money for our Navy than we should spend from the fact we are not making sufficient appropriation to enable the manufacturers of the country to build our steel cruisers in an economical manner. When we authorize the construction of ten additional ships, as proposed by the gentleman from Maine, appropriating $19,000,000 for their construction, $15,000,000 for the ships proper and $4,800,000 for armament, then there is some inducement to manufacturers of the country to enter into the manufacture of the article which we to-day in America are altogether without.

And, Mr. Chairman, should we wait another year or two years or three years in order to permit the vessels that we have already authorized to float upon the sea that we may judge as to their success or as to the type of vessels we shall authorize to be constructed?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Chairman, I understand I have four minutes of the time remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman for that time.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I do not think there is any necessity for attempting to add anything to the arguments that have been made upon this subject. This question is a practical one; I may say it is the foremost question before the American people to-day. We need ships; the people want them, and they are sending up their appeals to Congress to provide the money to build them. We can build them if we furnish the money. When the last vessels were authorized to be contracted for bids were received from ship-builders of this country, who failed, however, to secure the contracts. Every one of these men who put in a bid then is in a condition now to take contracts for one or more of these ships. So we have the desire of the people of the country, we have the money, and we have the facilities to build the ships. We want them now; and I am asking this House simply to incorporate into this bill and send to the Senate, where it will be immediately ratified, a proposition that was adopted in the Senate of the United States without a dissenting voice.

And in closing, Mr. Chairman, my remarks upon this subject I simply cite in opposition, and in commentary upon the sort of doctrine that is urged here to-day by the gentleman from Indiana and others, who think that the United States can afford to leave its coasts unprotected, to have its flag absent from the seas and yet maintain its dignity by making faces at the sisters and the cousins and the aunts of foreign powers—I desire them to hear the words of George Washington, the first President of the United States, in his fifth annual message, where he says:

> I can not recommend to your notice measures for the fulfillment of our duties to the rest of the world without again pressing upon you the necessity of placing ourselves in a condition of complete defense, and of exacting from them the fulfillment of their duties to us. The United States ought not to indulge a persuasion that contrary to the order of human events they will forever keep at a distance those painful appeals to arms with which the history of every nation abounds. There is a rank due to the United States among nations which will be withheld, if not absolutely lost by a reputation for weakness. If we desire to avoid insult we must be able to repel it. If we desire to secure peace, one of the most powerful instruments of our rising prosperity, it must be known that we are at all times ready for war.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HERBERT. I have but a few words to say in concluding this debate. The gentleman from Indiana says that we are a brave people, and therefore need no navy. I desire to call his attention to the words of Andrew Jackson in 1834, words uttered in a time of profound peace:

> The wide seas which separate us from other governments must of necessity be the theater on which an enemy will aim to assail us; and unless we are prepared to meet him on this element we can not be said to possess the power requisite to repel or prevent aggressions. We can not, therefore, watch with too much attention this arm of our defense or cherish with too much care the means by which it can possess the necessary efficiency and extension.

Here is Andrew Jackson advising us to cherish the Navy, that we may be prepared to repel aggressions, and here is my friend from Indiana arguing that we need no navy, because we are a brave people.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me interrupt the gentleman to ask a question.

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is there any difference between the condition of this country at the present day and when that was written—a time when we had less than twenty-five millions of people?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Only about seventeen millions.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman if there is no difference between our condition at that time and now, when we have sixty millions of people, when we occupy the first rank among the nations of the earth, and are in a condition of prosperity foremost among all the nations of the globe?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And with a navy that Andrew Jackson never dreamed of in his day.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. LAWLER. Admiral Porter says that the Chinese fleet can come up and burn all your seaport cities.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Alabama if there is no distinction or difference between our condition then and now?

Mr. HERBERT. Relatively we occupy the same position to-day that we occupied fifty years ago. If we have advanced in strength, so have the armies and navies of other nations. If it then required three months for sailing vessels to come from Europe to America, now their navies have grown in strength, now their fleets have increased, now they use steam and high-power guns, and an enemy's fleet could appear on our coasts within twenty-five days after the declaration of war. Every other great nation has in readiness everything that is necessary to begin operations in the event of a declaration of war. Against a war suddenly precipitated upon us we should have less time for preparation than we should have had fifty years ago.

But not only for that purpose do we need a navy. As President Cleveland says:

> All must admit the importance of an effective navy to a nation like ours, having such an extended seacoast to protect. And yet we have not a single vessel of war that could keep the seas against a first-class vessel of any important power. Such a condition ought not longer to continue. The nation that can not resist aggression is constantly exposed to it. Its foreign policy is of necessity weak, and its negotiations are conducted with disadvantage, because it is not in condition to enforce the terms dictated by its sense of right and justice.

But, Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that if it be true, as I suppose he thinks it is, that in his district and in his State, which lies so far in the interior that no long-range gun has ever been invented that can reach into it from the Atlantic or Pacific, there is no sentiment in favor of an effective navy, he is very much mistaken if he believes that sentiment does not exist elsewhere.

Read the newspapers published in New York, Boston, all along the Atlantic and Gulf coast, and see what the sentiment of your countrymen is there. I say to gentlemen on this floor that they ought not to be guided in coming to a conclusion on a subject like this by the sentiment of the town in which they happen to live. Look abroad. Look over the whole country, where you must look when there comes another Presidential election, and ask what is the sentiment in Massachusetts, in Connecticut, in New York, in New Jersey, and in Virginia, and all along the line. It is in favor of an effective navy. I do not believe myself, Mr. Chairman, that we need such a navy as Great Britain has. I do believe there are many advantages resulting to us from our insulated position, from our great strength at home, from our great credit among the nations of the earth.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me——

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me, as I have but a few minutes.

But what are all these things worth if we show to the world at large we have no disposition to defend ourselves against attacks by the sea?

Mr. Chairman, this is a serious question. I beg gentlemen who vote on other questions millions of dollars without a moment's hesitation out of the Treasury of the United States to consider carefully before they decide that nothing whatever ought to be done for a navy. Why, the gentleman from Indiana seems not to have examined this question. I was astonished to hear a gentleman as well informed as he usually is on all topics he speaks of say that there was but one nation having a navy superior to ours. Does he know nothing of the navy of France or of Russia or of Germany or of Turkey or of Italy?

And with what nation, if we should ever be so unfortunate as to be involved in war, would we be most likely to come in contact? There are more German citizens in America and coming to America than from any other nation. Our relations with that nation have been somewhat complicated within the last two or three years. There is a disposition on the part of Bismarck, who controls that great country, to discriminate against the pork and wheat and all the products of the West. Shall we not put ourselves in a position, as President Cleveland says, to negotiate on terms of equality about the rights of our citizens with Germany or shall we leave ourselves entirely at her mercy?

Mr. HOLMAN. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HERBERT. My time is limited.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my friend has misrepresented me, and I think he does not intend to do that.

Mr. HERBERT. Certainly not.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman made the statement that I had said there was only one nation having a navy superior to ours. What I said was there was but one government possessing an efficient navy that would be a source of any peril to this country.

Mr. HERBERT. Now, this bill of the committee, most carefully matured, carries, as my colleague on the committee from Illinois [Mr. THOMAS] said, about what could be economically and fairly worked on during the coming year. We ought not to undertake as much as is included in the amendment of the gentleman from Maine. But I do think that this amendment, which provides for six ships only and one torpedo boat, four of them small, costing only about a half million dollars each, and the others of 4,000 tons, the cost of all limited to $5,000,000, while we appropriate towards them $2,450,000, ought to be passed by the House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend the amendment of Mr. SAYERS by adding, after the word "construction," the words "by contract."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 109, noes 10.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment to the amendment was adopted.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I offer a further amendment to come in at the end of the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Add to the amendment the following:
> "That each of the aforesaid vessels shall be built, as near as may be, in compliance with the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the naval establishment.'"

Mr. SAYERS. I accept that amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] for the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 86, noes 107.

So the substitute proposed by Mr. BOUTELLE was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] as amended.

The amendment as amended was read.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 134, noes 39.

Mr. BLAND. I will call for a yea-and-nay vote on this in the House.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Towards procuring the armament of the vessels authorized by the act of March 3, 1885, of the vessels authorized by sections 1 and 2 of the act of August 3, 1886, of the unfinished monitors mentioned in section 3 of the same act, and of the Miantonomoh, $2,128,362.

Mr. THOMAS. I offer an amendment to come in on line 882.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 882, after the word "procuring," strike out the word "the," and after "of," in the same line, insert "domestic manufacture for," so that the provision will read:

> Toward procuring armament of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized, &c.

Mr. HERBERT. There is no objection to that, though I believe that is the law already.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer as an additional section or paragraph.

The amendment was read, as follows:

> After line 889 insert:
> "The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make contracts with responsible steel manufacturers after suitable advertisements, to continue not less than thirty days, in newspapers most likely to reach the manufacturers addressed, for the supply of rough-bored, rough-turned, and tempered steel in forms suitable for heavy ordnance adapted to modern warfare, and steel finished for armor, shafting, and other naval purposes in quantity not to exceed 10,000 gross tons, in quality and dimensions conforming to specifications, subject to inspection and tests at each stage of manufacture, and in case of ordnance including all the parts of each caliber specified: Provided, That no money shall be expended except in payment for steel accepted and delivered; that each bidder shall contract to erect in the United States a suitable plant, including the best modern appliances, capable of making all the steel required, and of finishing it in accordance with the contract, and agree in the case of an ordnance contract to deliver yearly a specified quantity of each caliber, the time of delivery of the smaller calibers to commence [at the expiration of not less than eighteen months and of the largest calibers at the expiration of not more than three years from the date of the acceptance of the contract, and all these forgings shall be manufactured in the United States.
> "That for the purposes of this section the sum of $3,000,000 is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available during six years from January 1, 1887.
> "That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to erect at the navy-yard at Washington, D. C., a naval-gun factory in accordance with the report of the gun-foundry board of December 20, 1884, for furnishing and assembling guns adapted to modern warfare up to and including the largest approved sizes and for the manufacture of gun-carriages and ordnance equipment for the naval service at a cost not to exceed $1,000,000."

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe that is new legislation.

Mr. REED. If the gentleman from Indiana wants to make the point of order, I should like to have him state the grounds of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that proposes new legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. REED. It is entirely within the ruling of the Chair. If it is in order to build war ships, it must be in order to put guns on them. That is what they are built for.

Mr. HOLMAN. I apprehended that that ruling would be a little wide.

Mr. LONG. This is in continuance of the work of constructing a navy.

Mr. REED. We have already provided for two new ships, and we have not got guns for those that are now built, and I purpose to demonstrate to the House that this is the only way to get good guns. The Chair will perceive that this is a proposition to contract for the metal for guns, and to build a gun factory for the purpose of assembling the material.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this is for the purpose of constructing guns for arming vessels and, in the line of the decision heretofore rendered, the Chair will have to overrule the point of order.

The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED].

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I ask for a vote.

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard briefly on the amendment. This proposition is identical, word for word, with the proposition which has already passed the Senate, and which I desire to give the House an opportunity to vote upon. This proposes the only possible way in which great guns can be built. The new method of construction of high-power guns requires the establishment of a great plant for their fabrication. The large works at Cambria—the largest iron works that I, at least, have ever seen, constituting in itself a great village—in order to make a 16-inch gun, would be obliged to expend $1,200,000 in additional plant before a single pound of gun metal could be melted. Now, our desire is not merely to build a few guns, but to have in this country an establishment capable of building guns. We have got to have it, and we might as well go to work in workmanlike fashion and offer sufficient inducement to produce the steel ingots out of which these guns can be built.

I think it very possible that many gentlemen who hear me have not studied and do not understand the method of building a modern gun. Under the old system a mold was made, the gun was cast, and after a little trimming and working, the gun was fit for use. But it is impossible to cast steel in large masses. In order to have the metal uniform it is absolutely essential that it should be cast in comparatively small bulk. Hence, instead of making a complete gun at one casting, you must construct and build up a gun—a machine. The process is of this character: A steel tube is cast, weighing considerably less than one-half the weight of the gun, which will be ultimately built about it. Then this great steel tube, which is carefully tested in all its parts, which is carefully annealed in oil, is surrounded by a jacket, not going its whole length. In front of the jacket, on the muzzle end of the tube, are placed steel rings. Then over all this is another series of tubes.

Now these tubes have to be fashioned so carefully and to fit each other with such exactness that it is impossible for the eye to detect where the rings come together. In addition to this, it is necessary that these rings should be in a condition of tension when fitted to the gun. Hence they are bored a little less than the exact size of the covered part. They then have to be heated and afterwards shrunk on to the gun, because when the steel tube receives the shock of the enormous charges of powder necessary in the 16-inch gun to expel the projectile of 2,000 pounds, that shock must be met instantly by the strain which the rings and the jacket already put upon the interior tube. Then the breech work has to be very carefully made.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GOFF obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. REED.

Mr. REED. The committee will perceive, even from the very rude explanation I have given, that this work is one of the utmost delicacy. It requires careful testings to the smallest fractions of an inch—testings so fine that a few years ago it was absolutely a mechanical impossibility to make such testings. The method which has been found to be best by the practical nations of the world has been to cause these steel ingots out of which the steel tube will be made, out of which the steel jacket will be made, out of which the steel rings will be made, to be cast by private enterprise, and then the putting together, or as it is technically called the assembling, of the gun is done in a Government workshop. It requires costly and expensive tools to do this work, so that the result is, taking for example a gun of the highest power, a 16 or 17 inch gun, which can throw a projectile of chilled steel weighing 2,000 pounds a distance of half a dozen miles to eleven miles.

This makes, as the committee will perceive, a very formidable implement of warfare.

Now, in order that these guns may be constructed, it is absolutely essential that we should make it for the interest of the people engaged in this line of business to manufacture them. As will be perceived at once, it would be impossible for a man to make a single gun or half a dozen guns when, before beginning the first one, he must make the enormous expenditure of $1,200,000.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Is it admitted that guns made in the manner you have described are the best guns?

Mr. REED. It is admitted by everybody, except some one who has got a gun of his own, or some one whose friend has a gun. Every man, woman, or child who has studied this matter is agreed that this is the best gun that can be made to-day.

I want to warn the House here and now that the great danger to which we are exposed is that we shall not get guns, simply because we are surrounded by a set of men who want to waste more millions than have already been wasted upon experiments on exploded ideas and exploded models and exploded guns. It is just as well settled to-day that the built-up steel gun is the best gun that can be made as it is settled that our locomotive engines made in Philadelphia are as good as can be made anywhere in the world; and it is just as absurd to go back to the old models and the old notions in regard to gun-making as it would be to go back to the open engines that used to drag trains forty years ago.

There is another thing about this amendment which should commend it to the judgment of the committee. It puts this money in the hands of the executive department of this Government, where the principles of our institutions require it should be put. The amendment is offered by a member of a party that does not possess the control of the executive branch at the present time; and it is offered because it is believed that it contemplates the true system and the best way of making guns and fixes the responsibility where it should be placed.

Now, if this question ever comes squarely before the House—I think myself the intention is to smother it—an attempt will be made to divide the House by getting up some irresponsible commission composed of different parties——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] has expired. [Cries of "Go on!"]

Mr. REED. I do not know that I have anything more to add except that this proposition, having been placed before the Committee of the Whole, will receive the support of this side of the House; and if it is rejected, it will be rejected by the 40 Democratic majority which exists here. I hope there may be patriotism enough to rise above party considerations and adopt the amendment.

I hope there may be patriotism enough to rise above it. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I wish to ask my friend from Maine a single question in reference to one branch of this proposition upon which he has not touched, and which he will if his attention is called to it. In my judgment there is no more suitable place than Washington for the establishment which my friend proposes. On what theory does the gentleman propose this is the best place—the most suitable place?

Mr. REED. It is because we have already got one here now.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. That is just it.

Mr. REED. One where we can put together the parts of a 10-inch gun. The Navy Department having said this was a thing already in operation, I do not believe it is wise or sensible on an important question to commence by splitting up on the question of location.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. That is right.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And the commission has already reported in favor of it.

Mr. REED. Yes; and the gun-foundry board has reported in favor of it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does not my friend know we have two other places much nearer the sources of supply than this one at the city of Washington.

Mr. REED. What are they?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Frankfort and Watervliet.

Mr. REED. Both of the Army.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yet they are there for the purpose of manufacturing guns needed by our Government.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. No.

Mr. REED. No.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We can easily approach both by rail.

Mr. CANNON. Rock Island is the best place.

Mr. REED. There you are. There is an example of what we will have if we go into the question of where we are to locate it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. We have these two places—Frankfort and Watervliet—where it can be located.

Mr. REED. Briefly, the gun-foundry board and the Secretary of the Navy report that this is the best place. So far as Frankfort and Watervliet are concerned the Army can have those places. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The other places are needed. My friend knows every engineer who has investigated this particular matter has come to the opinion that the yard at Washington will have to be dug out perennially or it will be on the banks of a creek by the drying up of the branch of the river on which it is, and that it is not the best place to put it. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, the observations which have been made on the other side of the House have been of such a character it is important that some reply, however brief, should be made to them. [Cries of "Vote!"] Some explanation is required.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No explanation is necessary; we will all vote against it.

Mr. HERBERT. I merely propose to say a few words on this subject.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is not necessary.

Mr. HERBERT. I do not think there is any 16-inch gun afloat. My recollection is the Italian ships have only 15-inch guns. However that may be, it is clear we will not need 16-inch guns for any ship now authorized.

Now as to the second ground, the necessity of making the large appropriation the gentleman says is necessary to enable us to get bids. The Secretary of the Navy thinks he will get a fair bid some time in March. He has proposals already out and expects to get bids at a fair price for furnishing this steel. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SOWDEN. I ask the amendment be again reported so we may understand what we are voting on.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there unanimous consent?

Objection was made.

The question recurred on Mr. REED'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 105.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Towards procuring, testing, and delivering the armor for the vessels authorized by section 1 of the act of August 3, 1886, and of the unfinished monitors mentioned in section 3 of the same act, $4,000,000.

Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois. I move, after the word "dollars," in line 894, to add the words "provided such armor shall be of domestic manufacture."

Mr. HERBERT. We do not object to that.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Navy to carry out the recommendation contained in the report of the Naval Board, Capt. J. A. Howell, president, dated June 5, 1886, and purchase one pneumatic gun-carriage and necessary attachments, $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the weight, space, and conditions of working to be agreed upon between the Department and the company.

Mr. BRADY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BRADY. Mr. Chairman, some idea of the character and extent of the public works under the Navy Department and the duties of the Bureau of Yards and Docks and the corps of civil engineers connected therewith may be had from the official report, dated December 1, 1883, of the late navy-yard commission. By an examination of this report it will be seen that the navy-yards comprise some 6,500 acres of land, of which no less than 82 acres are covered with buildings of brick, stone, wood, and iron. These buildings number 564 and are valued at $15,400,000, which, with other permanent structures and works, such as masonry and floating dry-docks, launching-ways, derricks, sheers, quay-walls, wharves, slips, walls, sewers, drains, street improvements, water and gas works, &c., valued at $13,700,000, and miscellaneous machinery and tools, the property of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, valued at $580,000, make up a total appraised value of the public works now under control of said Bureau of $39,680,000, not including the value of the 6,500 acres of land, mostly improved, and of which no estimate is given.

The duty and work of designing, constructing, repairing, caring for and maintenance of all these varied and extensive works, which constitute the navy-yards, is technical in character—almost wholly constructing engineering—and the same is committed to the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and the civil engineer corps of the Navy under its direction and control, as will be seen from the general orders of the Navy Department, prescribing "duties of bureaus" and the rules and regulations of the Navy and bureau defining the duties of civil engineers at navy-yards.

Mr. Chairman, the mere statement of the nature and magnitude of such extensive and varied works of engineering would seem to be of itself alone a sufficient argument as to the absolute necessity of requiring thorough technical knowledge and experience in practical engineering as the proper measure of fitness for an intelligent conduct of this branch of the public service. I further submit that a wise and judicious application of the funds appropriated for these public works can not reasonably be had nor expected under such a faulty organization. Would it not be unreasonable, may I not say absurd, to select a learned lawyer as chief of the Engineer Corps of the Army, or a most skillful surgeon as Supervising Architect of the Treasury Department? And is it not just as irrational to have an unprofessional head of the Bureau of Yards and Docks in the Navy Department?

It would prove a real reform in the line of intelligent administration to appoint a civil engineer of high character, experience, and undoubted ability chief of this bureau, and I believe that the justice and propriety of such a change would commend itself to professional and business men of broad views everywhere.

Many of our most distinguished officers of the Navy are of this opinion. Fifteen years ago—when the operations of the Bureau of Yards and Docks were not nearly so large, or so important as now, Rear-Admiral Joseph Smith said, January 21, 1870, in a letter to the Secretary of the Navy:

* * * During my service of twenty-three years as Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, I have seen and felt the necessity of educated and competent civil engineers at navy-yards, and as costly and important works come under their direction and supervision, they should be men of education and experience in their profession, which qualities should govern the appointing power in the selection, and should possess relative rank with other officers who are chiefs of other civil departments in navy-yards. To that end I would respectfully recommend the action of Congress.

Another illustrious officer succeeded Admiral Smith as Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks. Reference is had to Admiral Ammen, who wrote in 1871:

The education and qualities of mind necessary to make a good civil engineer must be of a very high order, and to secure and retain the best should be the object of the Government. There can be no better economy, and to that end they should be well paid; I would think quite as much or more than they now ask.

If a professional examination of a proper kind was established, as necessary to receiving the appointment, and if then a probationary term as an assistant and then as principal, of sufficient length to establish the professional worth of the person and his adaptability to his duties, I would think that naval rank could then be given with advantage to the service.

How is it under other governments?

In England the "director of engineering and architectural works," which office corresponds with our "Chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks," is a professional engineer, and the present incumbent is a general of the royal engineers. At the dock-yards the work is executed under his direction by the resident superintending civil engineers in charge. Within the present year the board of admiralty has been enlarged by the appointment of a civil engineer as a civil lord, who has, in fact, been "an outsider" for several years as an unofficial professional adviser to the board in scientific and engineering matters, but now he has been publicly honored with a seat inside and made a directing official of responsibility and usefulness, as a proper recognition of the value and importance of such professional service.

In France, where the general administration of naval affairs is carried on at the naval ports, there is an engineer "director of hydraulic works and buildings" at the head of this branch, which is one of the seven subdivisions, corresponding to our bureaus, at the headquarter's port; and under recent reorganization a "civil engineer" is now appointed upon the staff of the commander-in-chief.

At the dock-yards, the work of this department is executed by the resident engineers.

In Austria the technical department of the navy comprises a corps of engineers each for ship construction, engine construction, building and dock construction, and artillery construction, with one chief engineer at the head of each corps, and a small corps of superior engineers and engineers under him—the corps for "building and dock construction" consisting of one chief engineer, three superior engineers, and four engineers.

In Germany, where the imperial admiralty is divided into three grand sections: First, the military section; second, the techincal section, and third, the general section, the bureau of docks is included in the technical section and the personnel of the technical corps of naval engineers includes a corps of one director and four chief engineers in the division of docks and hydraulic works.

The following is the organization of the principal foreign navies:

AUSTRIA.

1. Sea officers.
2. Marine infantry.
3. Marine priesthood.
4. Medical corps.
5. Technical department.
6. Commissariat department.

Technical department:

1. Ship-building.
2. Engine-building.
3. Marine artillery.
4. Building and dock construction.
5. Machinists.

ENGLAND.

Fixed administration:

1. Secretary.
2. Controler of the navy.
3. Accountant-general.
4. Director-general of the medical department.
5. Director of engineering and architectural works (R. E.)
6. Director of transports.
7. Director of contracts.
8. Director of naval construction.
9. Director of naval ordnance.
10. Superintendent of victualing and stores.

FRANCE.

Central administration:

1. Minister's cabinet.
2. First direction, personnel.
3. Second direction, material.
4. Third direction, administrative service.
5. Fourth direction, colonies.
6. Fifth direction, general accounts.

Five maritime districts, each under a prefect maritime, assisted by:

1. Major-general of marine.
2. Commissary-general.
3. Director of port movements (captain of port).
4. Director of naval construction.
5. Director of artillery.
6. Director of hydraulic works and buildings.
7. Council of health.

GERMANY.

Grand sections:

1. The military section.
2. The technical section.
3. The general section.

The technical section:

1. Bureau of equipment.
2. Bureau of docks.
3. Bureau of construction of vessels.
4. Bureau of construction of engines.
5. Bureau of construction of ordnance.
6. Bureau of construction of torpedoes and torpedo defense.

Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that Congress very wisely provided for the presence of this technical knowledge and experience in the administration of this bureau at the time of its creation, in 1842, when its functions had a wider scope than now, embracing other work since transferred to other bureaus, and the corps of civil engineers was not yet established, by requiring a civil engineer to be permanently attached to the bureau as a part of its organization. The question now is, Does the law sanction and permit such an appointment, that of a civil engineer as Chief of Bureau of Yards and Docks, Navy Department?

The following sections of the Revised Statutes bear upon this inquiry:

SEC. 419. The busines of the Department of the Navy shall be distributed in such manner as the Secretary of the Navy shall judge to be expedient and proper among the following bureaus: First, a Bureau of Yards and Docks; second, a Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting; third, a Bureau of Navigation; fourth, a Bureau of Ordnance; fifth, a Bureau of Construction and Repairs; sixth, a Bureau of Steam Engineering; seventh, a Bureau of Provisions and Clothing; eighth, a Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.

SEC. 421. The chiefs of the several bureaus in the Department of the Navy shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from the classes of officers mentioned in the next five sections respectively, or from officers having the relative rank of captain in the staff corps of the Navy, on the active list, and shall hold their offices for the term of four years.

SEC. 422. The Chiefs of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, of the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting, of the Bureau of Navigation, and of the Bureau of Ordnance shall be appointed from the list of officers of the Navy not below the grade of commander.

SEC. 423. The Chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repairs shall be appointed from the list of officers of the Navy not below the grade of commander, and shall be a skillful naval constructor.

SEC. 424. The Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering shall be appointed from the Chief Engineers of the Navy, and shall be a skillful engineer.

SEC. 425. The Chief of the Bureau of Provision and Clothing shall be appointed from the list of Paymasters of the Navy of not less than ten years' standing.

SEC. 426. The Chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery shall be appointed from the list of the Surgeons of the Navy.

Hon. E. John Ellis submitted, March 16, 1885, to the present Secretary of the Navy, a very able argument, showing the true intent and meaning of the foregoing laws on this subject, to which I ask attention. It is as follows:

The original acts from which the above codifications were formulated are the act of July 5, 1862, sections 1 and 2, 12th volume of Statutes, page 510; and the act of March 3, 1871, sections 9 and 10, 16th volume of Statutes, pages 536, 537.

The act of 1862 first divided or distributed the business of the Navy into eight separate and distinct bureaus. A careful reading of the sections in the original or as codified in the Revised Statutes, clearly establish that Congress intended to place civilian officers or staff officers of the requisite technical and professional attainments at the head of those bureaus that were civil and technical in their character. Of this there can be no doubt. Therefore they placed at the head of the Medicine and Surgery Bureau a surgeon of rank; at the head of the Bureau of Construction and Repairs a "skillful naval constructor;" at the head of the Bureau of Steam Engineering "a skillful engineer;" and at the head of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing a "paymaster of not less than ten years' standing;" or, in other words, one skilled to judge of and buy provisions and clothing.

The intention was to place the business of the Navy Department on a business basis. The thought was "every man to his trade," and that if a man wanted to repair a watch he ought not to go to a blacksmith, or if he desired a house constructed he would not seek the services of a merchant tailor. The object to be obtained was to give to the Navy Department proportion, efficiency, and homogeneity, and it was the very best kind of common sense.

It did not follow that because Annapolis had trained the gifted and gallant line officer of the Navy to sail, to command, to fight ships, or to know all about equipment, and recruiting, and ordnance, that therefore he was a better doctor than the trained surgeon, or a better dealer in goods than the experienced civilian paymaster, or that he could "construct" a ship, or manipulate a steam-engine. So, with good sense and sound judgment, the legislators of 1862 placed all the purely civil and technical bureaus, except that of yards and docks, under the administration of staff officers of expert and technical skill and experience.

Why was the Bureau of Yards and Docks excepted from this wise legislation? The reason is obvious. The operations of that bureau were small. The light wooden ship was the war vessel of that day. The plant and buildings of a navy-yard were insignificant as compared with those of this day. A dock, small and weak as compared with those required to-day, would accommodate the largest "man-of-war." A war vessel did not draw over 12 to 24 feet of water. She could be built almost anywhere, in a shallow harbor or upon an inland river with extemporized docks, stays, buildings, and plant. The tremendously heavy and costly machinery of to-day was unknown. The world had progressed but little in the building and armament of ships of war in the one hundred years preceding. Less of surveying, of calculating weight and endurance, of sewerage and drainage for permanent yards, few of these abstruse and difficult problems, which the naval civil engineer of to-day must meet and solve, were then presented. The forces of nature had not then been harnessed to the chariot of Mars or the trident of Neptune.

Therefore there was less need for the civil engineer of close application and great acquirement. Those that were employed were on the civil list, without rank or place in the Navy, except as civil employés.

It was considered that the line officer could properly direct the limited operations of the bureau, as they were then comparatively simple. Besides, there was then no staff officer of the requisite technical knowledge to direct the operations of the bureau, and in order to preserve throughout the military feature, rank was required for a chief of bureau. And thus it was that the legislators of 1862 failed to place the civil and technical Bureau of Yards and Docks under the charge of a professional and technical expert officer. The legislators of 1871 were wiser. The world had moved; iron had replaced wood; tremendous strides had been made in all the arts of naval warfare, in navigation, the tactics of the sea, naval construction, hydrography, ordnance, projectiles, armor, submarine mines. A priest of Nature had been down by the sea and had wooed from his Divinity the secrets of the coming and going of the clouds and winds. Meteorology and Maury had learned to foretell the coming and the pathway of the storms.

These advances in naval warfare and construction and science brought forward new and complicated questions of engineering. More skill was required of the engineers in the Bureau of Yards and Docks, and new studies for the line officer were imperatively required that carried him further away from the knowledge of the civil engineer.

And so in 1871 the law of 1862 was changed in a most important direction.

In order to fully appreciate the change the material sections of the two acts are quoted in full.

The material sections of the act entitled "An act to organize the Navy Department of the United States," approved July 5, 1862, are as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That there shall be established in the Navy Department the following bureaus, to wit: First, a Bureau of Yards and Docks; second, a Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting; third, a Bureau of Navigation; fourth, a Bureau of Ordnance; fifth, a Bureau of Construction and Repair; sixth, a Bureau of Steam Engineering; seventh, a Bureau of Provisions and Clothing; eighth, a Bureau of Medicine and Surgery.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint from the list of officers of the Navy, not below the grade of commander, a chief for each of the Bureaus of Yards and Docks, Navigation, Equipment and Recruiting, and of Ordnance, and shall in like manner appoint a chief of the Bureau of Construction and Repair, who shall be a skillful naval constructor; and shall also appoint a chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering, who shall be a skillful engineer, and be selected from the list of chief engineers of the Navy; and shall also appoint a chief of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, who shall be selected from the list of the surgeons of the Navy, and a chief of the Bureau of Provisions and Clothing, who shall be selected from the list of paymasters of the Navy of not less than ten years' standing; each of which chiefs of bureaus shall receive a salary of $3,500 per annum, unless otherwise heretofore provided for by law, which shall be in lieu of all other compensation whatever. The said chiefs of bureaus to hold their said offices for the term of four years: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to affect any provision heretofore made by law for special cases. (See volume 12 Statutes at Large, page 536.)

The changes made by the act of 1871 are found in sections 9, 10, of the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations, &c., approved March 3, 1871, and are as follows:

"SEC. 9. That of the naval constructors two shall have the relative rank of captain, three of commander, and all others that of lieutenant commander or lieutenant; and assistant naval constructors shall have the relative rank of lieutenant or master; four chaplains shall have the relative rank of captain, seven that of commander, and not more than seven that of lieutenant commander or lieutenant; and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to determine and fix the relative rank of civil engineers: Provided, That the pay of said officers shall not be increased.

"SEC. 10. That the foregoing grades, hereby established for the staff corps of the Navy, shall be filled by appointment from the highest numbers in each corps, according to seniority, and that new commissions shall be issued to the officers so appointed, in which commissions the titles and grades herein established shall be inserted; and no existing commission shall be vacated in the said several staff corps, except by the issue of new commissions required by the provisions of this act, and no officer shall be reduced in rank or lose seniority in his own corps by any change which may be required under the provisions of this act; and the officers of the staff corps of the Navy shall take precedence in their several corps, and in their several grades, and with officers of the line with whom they hold relative rank, according to length of service in the Navy: Provided, That in estimating the length of service for this purpose the several officers of the staff corps shall respectively take precedence in their several grades and with those officers of the line of the Navy with whom they hold relative rank, who have been in the naval service six years longer than such officers of said staff corps have been in said service: And provided further, That in estimating such length of service officers who have been advanced or lost numbers on the Navy Register shall be considered as having gained or lost length of service accordingly: And provided further, That chiefs of bureaus may be appointed from officers having the relative rank of captain in the staff corps of the Navy on the active-list: And provided further, That no staff officer shall, in virtue of his relative rank or precedence, have any additional right to quarters: And provided further, That any staff officer of the Navy who has performed the duty of chief of a bureau of the Navy Department for a full term shall thereafter be exempt from sea-duty except in time of war." (Volume 16, Statutes-at-Large, pages 510, 511.)

A careful perusal of the act of 1862 shows that the selection of a chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, as well as those of the Bureaus of Ordnance, Recruiting and Equipment, and Navigation, was to be exclusively from the list of the line officers of the Navy. Three military bureaus and one civil and technical bureau are included in the first clause of the section, and no difference in the mode of selecting a chief is made, nor any distinction as to the character or class of officer who shall be chief of these bureaus. On the contrary, as to the selection of chief for all four of these bureaus exactly the same law was provided. Of course, the military character of the three military bureaus required a naval officer of the line instructed in military affairs. Navigation requires a knowledge of commanding, sailing, and fighting a ship; recruiting and equipment, a knowledge of the men and materials necessary for the ship's handling and the service of her batteries; and ordnance, a knowledge of the guns and projectiles with which ships attack and defend. The words "from the list of officers of the Navy not below the grade of commander," used in the second section of the act of 1862, unquestionably refers to officers of the line. This is all the more apparent from the remainder of the section, in which is provided for the other bureaus chiefs of a different and special class and qualification—which class and qualification are carefully designated.

Now turn to the act of 1871, and mark the changes. Section 9 authorizes the President to fix the relative rank of civil engineers. Section 10 includes civil engineers in the staff corps of the Navy. Section 10 further authorizes "chiefs of bureaus to be appointed from officers having the relative rank of captain in the staff corps of the Navy on the active-list."

The inference is clear. The spirit and intention of the law was to provide a suitable, appropriate chief for each bureau of the Navy. This was done by the law of 1862, except for the Bureau of Yards and Docks. The only appropriate chief for that bureau was an engineer, but it was requisite, in order to preserve the harmony of the military feature, that a chief of bureau should also be an officer of a certain relative rank. Civil engineers were not officers, and had no rank. For this reason, and from other causes already referred to, the Bureau of Yards and Docks was included with the military bureaus, and chiefs were selected from the line. Thus it remained until 1871. Then the law was changed. First, the President was authorized to fix the rank, relative rank, of civil engineers; secondly, civil engineers were directly included in the staff corps of the Navy, and simultaneously with these changes the law in relation to the appointment of chiefs of bureaus was changed and broadened so as to admit officers of the staff corps to the position of chiefs of bureaus.

Whether, Mr. Chairman, the present bureau system be continued or a reorganization of the navy-yards be effected on a modified system, as recommended by the honorable Secretary of the Navy, it seems quite clear that common-sense business views and methods should obtain with regard to the proper administration of this branch of the service and that the important professional work of designing, constructing, repairing, and maintaining all the extensive public works under the Navy Department should be embraced under one head, division, bureau, or department thereof, and committed to the general charge and direction of a practical civil engineer, who shall be directly subject to the orders of and responsible to the Secretary of the Navy, the appointment to be made by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a specified term, at proper compensation, with no other restriction as to selection than that he shall be a skillful and experienced civil engineer, whether from the Navy, Army, or civil life.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to reserve the point of order upon the section which the Clerk is now about to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make such transfers of the appropriations made by this act from one bureau to another as may become necessary by reason of any change in existing law, or by reason of any order by the Secretary transferring authority from one bureau to another; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transfer, by written order, any materials purchased for any bureau in the Navy Department to and for use in any other bureau.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will state his point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. It is with extreme reluctance that I make the point of order; but the principle involved is so important that I feel impelled by a sense of duty to do so.

The law of 1809 was repealed in 1868, which permitted this transfer of items——

Mr. HERBERT. Perhaps we can shorten this if the gentleman will yield to me for a moment. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will consent I will admit that the latter portion, beginning with the words "and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transfer," &c., is subject to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the whole of it is, and I desire to have a ruling upon the paragraph.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent to consider as eliminated from the section the words I have indicated.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to the gentleman's having that done if it is his desire.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask the Chairman to put that question. I ask for unanimous consent to strike out all of the paragraph beginning with the words "and the Secretary of the Navy," in line 908.

Mr. GOFF. I understand you to concede the point of order to be well taken on that?

Mr. RANDALL. There is affirmative law on the statute-books upon this subject, to which I wish to call the attention of the committee. The law of 1809 permitted it to be done upon the approval of the President. The law of 1868 repealed the act of 1809, and subsequently there was incorporated into the Revised Statutes the substance of that act of 1868, which I will cause to be read in this connection, showing that by affirmative law this shall not be done, and that the proposition to do it here is amenable to the point of order.

I ask the Clerk to read the statute I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That so much of the first section of the act of March 3, 1809, entitled "An act further to amend the several acts for the establishment and regulation of the Treasury, War, and Navy Departments, as authorizes the President, on the application of the Secretary of any Department, to transfer the moneys appropriated for a particular branch of that Department to another branch of expenditure in the same Department, be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and all acts or parts of acts authorizing such transfer of appropriations be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. RANDALL. I now ask the Clerk to read from the Revised Statutes section 3678.

The Clerk read as follows:

All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others.

Mr. RANDALL. This paragraph, to which I make the point of order, changes that existing law on an appropriation bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reply to that point of order, but as it is near 5 o'clock, I shall ask the committee to rise for the purpose of making a request for unanimous consent to vacate the order heretofore made for a recess from 5 o'clock until half past 7. It will be agreed by those interested in the session to-night to vacate that order. So, with that view, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committe accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the naval appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HERBERT. I ask unanimous consent that the order heretofore made be vacated; or rather I yield to the gentleman from Maryland, who will make that request.

VACATION OF ORDER FOR EVENING SESSION.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the order heretofore made providing for a recess from 5 o'clock to-day until half past 7, for the purpose of eulogies upon the late Hon. William H. Cole, of Maryland, be vacated and that Monday evening next, at the same hour, be assigned in lieu of the order for to-night.

The SPEAKER. That includes the taking of a recess at 5 o'clock?

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. That is the request.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise? Does he wish to object?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I want to make a statement, and ask unanimous consent that this session for Monday night be accompanied with the same order for a session on Tuesday night, to be devoted to business from the Committee on Labor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Maryland. Is there objection to that request?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Now, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next at 5 o'clock the House take a recess until half past 7 for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Labor. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded; but the Chair will state the request of the gentleman from Missouri, that the House take a recess from 5 o'clock until half past 7 on Tuesday next, the evening session to be devoted to the consideration of business from the Committee on Labor. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLS and others objected.

Mr. COWLES. I object unless it includes the education bill.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the bill making appropriations for the support of the Navy.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Alpheus R. French.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3280) to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, &c.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment additional to those herotofore adopted the bill (H. R. 367) to amend section 536 of the Revised Statutes relating to the division of the State of Illinois into judicial districts, and to provide for holding terms of court of the northern district at the city of Peoria.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion of Mr. HERBERT was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. MCCREARY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HERBERT. There is but one paragraph left in this bill and not yet considered, and I think we can dispose of that in ten minutes. I hope, therefore, members will not leave, but will remain till we have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

There is a point of order made against a provision of the bill. I insist the point of order is not good. That point of order I deem important. An argument has been made in favor of it, and I desire the Chair to hear me very briefly.

The provision against which the point of order is made is as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make such transfers of the appropriations made by this act from one bureau to another as may become necessary by reason of any change in existing law, or by reason of any order by the Secretary transferring authority from one bureau to another; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to transfer, by written order, any materials purchased for any bureau in the Navy Department to and for use in any other bureau.

The purpose of that provision is this: We have pending a bill which proposes to consolidate certain bureaus of the Navy Department which can not pass at this session, but that bill may become a law in the next Congress before the fiscal year expires which this bill appropriates for. But if that bill does not pass the Secretary has the power by virtue of the organic act constituting eight bureaus of the Navy Department to distribute authority among them as he shall see proper. He has made certain changes. He contemplates making others. In appropriating money we must necessarily be guided by the division of authority now existing and so we have appropriated according to the present distribution of authority.

Mr. GOFF. That seems to me is a concession that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. RANDALL. It is quite plain that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. HERBERT. It is plain to the gentleman because he does not understand what I am proceeding to state.

Every appropriation is for some specific object. Money appropriated for a specific object must be expended by the bureau having jurisdiction over that object. It certainly is the intention of Congress to have the money spent upon the object to which it is appropriated. This amendment simply provides that if the Secretary transfers jurisdiction over the object from one bureau to another the money shall follow the transfer.

Now, Congress when it makes an appropriation may do it with a double aspect. It may provide for a contingency. It is exactly like the law relating to gifts or grants. A grant may be made absolutely or it may be made to depend upon a contingency. And now we propose in this provision to enact that this money is appropriated if there shall be no change just according to the present distribution of authority; but if there shall be a change, then the appropriation shall follow the authority—to use it wherever it may be vested.

The law which has been read I do not dispute. But it has no application to a provision of this kind. That law declares that when appropriations are made for a specific purpose they shall not be diverted from that purpose. If this provision undertook to apply to appropriations already made, it would be a very different thing. But the provision does not do anything of that kind. It is simply the condition of the grant. It travels along with the grant, and at every step determines where that grant shall go.

Congress grants money to be used, for instance, for the construction of steam capstans. They are now under the charge of the Bureau of Engineering. They once were under the charge of the Bureau of Construction. Now, if another change should be made such as heretofore has been made changing these from the Bureau of Construction, the appropriation ought to follow. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

In the uneasy and restless condition of the House, I will close what I offer on the point of order, believing the Chair apprehends my point, by saying this declaration at the close of this bill is simply like a declaration in a deed setting forth the purpose of a grant. In reference to this particular grant the paragraph shows the idea Congress had in mind at the time it made the grant.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule referred to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania reads as follows:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or any amendment thereto.

The gentleman claims that the section of the bill on which he has raised the point of order is new legislation, and refers to the present law, which reads:

All sums appropriated for the various branches of expenditure in the public service shall be applied solely to the objects for which they are respectively made, and for no others.

The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken.

[Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

Mr. HERBERT. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments favorably to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCREARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, and had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. HERBERT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole be agreed to in gross.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded upon any one of the amendments?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes. I desire a separate vote on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. MCMILLIN. Yes; let us have a separate vote on that.

Mr. HERBERT. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Is any other separate vote demanded? [A pause.] If not, the vote will be taken upon agreeing to the amendments in gross. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] demands the previous question on the amendments and upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment upon which a separate vote is demanded.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 875 insert:

"For the construction of two swift double-bottom steel cruisers, each of about 10,000 tons displacement, of the type of the Newark, except boilers and machinery; four of about 1,700 tons displacement, of the type of gunboat No. 1, each, and one swift torpedo-boat, said vessels to cost altogether, exclusive of armament, not over $4,950,000, the sum of $2,470,000 is hereby appropriated. That each of the aforesaid vessels shall be built, as near as may be, in compliance with the provisions of the act of August 3, 1886, entitled 'An act to increase the efficiency of the naval establishment.'"

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. ROGERS called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 151, nays 72, not voting 96; as follows:

YEAS—151.

So the amendment was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. EDEN, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following-named members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. SADLER with Mr. IKE TAYLOR.

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont.

Mr. FISHER with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. PARKER.

Mr. PIDCOCK with Mr. FUNSTON.

Mr. BARRY with Mr. BRUMM.

Mr. HENDERSON, of North Carolina, with Mr. MARKHAM.

Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. HOUK.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DORSEY.

Mr. DAWSON with Mr. HALE.

Mr. COX, of New York, with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. DOCKERY with Mr. WADE.

Mr. O'FERRALL with Mr. VAN SCHAICK.

Mr. SHAW with Mr. ALLEN, of Massachusetts.

Mr. WHITE with Mr. COLLINS.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. WEST.

Mr. SKINNER and Mr. MILLIKEN were announced as paired on this bill. Mr. SKINNER, if present, would vote against the bill and amendments. Mr. MILLIKEN would vote for the amendments.

Mr. MILLS and Mr. MCKINLEY were announced as paired until Monday next.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. CLARDY with Mr. BUCHANAN.

Mr. HIRES with Mr. HATCH; also, on this bill.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. WALLACE and Mr. WAIT were announced as paired on this vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is now upon agreeing to the remainder of the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HERBERT. On that I call for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. COWLES. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 8 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 107, noes 28.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. HERBERT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRINTING OF EULOGIES ON DECEASED MEMBERS.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 263) providing for printing the eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Abraham Dowdney; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this resolution.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the joint resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, &c., That there be printed of the eulogies delivered in Congess upon the late Abraham Dowdney, a Representative in the Forty-ninth Congress from the State of New York, 12,500 copies; of which 3,000 copies shall be for the use of the Senate, and 9,500 for the use of the House of Representatives; and that the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of the said Abraham Dowdney to accompany said eulogies; and for the purpose of engraving and printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the resolution so as to include the printing of eulogies delivered upon the late John Arnot, jr., and also the engraving and printing of his portrait.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] will be adopted.

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to insert also a provision for printing the eulogies on Hon. Lewis Beach, late a member of this House, and engraving his portrait.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that amendment will be agreed to. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to insert a similar provision in regard to William T. Price, late a Representative from the State of Wisconsin.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, that amendment will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Let it be understood that the same number of copies be printed in each case.

The SPEAKER. That will be understood, if there is no objection.

Mr. GIBSON, of Maryland. I move a further amendment, to insert the name of William H. Cole, late a member of the House from the State of Maryland. I ask that the amendment include the printing of the eulogies, together with the portrait, as in the other cases.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and that amendment will be regarded as adopted.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I ask that the resolution be now put on its passage.

The joint resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that will not be done.

The motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes 48, noes 87.

HOURS OF LABOR IN SURGEON-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL] has a privileged report. It will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 7, 1887.

Whereas it is stated upon what appears to be reliable authority that on the 1st of February, 1887, the Surgeon-General of the United States, with the approval of the Secretary of War, as is alleged, issued an order requiring all clerks and employés in the record and pension divisions of the Surgeon-General's Office to report for extra duty from 6 to 9 o'clock p. m., unless excused for sickness; and

Whereas the established hours of labor of all the clerical employés of the Government as now fixed are from 9 o'clock a. m. to 4 o'clock p. m. of each working day: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Labor be instructed to find the facts in the premises, and if such an order has been made to particularly inquire by what authority of law it was issued and whether compliance therewith is compulsory; and, if so, whether any additional compensation is allowed therefor; and further, what legislation, if any, is necessary to protect the clerical employés of the Government from such exactions; and to report their conclusions by bill or otherwise on or before Tuesday next.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is this report privileged?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The Chair supposed that the gentleman from Missouri desired to report back a resolution calling for executive information. But this is a resolution instructing the committee to make a certain investigation.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I only ask to make the report in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to receiving the report and referring it to the Committee on Appropriations?

Several members objected.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STEELE. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that will not be done.

The motion was not agreed to, there being—ayes 37, noes 80.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of general appropriation bills, the object being to consider the legislative appropriation bill.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 95, noes 9.

Mr. BRADY. No quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. Perhaps there will be no objection to taking a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Regular order.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BRADY and Mr. HOLMAN were appointed.

The House proceeded to divide.

Mr. CANNON. I want to submit to the gentleman from Indiana, if I can have his attention, that we have unanimous consent to take a recess until to-morrow evening at 7 o'clock.

Mr. MORRISON. Oh, no; that is Sunday.

Mr. MCMILLIN. We had better work Saturday night than Sunday.

Mr. BURROWS. There is no occasion for holding a session on Sunday.

The SPEAKER. If all gentlemen have voted who desire to do so, the Chair will announce the result of the vote.

The tellers reported—ayes 121, noes 4.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No quorum.

Mr. SCOTT. I demand a call of the House.

The question was taken, and on a division there were—ayes 44, noes 68.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 45, noes 65.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move a call of the House.

Mr. BURROWS. Can it not be agreed, upon both sides, that we take a recess from now until 8 this evening, the session to be closed at 12 o'clock?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Say not later than 12.

Mr. BURROWS. I am willing to accept that.

Mr. HAMMOND. You should specify the object for which the House meets.

Mr. BURROWS. Of course for the consideration of the appropriation bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. That should be understood.

Mr. BURROWS. My request is that by unanimous consent we take a recess until 8 o'clock for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill, and the session shall close not later than 12.

Mr. STEELE. And that we meet for debate only. [Cries of "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. BRADY. I object.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then, in view of the fact that we are confronted with the prospect of an extra session, I move a call of the House.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman from Tennessee last evening voted about 4 o'clock to adjourn. He ought to have thought of that then.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman from Tennessee can take care of himself.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill H. R. 10394, the Indian appropriation bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. If my friend from Tennessee will withdraw his motion and permit me to do so, I will move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock, the session to continue not later than 12.

Mr. McMILLIN. Very well.

The SPEAKER. That request has been objected to.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I make a motion that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock, the session to continue not later than 12, for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. Upon that I ask the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will be done without the necessity for a roll-call.

Mr. SPRINGER. I withdraw the demand.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HOLMAN; and on a division there were—ayes 113, noes 7.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays, when 48 members voted in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a point of order. Before the Chair had announced the result of the vote on the demand for the yeas and nays I moved that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not hear the gentleman; there was so much confusion on the floor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the House was dividing at the time.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The gentleman did make the motion. I heard him.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman states that he made the motion, but there was so much confusion on the floor the Chair did not hear him.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. BURROWS. I think the objection which was made to my proposition to take a recess until 8 o'clock, the session to terminate not later than 12, will be withdrawn, and then we can have a vote.

The SPEAKER. Is the objection withdrawn?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is not.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 144, nays 9, not voting 166; as follows:

There was no objection.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. TUCKER with Mr. WADE, on this vote.

The SPEAKER. Upon this question the ayes are 143, the noes 0. No quorum has voted.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that there be a call of the House.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 36.

So a call of the House was ordered.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following-named members failed to answer:

Mr. JONES, of Alabama.
Mr. WHEELER. I am informed that my colleague [Mr. JONES] left the House sick. I ask that he be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. KELLEY.
Mr. STEELE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Judge KELLEY be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. LAFFOON: No excuse offered.
Mr. LAWLER: No excuse offered.
Mr. LE FEVRE: No excuse offered.
Mr. LIBBEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. LINDSLEY: No excuse offered.
Mr. LITTLE: No excuse offered.
Mr. LONG: No excuse offered.
Mr. LORE: No excuse offered.
Mr. LOUTTIT: No excuse offered.
Mr. LOVERING: No excuse offered.
Mr. LOWRY: No excuse offered.
Mr. MARKHAM.
Mr. MORROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. MARKHAM, be excused, as he is quite ill. It is true that he has been here to-day, but he is under the care of a physician and can not safely be out at night.
There was no objection.
Mr. MCKINLEY.
Mr. GROSVENOR. My colleague, Mr. MCKINLEY, has gone to visit his wife who is ill at Philadelphia, and I ask that he be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. MILLARD: No excuse offered.
Mr. MILLER.
Mr. STEWART, of Texas. Mr. Speaker, my colleague, Mr. MILLER, is in feeble health and I ask that he be excused.
There was no objection.

Mr. WOLFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. TAULBEE, be excused on account of sickness in his family.
There was no objection.
Mr. TARSNEY. I ask that my colleague, Mr. FISHER, be excused on account of important business.
A MEMBER. I object.
Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR: No excuse offered.
Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR: No excuse offered.
Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR: No excuse offered.
Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.
Mr. REED. I ask that Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. THOMPSON: No excuse offered.
Mr. THROCKMORTON: No excuse offered.
Mr. VAN SCHAICK: No excuse offered.
Mr. VIELE: No excuse offered.
Mr. WAIT.
Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. WAIT, be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. WADE: No excuse offered.
Mr. WADSWORTH.
Mr. STEELE. I ask that the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. WADSWORTH, be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. WAKEFIELD: No excuse offered.
Mr. WALLACE: No excuse offered.
Mr. WARD, of Illinois: No excuse offered.
Mr. WARD, of Indiana: No excuse offered.
Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska: No excuse offered.
Mr. WELLBORN: No excuse offered.
Mr. WEST: No excuse offered.
Mr. WHITING.
Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. WHITING, be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. SWINBURNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. JOHNSTON, of New York, be excused. He has gone home sick.
There was no objection.
Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania: No excuse offered.
Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota: No excuse offered.
Mr. WILSON: No excuse offered.
Mr. WINANS: No excuse offered.
Mr. WOODBURN: No excuse offered.
Mr. NEGLEY. I ask that Mr. GILFILLAN, of Minnesota, be excused. He left here feeling quite unwell.
There was no objection.
Mr. GROSVENOR. I ask that my colleague, Mr. BROWN, of Ohio, be excused on account of ill health.
There was no objection.
Mr. J. M. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I ask that my colleague, Mr. GLASS, be excused on account of ill health.
There was no objection.
Mr. BRADY. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that Mr. LAWLER, of Illinois, is sick, and I ask that he be excused.
Objection was made.
Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. BOUTELLE. I understand that the Capitol is on fire, and this Hall is already filled with smoke. Therefore, I raise the question whether it is proper that we should be locked in here exposed to the danger of being asphyxiated? [Laughter.]
The SPEAKER. That is not a question of privilege. The fire department will probably take care of that.
Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I ask that Mr. HISCOCK be excused.
There was no objection.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I ask that Mr. BUCHANAN be excused. He is confined to his room by sickness.
There was no objection.
Mr. STEELE. I ask that my colleague, Mr. BROWNE, be excused.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman's colleague, Mr. BROWNE, has leave of absence.
Mr. STEELE. I understand my colleague from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] is indisposed.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman has leave of absence.
Mr. EDEN. I ask that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] be excused. When he left this afternoon he was not well.
There being no objection, Mr. HAMMOND was excused.
Mr. HOLMAN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody and bring to the bar of the House such of its members as are now absent without leave of the House.

The resolution was adopted.
Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I submit the resolution which I ask the Clerk to read.
The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the members who voluntarily present themselves at the doors of the Hall of the House before 8 o'clock shall be immediately admitted by the Doorkeeper, and shall not be required to give excuse for their absence.

Mr. RANDALL and others. That is right.
The resolution was adopted.
Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.
The motion was not agreed to; there being ayes 18, noes 55.
Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock on Monday morning. That will forward business a great deal more than continuing these proceedings to-night.
Several members objected.
Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.
Mr. BURROWS. It seems to me the effect of the resolution offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] will be virtually to suspend all proceedings until 8 o'clock. I hope unanimous consent will be given that we take a recess until that time.
A MEMBER. Would that dispense with the call?
The SPEAKER. It would not. Unanimous consent is asked that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening.
Mr. SPRINGER. Everything to remain just as it is now.
Mr. JACKSON. I object.
Mr. PERKINS. I ask unanimous consent that we take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.
A MEMBER. You do not mean Sunday morning?
Mr. JACKSON. I will withdraw my objection upon the condition that the evening session shall not continue beyond 12 o'clock.
Mr. BLANCHARD. I renew the objection.
Mr. SPRINGER (after a pause). I renew the request that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, everything to remain just as it is now until that time.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object, unless the agreement is made to adjourn at 12 o'clock.
Mr. McMILLIN. That is in the original proposition.
The SPEAKER. It is not in this.
Mr. SPRINGER. The session of to-night not to continue beyond 12 o'clock.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous concent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock, the session of this evening not to continue beyond 12 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.
The House accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock.

---

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) resumed its session.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the legislative appropriation bill.
The SPEAKER. The call of the House has not been dispensed with.
Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my motion for the present.
Mr. STEELE. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.
The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 29, noes 68.
So the motion was not agreed to.
Mr. McMILLIN. My colleague, Mr. GLASS, is sick, and I ask that he be excused from attendance to-night.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman has been excused.
Mr. CRISP. I saw my colleague, Mr. HAMMOND, when I went to dinner. He was not feeling well, and asked to be excused.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman was excused.
Mr. CRISP. He understood that objection was made.
Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I desire to offer a resolution.
The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read.
Mr. STEELE. I rise to a point of order.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. STEELE. Can the gentleman offer any resolution now except by unanimous consent?
The SPEAKER. If it relates to the call of the House. The Chair does not know, of course, what it is until it has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That all members who voluntarily present themselves at the door of the Hall shall be immediately admitted by the Doorkeeper, and their names reported to the Clerk.

Mr. STEELE. Is that in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. It relates to the call of the House.

Mr. STEELE. I move to lay it on the table.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 37, noes 70.

Mr. STEELE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is not required in proceedings under a call of the House.

Mr. STEELE. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was refused.

Mr. DUNHAM. I make the point of order that the gentleman can not do that.

Mr. STEELE. But I have done it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays were not called on the motion; and the presumption is that the gentleman voted with the prevailing side.

Mr. DUNHAM. But we know, Mr. Speaker, that he did not.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 20, noes 59.

Mr. STEELE. I demand tellers. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. It does not require a quorum.

Tellers were refused, 11 members only voting in favor thereof.

So the motion to reconsider was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I hope the House will notice that this resolution does not excuse any member for being absent. It simply does away with a vicious and unnecessary custom, which in my opinion ought never to exist, by which the Doorkeeper prevents those members who present themselves at the door from coming in after a call of the House is ordered until a number can be gathered together and they can be presented in a squad under the charge of an officer of the House to stand up before the Speaker's desk and offer excuses.

Mr. STEELE. My colleague from Indiana has come over and proposed to the gentleman who drew this resolution to offer it. Now I have no doubt that he feels——

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I believe I have the floor.

Mr. STEELE. I will yield until the gentleman gets through. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. So long as I am in Congress I mean to do all I can to put a stop to the discreditable proceedings which usually take place here when there is a call of the House. A call of the House is a serious business proceeding. Its purpose is to secure a quorum; and gentlemen have the right to urge a call of the House in order to secure a quorum. But in our endeavors to secure that we ought to take such measures as will give all gentlemen an inducement to come and not give them an inducement to stay away.

Mr. STEELE. I want to raise a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. STEELE. The gentleman proposes by this motion to set aside a rule of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. There is no rule of the House which requires the Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest and bring in absent members.

Mr. STEELE. But a resolution was adopted for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The rule simply provides that the House by a majority vote may do that.

Mr. STEELE. And it has been done.

The SPEAKER. The House has passed a resolution directing him to do so; but it is still in the power of the House to modify that resolution in any way that it shall see proper.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The true policy, whenever the House finds itself in want of a quorum, which usually happens towards the close of the business day, is to provide some way by which those members who are presumed to be innocently absent, and who after having gotten their dinner present themselves at the doors of the Hall within a reasonable time, for admission, shall be at once admitted without the restriction which is now thrown around their entrance.

In my opinion they ought not to be even required under such circumstances to give excuses. Those who deliberately and persistently absent themselves ought, in my judgment, to be fined. I do not think that a fine of a thousand dollars, such as is sometimes proposed here in our midnight sessions, when we are all irritable, ought ever to be proposed or even suggested. But a moderate fine might be imposed on members who persistently stay away.

It will be observed, also, that this resolution does not relieve any member when he arrives here from any penalty that may attach to his absence. It simply requires the Doorkeeper to admit members who voluntarily come back immediately to the floor of the House, and report their names to the Clerk. In that way we shall ascertain as soon as possible when a quorum is present.

Mr. STEELE. Let me ask the gentleman a question. How can a man be "innocently absent" before the House adjourns after it has gone into session?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Technically every member is obliged to be here at all times when the House is in session. What I meant by saying innocently absent, where a member does not stay away when he knows there is a call of the House, when he has had fair notice, and time to reach the House.

Mr. MORGAN. He does not stay away in contempt of the House.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Yes; that he does not remain away in contempt of the House. This resolution does not relieve any member from any responsibility for his absence. We allow the Doorkeeper to admit them to-night, instead of keeping them out of the House.

Mr. SCOTT. I want to know, Mr. Speaker, whether ignorance of the rules of the House would be any excuse on the occasion we have before us to-night? I came here at 11 o'clock this morning and stayed until 6 o'clock to-day, and voted on the adjournment of the House to meet at 8 o'clock. In my ignorance I supposed no other question was in order except one that when a majority of this House voted to adjourn the House was going to adjourn and meet at 8 o'clock. I got my dinner as early as I could, and by good luck got back here before 8 o'clock. If I had gotten here a few minutes later I would have been in the lobby and subject to a fine [cries of "No!"] simply because I was not aware in my total ignorance anything else was in order after the House had voted to adjourn except to adjourn and meet at 8 o'clock.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 79, noes 13.

Mr. STEELE. I rise to a point of order. Does it require a quorum?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it does not require a quorum to determine matters under a call of the House, because the object of a call of the House is to secure the attendance of a quorum. The ayes have it, and the previous question is ordered.

The question recurred on the adoption of the resolution.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 12.

So the resolution was adopted.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will admit gentlemen who are now at the door of the House.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to suggest to the House that we enter upon the consideration of this bill by unanimous consent to the extent of indulging in some debate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. No.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. While a quorum is gathering the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] desires to be heard on the bill, and I suggest we allow general debate for half an hour.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But four days of the session remain; what do we want debate for?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. My honorable friend will see we might have that debate while we are securing a quorum.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I withdraw my objection so far as I am concerned.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Louisiana be allowed to address the House. How long does my friend want?

The SPEAKER. The committee is not in session.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask by unanimous consent Mr. BLANCHARD may have leave to address the House on the legislative appropriation bill.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That is irregular.

Mr. HEPBURN and Mr. REED objected.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest the bill is in the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. It is necessary before going into committee to dispense with the proceedings under the call, because the committee can not enforce the call of the House.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask the House grant unanimous consent that further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to; and all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 10396) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1854) authorizing the Treasurer of the United States to credit the District of Columbia with certain moneys in lieu of investing the same in bonds, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PALMER, Mr. CHENEY, and Mr. HARRIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. 3342) granting the right of way to the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad through the Fort Crawford military reservation.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 10912) making appropriations for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky Mountains.

Mr. McRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Alpheus R. French.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 13, 1888, and for other purposes.

Mr. BRADY. I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. All points of order, I understand, have been reserved.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; points of order have been reserved. I ask unanimous consent that the first and formal reading of the bill be dispensed with.

Mr. BRADY. I object. I ask for the first reading of the bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. I hope the gentleman will not insist on that, for this reason: We stand to-night with the fact confronting us that on this morning but one of the general appropriation bills had been signed by the President; and if we are to escape an extra session it can only be done by strenuous and persistent work and the wasting of no time.

Mr. BRADY. We are not responsible for the waste of time.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. One member of the House has called this whole House together to-night. I join in the objection to dispensing with the reading of the bill, because no one member has the right to call the whole House here that he may speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill in extenso.

Mr. BRADY (interrupting the reading). I ask that there be order. There is so much confusion that we can not hear the reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair requests gentlemen to resume their seats, and to cease conversation or retire to the cloak-room.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. DUNHAM (interrupting the reading when the Clerk had reached page 77). I desire to ask a parliamentary question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Would it be in order to move to dispense with the further reading of the bill, and proceed to consider by sections what has been read, leaving the balance to be read when it is reached?

The CHAIRMAN. That would not be in order except by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent that that course be pursued.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY] be allowed to take the Clerk into the room of the Committee on Appropriations and have the bill read to him there.

Mr. BRADY. I offer an amendment that the gentleman from Illinois go to the committee-room himself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. PETTIBONE (interrupting the reading when the Clerk had reached page 90). I move that the committee rise.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Oh, let the Clerk go on and finish the reading.

Mr. BRADY. I call for the regular order.

Mr. DUNHAM. I make the point of order that the Clerk can not be interrupted while reading the bill by a motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is in order to move at any time that the committee rise.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Does the Chair decide that pending the reading of the bill that motion is in order?

Mr. BRADY. It has frequently occurred. This motion is made every day under such circumstances.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the regular order. Let us go on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the first reading of the bill is in no respect different so far as that is concerned from the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule. The reading is part of the proceedings of the committee and can be interrupted at any time by a motion that the committee rise. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] moves that the committee rise.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 3, noes 107.

Mr. BRADY. I make the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not required.

Mr. BRADY. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PETTIBONE. And upon that appeal I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. A quorum is not required on the motion that the committee rise, that motion being equivalent in Committee of the Whole to the motion in the House that the House adjourn. Therefore the Chair does not entertain the appeal. [Cries of "Read! Read!"]

Mr. BRADY. Mr. Chairman, this point has been made heretofore in a similar proceeding, and the Chair has entertained the appeal from his decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The question of a quorum can not be raised upon the simple motion that the committee rise, and the Chair can not entertain an appeal upon that question; otherwise it would be in the power of one member at any time to prevent the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MILLS. Precisely; there is no appeal. Let the Clerk read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the appeal.

Mr. MILLS. There is no appeal. [Cries of "Regular order."]

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The Chair requests the committee to be in order.

Mr. BRADY. Do I understand the Chair to decide that it declines to entertain an appeal from the decision of the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The motion that the committee rise being equivalent to the motion to adjourn in the House, the Chair is of the opinion that a quorum is not required.

Mr. BRADY. And I have a right to appeal from that decision, and from any decision made by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that where the rule is so evident as it is in this case the question is not one upon which the decision of the Chair is subject to review. Otherwise the purpose of the House to adjourn at any time might be defeated by one member. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BRADY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to enter an appeal from that last decision. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I claim that any member of this House——

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that it has already appeared that there is not a quorum present. The Chair decided that there was, and the gentleman from Virginia appealed from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. The Chair did not decide that there was a quorum present. The Chair decided that it was not necessary to have a quorum upon the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I believe I am entitled to the floor, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETTIBONE. The point was made that there was no quorum, and the Chair held that it was not necessary there should be a quorum. From that decision the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY] took an appeal——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair declined to entertain that appeal, and now declines.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Does the chairman of this committee of the House undertake arbitrarily to refuse to listen to a member?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the question of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I am speaking to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his question of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I mean to say that there is no time in the consideration of any measure in this House when a member desires to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair that he has not the right to appeal to the House. The chairman of this committee is simply the representative of the members of this House, and when he undertakes to arrogate to himself the right to say that he shall speak or decide as against the House he simply violates every rule of the House, and any member who wishes to appeal has the right to do so. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!" "Read!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order, and the Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk resumed the reading.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman—— [Renewed cries of "Regular order;" during which the Clerk continued to read the bill.]

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, I send to the desk to have read a previous ruling of the Speaker of the House upon this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the point.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I desire to have read from the desk by the Clerk the previous holding of the Speaker of the House upon this very question.

Mr. MILLS. There is no appeal. [Renewed cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. PETTIBONE. I can read it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Very well, I will read it myself. It is upon the appeal from a decision of the Chair. I read:

The Chair is very willing to hear the gentleman on this point of order, but he must adhere to his ruling. The Chair holds that clause 2——

[Loud cries of "Read!" "Read!" and "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee must be in order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The Chairman of the committee ought to be honest. [Laughter and confusion.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not entertain any motion or listen to any remark upon the appeal or any other question until the committee is in order.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I desire to have the Clerk read what I have marked as bearing upon this question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair will entertain no business until gentlemen resume their seats and are in order. The Chair insists on order being preserved. [A pause.]

Several MEMBERS. Regular order!

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The regular order is for the Chair to——

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is for the committee to be in order. The Chair requests gentlemen to resume their seats and be in order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not entertain any remarks until gentlemen resume their seats and are in order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am in my seat.

The CHAIRMAN. Other members are not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I stand here as the representative——

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have the floor. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] as entitled to the floor when the committee is in order.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I desire that the Clerk read as part of my remarks, and for the consideration of the House, the passage I have marked.

The Clerk read as follows from the proceedings of the House of May 22, 1880:

Mr. TUCKER. I hope the Chair will now decide the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is very willing to hear gentlemen on this point of order, but he must adhere to his ruling. The Chair holds that clause 2 of Rule XXIII applies to cases arising in the Committee of the Whole when in the transaction of business in the committee it finds itself without a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the Clerk is now reading from proceedings in the Forty-sixth Congress, when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS] was acting as Chairman, and when a similar question to the present arose.

The decision made by the Chair at that time is now being read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It seems to the Chair that upon the simple question whether the committee will rise, no quorum being required in that case to determine the question, the point of order that no quorum has voted is not well taken. The object of the rule is to prohibit the Committee of the Whole from doing business without a quorum. And when engaged in the transaction of business, if the fact is disclosed that there is no quorum present in the committee, then the point of order can be made that no quorum is present, and the roll will be called. But it seems to the Chair that upon the question "Shall the committee rise?" a quorum not being necessary to determine that question, the point of order can not be made at that stage of the proceedings of the committee that there is no quorum.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the Chair allow me to make a parliamentary inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BRAGG. My inquiry is this: whether, having gone into Committee of the Whole, what we have been doing is not business? I understand that what we have been doing is throwing light upon the rules of this House. Is not that business?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is not, in the sense of this rule.

Mr. BRAGG. With all due respect to the Chair, I appeal from his decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. CALKINS. As I understand the ruling of the Chair, it is that when no quorum has been disclosed on the last vote, and a member makes the motion that the committee rise, it is in order. Is that the ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order at any time to move that the committee rise; but the Chair holds that it does not require a quorum of the committee to determine that question.

Mr. CLYMER. And that less than a quorum can keep the committee in session perpetually?

The CHAIRMAN. Less than a quorum can rise or refuse to rise.

Mr. TUCKER. Less than a quorum can keep the committee in session when there is a minority that will not vote in order to make a quorum.

The question being taken, "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?" there were—ayes 87, noes 8.

Mr. CLYMER and Mr. BRAGG. No quorum voting!

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum having voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand the decision of the Chair to be that less than a quorum can transact business in committee. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. BOUCK. We are deciding parliamentary law now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not so hold. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COOK] will please act as tellers.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise to a point of order. On the motion that the committee rise a vote was taken and no quorum was disclosed. The point that no quorum had voted on the proposition was made, and the Chair decided that it did not require a quorum for the committee to rise. Now an appeal is taken from that decision of the Chair; and if it did not require a quorum to determine the question whether the committee should rise, I submit that on the same principle the pending question can be decided by a majority vote, without reference to the presence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will take their places.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—102 in the affirmative, 1 in the negative.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Mr. Chairman, I made a motion a few minutes ago that the committee rise. The question was put on that motion, and it was declared by the Chairman that the committee refused to rise. Thereupon a demand for a division was made by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY]. The announcement of that vote was made. The gentleman from Virginia then took his appeal, and upon that appeal——

Mr. BRADY. I made the point that there was no quorum.

Mr. PETTIBONE. The gentleman from Virginia made the point that there was no quorum.

Mr. BRADY. And the Chair decided that no quorum was necessary; from which decision I appealed. [Laughter.]

Mr. PETTIBONE. When the Chair decided that a quorum was not necessary the gentleman from Virginia took an appeal, and the Chair refused to entertain that appeal. I say that it appears by the RECORD, as just read, that on a former occasion in this House, when identically the same question was raised, the appeal was recognized, and the House proceeded to act upon it.

A MEMBER. That ruling has been reversed.

Mr. PETTIBONE. When was it reversed?

Mr. NELSON. This evening. [Laughter.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] will allow me a question. If it requires the vote of a quorum in order that the committee may rise, and we are unable to get a quorum, then, as the Committee of the Whole can not adjourn, just how would we ever get away from here? [Laughter.]

Mr. PETTIBONE. That is further on. [Laughter.] We will have a division here, and this House will see for itself whether there is a quorum present or not. It does not follow gentlemen here always vote. That is why we have tellers; that is why we have a call of the House; that is why we have a division to ascertain whether we have a quorum or we are to do business perpetually without a quorum. [Cries of "Read!"]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Therefore, it makes little difference whether it is one in order or out of order; it is one the Chair entertains and submits, and upon which the House is called upon to vote. It is simply a question now whether we have the right to appeal.

Mr. KING. I rise to a question of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. What is it?

Mr. KING. There is nothing before the committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. KING. I rise to a question of order, that there is nothing before the committee, and therefore we should proceed with the business of the committee, proceed with the reading of the bill which was in progress when it was interrupted. I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia will proceed with his remarks.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I did not catch exactly what was said by the gentleman from Louisiana. I hope he will speak louder so I may hear just what he says. [Laughter.]

Mr. KING. I stand to my point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. State it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. What is the gentleman talking about?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia will proceed.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. When interrupted I was proceeding to read a decision. [Laughter and calls of "Order!"]

Mr. KING. I insist on my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state what his point of order is.

Mr. KING. I state that there is no motion before the House, and I do not see how we can proceed in the absence of it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I have raised a point of order, and shall insist upon holding the floor until it is decided.

Mr. KING. I do not think you have the floor, as I have called the gentleman to order, and he should take his seat until the point of order is decided. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I suggest the gentleman take his seat and listen to me. [Laughter.] I raise this point. I do not care whether the original decision of the Chair was right or wrong. [Laughter and cries of "Read!"]

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman—— [Laughter.] There is nothing to laugh at. I ask the House to proceed with decorum to business. We ought to put a stop to this buffoonery. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I therefore insist on my point of order. The gentleman from Louisiana will not listen to anybody. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Order must be observed in the Hall, and members will resume their seats.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, if I can get the floor from the gentleman from Louisiana for a few moments I will continue my remarks. I did not interrupt him. It makes no difference——

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman—— [Laughter.] I insist, Mr. Chairman, you shall rule on this point. [Cries of "Order."]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not entertain any remark from any gentleman until order is restored in the Hall.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Everybody is in order except the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. KING. I insist we shall adjourn if we are to keep up this unnecessary consumption of the time of the House by stopping the progress of necessary business.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not recognize any member until order is restored. The Sergeant-at-Arms will see that members resume their seats and order is restored. [After a pause.] The gentleman will now state his point of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. In continuation of what I was saying when interrupted——

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon order and decorum being observed in the Hall, and that gentlemen shall cease their buffooning. [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I did not understand the expression used by the gentleman from Louisiana just now. He referred I think to buffoonery. I rise to know squarely whether by that language he means me.

Mr. KING. I mean nothing personal.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. If the gentleman does not mean anything personal, he ought to be manly enough not to indulge in such general remarks.

Mr. KING. I am manly enough to insist that the proceedings of the House shall be properly and decorously carried on.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Sit down, and permit me to continue my remarks.

Mr. KING. I will do so, but will hold the floor until my point of order, which is correct, is sustained. We must proceed with business. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was of the opinion when the gentleman from Virginia on the left said that he desired to appeal from the decision of the Chair on the question no quorum was required on the motion the committee rise that he was not in earnest in insisting upon that appeal, and therefore disregarded the request and proceeded with the business of the committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The Chair has no right to assume any such thing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires, if the gentleman from West Virginia will permit the Chair to do so, to make a statement.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE] insist upon the right to appeal. The Chair is ready to entertain the appeal, but was under the impression when it was made that it was not seriously insisted upon.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The Chair is right in entertaining the appeal, and I am in favor of sustaining the Chair. But what I objected to was the arbitrary ruling of the Chair preventing a member from taking an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again state that it was of opinion the appeal was not seriously made.

The Chair decided that a quorum was not required upon a motion that the committee rise. From that decision the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BRADY] appeals. The question is, shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no table in committee, so the motion is not in order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will stand by the Chair in sustaining the decision; but I wanted the Chair to give gentlemen the opportunity they were entitled to under the rules of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 155, noes 16.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. PETTIBONE (when the Clerk had reached line 2245.) Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was not agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and continued the reading of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration bill H. R. 11028, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now submit the resolution I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the rules be suspended so as to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and pass the same with the amendments following submitted by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED, Mr. CANNON, and Mr. BLANCHARD demanded a second.

Mr. STEELE. Pending the demand for a second, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. It is understood that a second is demanded.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have demanded a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 53, noes 85.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I demand tellers upon that vote.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask consent to submit one proposition to the House, which is that the motion to adjourn be withdrawn, and that tellers be ordered to see whether or not the motion of the gentleman from Indiana is seconded, and that will develop the presence or absence of a quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. That is right.

Mr. CRAIN. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will order tellers.

Mr. CANNON. I hope there will be no objection. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Anybody can say regular order without considering the proposition.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will submit the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois to the House. Is there objection that the motion to adjourn be withdrawn, and that a vote be taken by tellers on seconding the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN]?

Mr. CRAIN. Let me submit a parliamentary inquiry before the objection is withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CRAIN. What will be the effect of that proceeding as to this bill?

Mr. RANDALL. It will have no effect further than to develop the fact if there is a quorum,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That will be the effect.

Mr. CRAIN. Then I withdraw the objection.

So, there being no further objection, the motion to adjourn was withdrawn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. CANNON and Mr. REED. A second is demanded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. REED and Mr. HOLMAN as tellers.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I am perfectly content now that the gentleman from Maine should act as a teller, but I rose to demand a second as soon as the gentleman did.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman from Illinois is correct in that statement.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. But the gentleman from Louisiana also demanded it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the reason he appointed the gentleman from Maine was because the gentleman rose as soon as the question was first submitted.

Mr. CANNON. So did "the gentleman from Illinois," but the only point is that it goes to the control of the fifteen minutes allowed for debate.

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman from Illinois, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, is entitled to control the time, and I yield it to him so far as I am concerned.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to the gentleman acting as teller.

The House divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 87, noes 13.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No quorum.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock Monday.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and there were—ayes 20, noes 93.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I demand tellers.

Tellers were refused.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the House take a recess until 9 o'clock on Monday.

Mr. REED. Does the gentleman intend then to go on with the bill, paragraph by paragraph? If he does we are ready to sit here all night, but if he purposes to pass the bill in defiance of law and the rules of the House we should like to know that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before I can answer that question I should consult the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. REED. We are ready to go on now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is not debatable.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Indiana so as to make the hour of meeting 10 o'clock.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana as amended.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 117, noes 15.

Mr. STEELE and Mr. BRADY. No quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Why not have the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers——

Mr. SCOTT. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. BURROWS. Instead of consuming the time in calling the yeas and nays, would it not be better that the gentleman from Indiana should proceed with the consideration of the bill by paragraphs? We can get half through with it in a little while.

Mr. SCOTT. I insist on the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will withdraw that call.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only 15 members voting therefor.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that the motion to suspend the rules is pending. The motion the gentleman from Indiana now makes is not in order until that is disposed of or withdrawn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. TARSNEY. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Indiana that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 143, noes 14.

So (further count not being called for) the motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is open for general debate under the rule.

Mr. HOLMAN. At so late an hour I do not feel justified myself in occupying a moment of time in general debate. I had said to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] during the progress of the evening that I should be glad so far as I am concerned to secure him a fair portion of time. Half an hour was mentioned. I said to him that if he would be satisfied with fifteen minutes I would yield him that time. I now yield to the gentleman fifteen minutes of my time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would like to have more than fifteen minutes. I have made a careful study of this bill and devoted some time to its analysis and dissection. I do not think I can do justice to it in fifteen minutes. I will ask the gentleman from Indiana to yield me half an hour, which will bring us to near 12 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my friend will be satisfied with twenty minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I only want a few moments to reply to what has been said.

Mr. TUCKER. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield to me for a moment to make a suggestion? I will not even make a motion without his consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TUCKER. It is now nearly midnight, nearly Sunday morning. I appeal to the House for a moment's consideration of what we are doing. It is a scandal that this House of Representatives of the American Congress should have presented an appropriation bill at this period of the session, and spend the early hours of Sunday morning in the discussion of the bill. I was going to move that the committee rise, with the consent of the gentleman, in order that the House may now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will hear me a few minutes, because I desire if possible to have general debate closed to-night on this bill. I shall ask but a very few minutes.

Mr. CANNON. We would like to have a little time on this side.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am willing that gentlemen shall have all the time, or as much time as I shall occupy. I would be glad, however, to come to some understanding as to the duration of the debate. What time would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. CANNON. I think if we could have one recognition on this side of the House it will be sufficient.

Mr. RANDALL. That is one hour.

Mr. CANNON. Yes; and I hardly think we will consume that.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I only want a few minutes; but I had not thought of speaking to-night. I would like four or five minutes in the general debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask then that by unanimous consent it be now agreed when the House shall meet again on this bill that all general debate be confined to one hour and a half, to be divided by giving gentlemen who are opposed to the bill the other half hour, in addition to the half hour occupied by the gentleman from Louisiana, which will make one hour on each side.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Oh, no; divide the remaining time equally.

Mr. HOLMAN. I agree to an hour and a half, the time to be divided equally.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that all general debate on the pending bill be closed in an hour and a half, the time to be divided equally.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Not an hour and a half to-night.

Mr. RANDALL. On Monday morning.

Mr. JACKSON. I wish to inquire if the understanding is to be carried out by which the House was to adjourn at 12 o'clock to-night?

Several MEMBERS. That was the agreement.

Mr. CANNON. I will agree to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, with the understanding that we get one hour.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I object to that. The opponents of the bill have already had half an hour, and I object to any lop-sided arrangement.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not understand the gentleman from Illinois is opposed to the bill, although he may be opposed to some features of it.

Mr. CANNON. I am opposed to some features of the bill, and there are some features of it that I am in favor of.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that general debate on the bill shall close in one hour and thirty minutes, the time to be divided equally among those who favor the bill and those who oppose it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I agree to that.

Mr. CANNON. I object, unless we can have recognition for one hour.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I am connected with the subcommittee which prepared this bill. If time is allowed to this side I ought to have some portion of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The request is that forty-five minutes be allowed to those opposing the bill and forty-five minutes to those favoring it.

Mr. CANNON. We will accept the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11028) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that, in view of the time given for general debate on this bill, the House now take a recess until 9 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Say 10 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I accept that.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana moves that the House take a recess until 10 o'clock on Monday morning.

Mr. BRADY. I make the point of order that 12 o'clock having arrived, under the previous order of the House the House now stands adjourned.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pending the motion of the gentleman from Indiana, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken,

The SPEAKER pro tempore stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. JACKSON. I rise to a question of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. JACKSON. It is that the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the time when it was agreed by unanimous consent that the House should adjourn, that order should be carried out.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think that agreement was entered into.

Mr. BRADY. I ask for the reading of the record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present incumbent of the chair was not in the chair at that time.

Mr. BRADY. But it is a matter of record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If it can be shown to the Chair that that is matter of record, of course he will carry out the order of the House. Meanwhile the Chair desires to submit some personal requests.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

By unanimous consent, leave to print in the RECORD was given as follows:

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska: Remarks on the bill (H. R. 1406) for the relief of S. W. Harden.

Mr. OATES: Remarks upon the bill (S. 372) to establish agricultural experiment stations, &c.

Mr. RANNEY: To extend the unfinished speech which he made February 9, 1886, not yet published in the RECORD, on House bill No. 3, relating to war taxes of 1861, and to have the completed speech inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. HAMMOND: Remarks on the bill H. R. 3, now on the Calendar of unfinished business.

Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. MCADOO: Remarks on the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. BRADY: Remarks on the agricultural experiment-station bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURROWS. Let the Clerk read the record of the agreement as written out by the Official Reporter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SPRINGER. I renew the request that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, everything to remain just as it is now until that time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I object, unless the agreement is made to adjourn at 12 o'clock.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is in the original proposition.

The SPEAKER. It is not in this.

Mr. SPRINGER. The session of to-night not to continue beyond 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock, the session of this evening not to continue beyond 12 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

The House accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) took a recess until 8 o'clock.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think that was not the agreement on which we finally acted.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Yes; that was the last done before the recess.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It seems to be the opinion of the House that that was the order. The Chair thinks that opinion was well based; and in pursuance of the agreement entered into at the close of the session this afternoon, the hour of 12 o'clock having arrived, the House stands adjourned until 11 o'clock on Monday.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 28, 1887.

Prayer by Rev. H. W. ROTH, D. D., of Greenville, Pa.

THE JOURNAL.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last.

Mr. BUTLER (at 12 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) I move that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is nearly through. Let us have it all read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont objects.

The Secretary resumed, and concluded the reading of the Journal.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, if there be no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1131) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Detroit, Mich.," approved March 2, 1885.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 263) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Abraham Dowdney, John Arnot, jr., Lewis Beach, William T. Price, and William H. Cole.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 7310) granting a pension to Arlanta T. Taylor; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 6637) relating to contested elections;

A bill (H. R. 2075) to provide for the location and erection of a branch home for disabled volunteer soldiers west of the Rocky mountains; and

A bill (S. 1582) for the relief of Alpheus R. French.

ARLANTA T. TAYLOR.

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the concurrent resolution which has just come from the other House requesting the recall of a pension bill from the President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill of the House (H. R. 7310) granting a pension to Arlanta T. Taylor.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and concurred in.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MEXICO.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, in reply to a resolution of the Senate of the 21st ultimo, a report from the Secretary of State relative to the seizure and sale of the American schooner Rebecca, at Tampico, and the resignation of Henry R. Jackson, esquire, as minister of the United States to Mexico. It is not thought compatible with the public interests to publish the correspondence in either case at the present time.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 26, 1887.

Mr. BROWN proceeded to address the Senate. [This speech will be found later in the proceedings.] Having spoken for some time—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will interrupt the Senator from Georgia a moment to lay before the Senate a bill and joint resolution from the House of Representatives for reference.

Mr. BROWN. I give way for that purpose.

HOUSE RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The joint resolution (H. Res. 263) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Abraham Dowdney, John Arnot, jr., Lewis Beach, William T. Price, and William H. Cole was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The bill (H. R. 11020) making appropriations for the naval service of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, and for other purposes was read the first time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to the second reading of the bill.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor, but the Chair interrupted him.

Mr. HALE. Will he give way for a moment in order to have some disposition made of the naval appropriation bill?

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to yielding for a moment for that purpose.

Mr. HALE. It is very important that the Committee on Appropriations, as we are now but four days from the end of the session, should have at least some opportunity of considering this most important bill. The committee is under almost the greatest disability, even with the time that is left, if it can go at the bill at once. I should be glad to have the Senator from Vermont, before he insists on his objection to a second reading, which he undoubtedly has the right to make if he chooses, to state what will be the result of his motion and what purpose he has in view.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am perfectly willing to state.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia consent to this interruption?

Mr. BROWN. I consent if it does not last long.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, my purpose in objecting to the second reading of the bill is to try to bring the Congress of the United States, which embraces both Houses (and I can only speak of it with parliamentary propriety in that way) to a sense of its duty, and to bring the Senate to a sense of the way in which the public business is transacted in respect of the expenditure of the millions upon millions of money that the appropriation bills contain.

Here, in the last days of this session, that expires by constitutional provision and law on the 3d of March, and within ten or twelve or fourteen days of its end, no really important appropriation bill had come over from the House of Representatives at all; those bills having been held there for two months and a half, substantially the whole of them. There are some small and minor exceptions.

Mr. ALLISON. The sundry civil bill came over just before the holiday recess.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The sundry civil bill came over and was sent back to the other House a long while ago, and is still in conference. Leaving that out, the great body of what is really the administrative operations of this Government is forced upon the Senate of the United States (to say nothing of the other House, about which I have no right to speak except when conferences are up) in the very last days and hours and moments of this session. That, in my opinion, is a violation of the constitutional equality and the constitutional right and duty of each House to have time enough to judge of the measures that the other sends to it, in order that each may intelligently and patriotically discharge the duties that are imposed upon it, and in order that the President of the United States, equally a co-ordinate branch of the Government and equally having the right and the duty of careful examination and inspection of the bills that are sent to him, may have the opportunity which the Constitution intended he should have, of at least ten days before the expiration of a Congress or a session to consider the measures that he is called upon either to assent to under his responsibility of oath or of duty without oath, or to give reasons to one House or the other, or both, as the case may be, why he is unable to assent to them.

The great mass of the appropriation bills, in these last four days of the session, are not yet in a condition to be acted upon finally by either House, and a large proportion of them are not yet in a condition to be acted upon by this body. It is a gross violation, in my opinion, of public duty. It is a gross violation of the spirit of the Constitution as well, as it respects the intelligent and independent co-ordination of the two branches of Congress and as it also respects the constitutional rights and duties of the President of the United States.

We were in a similar condition two years ago, when in the last days of the session, and the last days running along as these will if we go on in this way, there came to this body these bills in the same way, and when, in order not to embarrass a new and incoming administration of a different political opinion from that which had preceded it, the members of this body on the Republican side and the patriotic gentlemen on the other side submitted to the rushing of these bills through without even the opportunity for the engrossing of the amendments made by the Senate and agreed upon in conference with the other House, without the opportunity of having them enrolled so that the Committees on Enrolled Bills of the two Houses could see that those things were in the bills that had been agreed upon and that those things were not in the bills which had not been agreed upon; and it depended upon the faithfulness of the two clerks of the respective committees of these two Houses, who were most faithful and honorable gentlemen, but whose successors may not be, that the bills became laws with as few imperfections, merely in respect of things being in or out that had or had not been agreed upon, so that the bills could have stood at all.

I promised myself on that occasion, then sitting in the chair and with nobody in the Senate but the clerks receiving messages from the House of Representatives on disagreements and asking conferences, and finally conference agreements, that I would never be a party or guilty of being a party in any way to the repetition of that method of legislation.

We have come to the last four days, and now we have got for the first time a most important appropriation bill which should require a week or two of the best efforts of the Committee on Appropriations, assisted by the Naval Committee, having charge of the special concerns of the Navy, and assisted by all Senators in the consideration of what the public interests of the United States require in respect of national defense to properly consider it; and here it is.

There are other subjects of public importance that seem to be hanging in abeyance for some reason or another. I think I do not violate any rule by referring to the circumstance that the most important body of officers that has ever been created by law, aside from the establishment of the judicial system of the United States in the first place, was provided for by an act of Congress called the interstate-commerce bill many weeks ago. I do not remember how long since. I violate no rule or propriety by saying that so far no names have been presented to the Senate for appointment to that most responsible position affecting the welfare and the intercourse and the business of the whole body of every community in the United States. There is the fishery bill—a matter of great importance——

Mr. BROWN. Allow me to inquire how much longer time the Senator will desire to take? I have the floor, and gave way for a brief interruption.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can not state with absolute precision how much longer it will take me; I do not think it will take a great while; but undoubtedly the gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations ought to be asked, as I am about to ask them, to make some investigation and explanation of this situation, and where we are, and what we had better do.

Mr. BROWN. I still yield the floor for a reasonable time further.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Georgia to yield?

Mr. BROWN. I yield for the time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Here is the matter of the outrages committed on American fishermen, a bill in regard to which passed the Senate a great many weeks ago, came back from the other House only a few days ago, and is now in conference, and where, I am authorized to say by the rules, we have had one conference, lasting the larger part of Saturday afternoon, until dark or after dark, and where the managers on the part of the House of Representatives, making no complaint of the provisions of the bill so far as the Senate had gone, but were desirous of adding to it the substance of a still wider and more all-embracing and more important proposition, to which the managers on the part of the Senate were quite unable to agree. We have not come to an absolute disagreement, but unless the two Houses can come to an agreement upon that subject—and I feel confident that the Senate will with unanimity sustain what its managers have so far done in respect of these matters in our discussions—I feel that there need be no haste about these appropriation bills, because I think that the Chief Magistrate will feel it to be his high and patriotic duty, if Congress shall not have made some provision on this subject, to call together the new Congress for that purpose alone, for it is a most important interest and a most important purpose, that not only affects the pecuniary interest and the personal liberties and happiness of a large part of this people, but affects the honor of the United States and its dignity.

Therefore, in the present situation of the public business, I see no reason to depart from our wise and well-ordered rules as far as they go in making haste to read this bill or any other at this time the second time on the day when it is presented.

I ask my friends upon the Committee on Appropriations to explain to us the whole of the present situation.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROWN. I will still yield further, until this matter is disposed of.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the bill may be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the standing order.

Mr. HALE. I will simply say that I can see the force of what the Senator from Vermont has so well said and desires, that on these important appropriations the Senate shall have the right and the privilege and the time to scrutinize the appropriation bills, to do that by them which the other House does—a right which nobody disputes.

I can only say further that I see but one result from this, not from the objection the Senator from Vermont has interposed, but from the condition that the Senate is placed in by this premeditated delay on the part of the other body, and that result must clearly be what I think nine men out of ten do not desire but deprecate—an extra session of Congress.

The Committee on Appropriations will do its work as well as it can.

It will sit day and night, and has sat day and night and Sundays; but it can not perform impossibilities.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the Senator from Georgia proceeds I think I ought to say a word or two respecting the condition of the appropriation bills, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Vermont.

I regret to say to the Senate that these bills are not in condition at this time to be considered with deliberation by this body before the end of the present Congress, and if the bills are passed they must be passed substantially as they come from the House of Representatives without the independent judgment of this body and without the independent judgment of the President of the United States.

I have always supposed hitherto that it was the intention of the framers of this Government and of the people that the great questions of the appropriations of public money should be considered independently by the two Houses of Congress and independently by the President of the United States. In the present condition of the appropriation bills that is absolutely impossible.

The naval appropriation bill, as the Senator from Vermont has already stated, is an important bill, embracing not only the ordinary appropriations necessary to carry on that Department for the next fiscal year, but also embracing provisions looking to the enlargement and rejuvenation of the Navy. We have had this question under consideration in various ways for some time, but now the whole question is to be reconsidered upon this bill. It will be necessary for the Committee on Appropriations to take some time, not a great while perhaps, to consider the bill, but they can not report it back to this body before to-morrow or the day following.

The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which is the bill carrying all the ordinary expenditures of the Departments of this Government, has not yet appeared in this body. It has not yet passed the House of Representatives. It is a bill comprising many pages. I have given it such examination and consideration, as have other members of the Appropriations Committee, as we could give it from the early House print, but I have reliable information that it is proposed in the other House to make radical changes in that bill, different from what appears in the present print of the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. What is the amount involved in that bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Over $22,000,000, covering the legislative, executive, and judicial expenditures of this Government, involving changes of salary, involving new and important legislation respecting the administration of the Government.

If the Senate desires to take that bill without the deliberate consideration of the Committee on Appropriations of this body, it can take it and railroad it through this body between now and the 4th day of March; but to consider the bill as it should be considered is practically impossible before that time.

The sundry civil appropriation bill is an important bill, gathering up all the miscellaneous expenditures of this Government. That bill passed the Senate several weeks ago. It lay in the House of Representatives for nearly ten days after the amendments were considered here and sent to the other House. It was then considered in the other House and nearly all the amendments presented by the Senate were disagreed to, and a conference was ordered upon it last week. It was not until Friday night that we could get the conferees of the two Houses together, and on Friday night after a brief session the House conferees refused to continue the session longer. We asked them to meet us in conference again at an early hour on Saturday morning, and the hour of quarter past 9 was fixed. Although the Senate was in session until 2 o'clock the night before, the Senate conferees were in the place fixed for the conference at the appointed hour.

The House conferees did not appear there for a considerable time afterwards, and when they appeared, after a session of an hour and a half they said they could not sit longer that day. When we proposed a meeting on Saturday night they said it was impossible. Then, intending and desiring that the business of this Congress should be disposed of, we proposed that yesterday should be devoted to the consideration of the differences between the two bodies upon that bill. The hour of 10 o'clock was fixed for that meeting, and the Senate conferees were promptly in the Chamber at the time. We waited one-half hour for the conferees on the part of the House, and when 2 o'clock arrived we were informed by the House conferees that they could sit no longer during that day, but they would meet us at night. We agreed to meet at 8 o'clock last night, and it was understood that we should have a prompt meeting. We waited until one minute before 9 o'clock for the House conferees, and then after sitting about an hour and three-quarters we were told by them that they could sit no longer last night. We asked them to meet us this morning. They said it was impossible. We asked them to meet us to-night. They said it was impossible. We asked them to meet us to-morrow morning. They said they did not believe they could do so; that they would see; but that they would meet us to-morrow night for conference on that bill.

Mr. President, it is a practical impossibility, in my judgment, for us to deliberate upon these great bills necessary for the purposes of our Government, and necessary to be considered by the committees appointed by this body, in order that the Senate may know what we have agreed to and what we have disagreed to, as they should be considered between to-morrow night and noon on Friday.

This is the situation with reference to these great bills. There are other bills in conference upon which there are radical disagreements, but they may be reconciled. However, it is perfectly apparent that seven of the great appropriation bills can not reach the President of the United States before late on Thursday night, so that, admitting that we get through with these bills by Thursday night, the President of the United States must take them on trust, and sign them without reading.

Mr. COCKRELL. The general deficiency bill has not yet been considered in the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. The general deficiency bill, as suggested by the Senator from Missouri, has not yet been considered by the other House. That is a long bill, covering many items and important items, and in the very nature of things it can not be considered till the very last moments of this session.

This is the situation, as I understand it, of the appropriation bills now between the two Houses.

Mr. HAWLEY. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact also that the fortification bills covering two years have received no attention yet at this Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. The fortification appropriation bill, which, under the rules of both Houses, is one of the regular appropriation bills, and has assigned to it a special and conspicuous place, has not yet been reported from the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives. The fortification bill which we passed last year is now pending in conference between the two Houses. How long the conferees will continue to deliberate upon that bill I do not know, but it involves very important questions. So in the nature of things the appropriation bills are in a condition now that they have never been in before within my knowledge of the history of these two bodies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. CALL. Just one moment. I did not intend to say anything in regard to the matter which has been under discussion, but I do not concur——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BROWN. I think that will only lead to further discussion. The committee having made the statements desired, I think I must proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia is entitled to the floor.

INQUESTS BY NATIONAL AUTHORITY.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator from Georgia proceeds, will he allow me to enter a motion to reconsider?

Mr. BROWN. Oh, yes.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to enter the motion, not to debate it. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate, on Friday last, received the report of the minority of the Committee on the Judiciary on the bill (S. 2171) to provide for inquests under national authority, and also the vote by which leave was given to print that minority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. VEST. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry in regard to the effect of that motion, and I desire to make a statement in regard to it, so far as I am concerned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. BROWN. As I yielded to the Senator who made the motion, of course I shall yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. VEST. I was a member of the minority who dissented from the conclusions of the majority in regard to the bill. I thought when we gave notice in committee and the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] gave notice in the Senate that four of us dissented from this bill, it involved our right to give our reasons in the shape of a minority report. At any rate, formal leave to print the minority report was given by the Senate. The fact was that they prepared their report for the purpose of placing their views on record.

I want to inquire if the motion to reconsider is not decided, are we precluded from making the report? If so I ask the Senate to dispose of it now in order that we may know whether we are to have the privilege of giving our reasons for dissenting from the bill. I ask the President of the Senate to state now whether, with a motion to reconsider pending and undetermined, we are cut off from the privilege of making a minority report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is without information on the subject-matter, and is not prepared at this instant without further examination to say.

Mr. VEST. The facts are simply these, if I may be allowed to make a statement: This bill was reported by a majority of the Committee on the Judiciary against the views of four of us. It was simply reported with a recommendation that the bill pass. The Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] then arose in the Senate and gave notice that four of us dissented from the report made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr.

HOAR]. There was no formal leave asked from the Senate, nor from the committee for that matter, to publish our reason, for this dissent in the shape of a minority report. We have prepared that report. I took it for granted that we should be accorded that privilege and that it went as a matter of course. Now, if this motion to reconsider cuts off that privilege, we want to know it and we shall ask the privilege of filing our minority report.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose that a minority report has no existence in parliamentary usage except by leave of the body—simply the action of an individual member, not the action of the committee.

This bill was reported at the last session of the Senate and the minority of the committee dissented, but no notice was given to the majority of any purpose to file a minority report; no notice was given to me, and I was not present in the Senate the other day, at least if I was I did not hear the request, and the first I knew of the existence of such a document was in seeing a statement of it in a paper this morning.

The result of this proceeding is that these Senators come in at the very end of the session and without having given notice of their purpose to file this document, whereas if it had been given at the usual time the majority would have been enabled to put on record their views in a printed and full report; and the minority propose to have their views printed as almost the last act of the expiring Congress.

That does not seem to me in accordance with any parliamentary usage between majorities and minorities. When the Senators determined to make a minority report they should have notified the members of the majority of this determination, and every privilege I am sure would have been accorded by the majority of the Senate cheerfully. But it does not seem to me that it is fitting at this time to permit an attack on the action of the majority of the committee to be made by the minority and printed under the authority of the Senate without the opportunity to have a majority report go out with it. If Senators who have signed this document choose to withhold its publication till a similar document can be prepared and submitted by the majority of the committee, which is the usual course, there will be no difficulty on my part.

This is not anything which is intended for the Senate, it is manifest. If it had been it would have been presented to the Senate before the adjournment. It is a document to be addressed to the public. What it contains I know not.

While no member of the minority of the Senate and no member of the minority of the committee, I am sure, will intimate that there has ever been a want of the most courteous consideration for the rights of minorities in this body, and no Senator will attribute any such purpose or such course of conduct to me I am quite confident; but there is also something due to the rights of majorities in this world, the rights of men whether they happen to be in accord with the opinions of the report or in opposition to it.

Mr. BROWN. I have not been impatient, but I can not yield to a general discussion of this kind.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed the Senator had yielded to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BROWN. I first yielded to the Senator from Massachusetts to make his motion.

Mr. HOAR. I will just finish my sentence.

The just rule always observed by the Senate is that the two things should go together. If I had put in a majority report and the Senators had desired to put in their minority report, I should have withheld the majority report until that was ready; which is done every day by committees of the Senate, and certainly the same rule must apply to both sides.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the Senator from Georgia to let me have three minutes to make a statement explanatory of this matter.

Mr. BROWN. I see it will lead to a general discussion.

Mr. GEORGE. No; it will only take three minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield.

Mr. BROWN. I decline to yield further. I think I have been very patient.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia declines to yield, and will proceed with his remarks.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH MEXICO.

The message of the President of the United States in answer to the resolution of January 21 having been read,

Mr. BROWN Mr. President, before making a motion to refer this communication to the Committee on Foreign Relations I desire to submit some remarks in reference to the reply of the President to the request made by the Senate that he communicate to the Senate, if not in his opinion incompatible with the public interest, the correspondence between this Government and the Government of Mexico, in reference to the seizure and confiscation of the schooner Rebecca, and also the correspondence relating to the resignation of Hon. Henry R. Jackson, late minister to Mexico, including any letters addressed by him to the President on that subject.

The President of the United States, in the midst of the immense pressure of business now upon him, and of the weighty responsibilities which he is called upon daily to meet, must of necessity be guided in a great degree by the Secretary of State in responding to a resolution of this character; and as the President has thought proper to decline to communicate the correspondence called for on the ground that the case has not had its finality, but is still under discussion between the two Governments, while I may be familiar with parts of the correspondence, I feel at liberty to lay only such portions of it before the public as the Secretary of State has thought proper to communicate to parties outside of his Department, and such reply as is necessary to put our side of the controversy as fairly before the public as the Mexican side is put before the public by the letters given out by the Secretary of State.

What are the facts in the Rebecca case? As stated in substance by the Secretary of State in his response accompanying the message of the President, and in his letter to Shellabarger & Wilson, and as will appear by reference to the affidavits of those on board the Rebecca and by the testimony of the American consul at Tampico at the time, the facts were these:

The Rebecca was an American schooner, engaged in the coast-wise trade between the States of Louisiana and Texas, making an occasional trip to a Mexican port, and was to that extent engaged in the foreign trade. At Brashear, La., she took on a cargo of lumber for Tampico, Mexico, with regular clearance and regular manifest. She also took six boxes of merchandise on board to be delivered at Brazos Santiago, Tex. No clearance and no manifest was necessary to carry these goods from a port in Louisiana and deliver them at a port in Texas. She sailed for Brazos, and when she was near that port she encountered a very severe storm, which made it impossible for her to enter at Brazos; and she was driven southward by the violence of the storm, and was badly crippled, and in a leaking condition, which made it necessary to open the six boxes of merchandise and deposit the thirty packages they contained in such parts of the vessel as would keep them dry.

In this condition she found herself at sea off Tampico, and after much effort she entered that port. On arrival at Tampico the captain of the vessel noted a protest of distress with the United States consul. Disregarding this protest, and a frank statement of the condition of the vessel, and the stress of weather which had rendered it impossible for her to land at Brazos and deliver the portion of the cargo intended for that port, the Mexican authorities on the next day seized the thirty packages of goods, and arrested the captain of the vessel for attempting to smuggle. He was afterwards released, and again arrested and imprisoned, and required to give bond to answer the charge of bringing in goods without proper papers. The case was brought before a Mexican court for that district, and after an order that triple duties be paid upon the goods, which the captain of the vessel was not in condition at that time to do, resulted in a seizure of the schooner and the goods, and a judgment of the court that they be confiscated and sold, which was done, and the money arising from the sale was applied first to the payment of triple duties to the government, and the balance was divided between what is known as the "corresponding participants."

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator state when that happened.

Mr. BROWN. That was in 1884.

Here is the case of an American vessel which encountered a violent storm off the Texan port where she was to enter and discharge part of her cargo, and was driven by the violence of the storm southward in the direction of Tampico, her ultimate destination. She was badly crippled, in a leaking condition, and persons on board were exposed to great hardship, and their lives were in great peril. In this condition she sought refuge in the Mexican port, where she was seized and her captain imprisoned, and the goods on board and the vessel confiscated and sold by order of a local Mexican court.

What say the American people to such a proceeding as this? The claim has been made against the Mexican Government for indemnity. It has dragged its slow coil through three years of diplomatic correspondence without redress, and without recognition by the Mexican Government, and it seems to me it was time the American Government, through the American minister, should make earnest and vigorous demand for restitution. This was the view taken of the subject by General Jackson, our late minister to Mexico.

The Secretary of State, in reply to a note from them, has sent to Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson, a law firm of this city, copies of three notes from the minister of foreign affairs for Mexico addressed to Minister Jackson, on the subject of this claim, which were not communicated to them, as they say, confidentially, and I have their full authority to use them in any manner that I think proper. As they have ceased to be state secrets, I shall therefore feel at liberty to lay them more prominently before the public.

Justice and fair play would seem to dictate when the Secretary sends out three communications of the Mexican minister to our minister, that he should at least give out one communication from our minister in reply. I shall here use two communications of Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, and Minister Jackson's reply to one of them, as it seems to me both sides of the case should be given to the public, that they may understand the American side of the controversy, and the legal principles upon which it is predicated, as well as the Mexican side. I shall also give to the public a letter addressed by the Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson to Mr. Bayard, and his reply to the letter, in which he states that he incloses copies of notes from the Mexican minister for foreign affairs, which will fully acquaint them with the Mexican Government's position, and its reasoning in support thereof. He sends note of Mr. Mariscal, the Mexican minister, to Mr. Jackson, dated October 31, 1885, with dispatch No. 109. He also states that he sends a letter of Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, February 9, 1886, with dispatch No. 160. Dispatch No. 160 incloses copy of the note of Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, and a copy of the reply of Mr. Jackson to Mr. Mariscal.

These two dispatches present the views of both ministers in reference to the claim, and as the case is a very important one, and as the Secretary has communicated to the parties already mentioned the Mexican side of the controversy, I shall give one communication setting forth the American side. Mr. Bayard also sent a third note of Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Morgan, dated April 2, 1886, with dispatch No. 200; but as I give two dispatches from Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, and only one from Mr. Jackson to Mr. Mariscal, and as this dispatch is a lengthy one, I omit it for the present.

The Secretary of State has not thought proper to furnish to any parties outside of his Department, so far as I am advised, copies of any part of the correspondence relating to the resignation of Minister Jackson, or any letter to the President on that subject, and I do not feel at liberty to publish copies of any portion of the correspondence on that subject until he has given out some part of it, as it is still a state secret, and must remain such for the time, I suppose. I can say, however, without impropriety I think, that it is able, earnest, and interesting, and I am sorry I can not give it to the public. Minister Jackson earnestly desires its publication.

The refusal to give the correspondence in reference to the Rebecca is predicated upon the position that the correspondence is not yet closed, and on that account it is incompatible with the public interest that it be published. This excuse can not avail in case of the correspondence between Minister Jackson and the Secretary of State relating to the resignation of General Jackson. That correspondence has had its finality. It has been closed for months past, and if it is incompatible with the public interest that it be at present furnished for publication it would seem upon the same reasoning that it must always remain incompatible with the public interest. At least we are left to conjecture as to the length of time after a correspondence of this character is finally completed before it can consistently with the public interest be communicated to the Senate. If this part of the correspondence can not be laid before the public at present, possibly it will not be in order to do so at any future time during the present generation, unless the person acting as Secretary of State at the time shall take a different view of the subject from that now taken. The parties at interest must therefore for the present bide their time, which the friends of General Jackson will do, with full confidence, if it can not sooner be reached without incompatibility with the public interest, that impartial history will do justice to all concerned.

As the correspondence, so far as it relates to the seizure and confiscation of the schooner Rebecca and her cargo, relates to a private claim against the Mexican Government made by citizens of this country for illegal imprisonment and outrageous robbery, the discussion of which has been protracted several years already, I am somewhat at a loss to know how the public interest could suffer detriment by its publication, and it seems to me very obvious under all the circumstances that justice to General Jackson, our late minister, who conducted much of it, would call for its publication.

General Jackson, who is not only a gentleman of unblemished character and splendid abilities, but is a model of courtesy and the very soul of honor and chivalry, would prefer to suffer injury and injustice, as he may consider it, rather than violate any reasonable rule of the Department of State under which he lately served, or do any act the propriety of which can be justly questioned.

I think I may say with propriety that a difference of opinion between the Secretary of State and Minister Jackson as to the vigor and energy with which this claim should be pressed upon the Mexican Government was one cause of his resignation. He believed that American citizens had been seized and imprisoned and shamefully robbed of their property in a Mexican port, and that the robbery was committed with the aid and by the pretended authority and decree of a local Mexican court, which violated every principle of justice. On a perusal of the papers, it seems to me any impartial man would conclude that the officers of Mexico indecently used the forms of judicial trial to perpetrate a judicial robbery. In such a state of things Minister Jackson believed that diplomacy should be vigorously pressed until a definite result was reached, and in case diplomacy should fail, then this Government should use all the means justified by the laws of nations to redress the wrongs done to our citizens.

Now, Mr. President, I propose to read the communications and dispatches to which I have above referred, copies of which, as I understand the letter of the Secretary to the attorneys of the claimants, have heretofore been furnished by the Secretary of State to parties outside of that Department, together with a single letter from our minister, giving our side of the case.

Mr. BECK. Let me interrupt the Senator just there. Shellabarger & Wilson were the counsel, were they not, for the parties here?

Mr. BROWN. I understand they are counsel for the claimant.

Mr. BECK. They are counsel for the claimant here, and therefore they were in possession of their clients' case, and any information they received from the State Department in regard to Mexico was to aid them in knowing what they had to meet.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator can put that construction on it if he chooses.

Mr. BECK. Is not that the fact?

Mr. BROWN. It was not communicated to them in any confidence.

Mr. BECK. Of course not; it was communicated to them as counsel for an American claimant to aid them in making out their case by knowing what the Mexican defense would be, as they had their own case from their own clients. They were attorneys.

Mr. BROWN. As these communications will give the public general information as to the character of this claim and the reasons for the refusal of the Mexican Government to make indemnity for the injury done to our citizens, I think it due to the claimants and to the American people that they should be made public.

I first propose to send to the Secretary and ask him to read a letter from Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson to Secretary Bayard. I will remark that these communications are of considerable length, and unless some Senator would prefer to have them read, I will place them in the RECORD without reading, by unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BROWN. These communications I wish to appear as an appendix to my remarks, and are considered as read.

I next present the reply of Secretary Bayard to Shellabarger & Wilson, in which he states that he sends them the documents to which I have referred.

I next present the dispatch of Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, dated October 31, 1885.

I next submit dispatch No. 160, which incloses the letter of Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, and the reply of Mr. Jackson to Mr. Mariscal.

The note of Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, included in the above dispatch, was dated department of foreign affairs, Mexico, February 9, 1886, and I present it also. The other inclosure, in dispatch No. 160, is the reply of Mr. Jackson to the note of Mr. Mariscal, dated February 25, 1886, which I will next submit.

The remaining communication which I desire to present is dated New Orleans, October 11, 1886, addressed to Hon. James D. Porter, Acting Secretary of State, and signed Augustus J. Cassard, late consul at Tampico, who was consul in charge at the time of the confiscation of the schooner Rebecca.

All of which will appear in the appendix to my remarks.

The manly letter of Minister Jackson, in vindication of the rights of our citizens who had been illegally imprisoned and robbed of their property, brought forth what he construed to be a sharp rebuke from the Secretary of State, and a virtual order to avoid pressing the case to an issue. He was unable to reconcile the position of the Secretary which forbid pressing the case to an issue with the statements made by the honorable Secretary in his letter to the attorneys of the claimants which has been read, in which he states that our representative at the city of Mexico has been instructed to express our discontent to the Mexican Government, and to "continue to press the case." It looked like an indefinite postponement of redress to our citizens, who had been outraged in their persons and robbed of their property.

As Minister Jackson felt that he had been rebuked for this firm and what seemed to him to be the correct stand he had taken, in demanding restitution for the outrages perpetrated upon our citizens, and as he could not reconcile what seemed to him to be the conflicting statements of the Secretary, he felt that he could no longer render effective service when not sustained by his Government, and that the only alternative left to him was to tender his resignation, which he did.

I have information which I consider reliable that in the letter to Shellabarger & Wilson from Mr. Bayard, referred to in their letter of May 6, 1886, the Secretary stated briefly the position taken by the Mexican Government, without admitting or controverting the correctness of that position, and closed by saying in substance that, in view of the determination of the Mexican Government to adhere to their position, it seemed to be useless to press the case further. I have not at present a copy of this letter before me.

As will be seen by a perusal of the documents just read, the Mexican Government refuses to make any indemnity to the captain of the schooner Rebecca, who was wrongfully seized and illegally imprisoned; or to the owners of the schooner and her cargo, of which they were robbed under the forms of law by an unjust and unjustifiable judgment of a local court at Tampico, Mexico.

The ground taken is that this local court had jurisdiction of the case, and while it is admitted by the minister of foreign affairs for Mexico that if all the facts had been before the court a different decision might have been rendered, still Mexico stands firmly on the position that the judgment of that Mexican court, whether right or wrong, just or unjust, is irrevocable and irreversible; and that government, claiming the protection of that judgment of its own local court, refuses to make indemnity for the illegal imprisonment, or the robbery already referred to, on the ground that nothing can be alleged against the judgment—that it is conclusive on all the parties.

If the court that heard this case had been an international tribunal agreed upon or selected by both the parties at interest, both governments consenting to the jurisdiction of the court, and the judgment was not vitiated by the corruption of the judges of the court, then I admit that the position would be tenable, and in fact a sound position.

But I think Minister Jackson has shown conclusively, by his very able reply to Mr. Mariscal, that the local Mexican court in a case where the issue is formed between the Government of Mexico and the citizens of this Republic can not render a judgment that will be conclusive against the rights of our citizens, unless that judgment is legal and just in itself.

In other words, if the judgment was unjust and unconscionable, and was rendered under circumstances of strong suspicion as to the clean hands of the court, and upon a state of facts that clearly did not justify it, then it is the duty of this Government, when it has satisfied itself of the illegality and injustice of the judgment, to demand of the Mexican Government that it make restitution to the injured parties, and after having exhausted the usual forms of diplomacy, if justice can in no other way be obtained, we should use means more persuasive and convincing than diplomacy. In other words, this Government does injustice to its citizens and forfeits their respect and their allegiance if it refuses or omits, when a proper case is made, to require indemnity for illegal arrest and imprisonment and for judicial robbery.

To summarize the position of Mexico on this question, I repeat the following extracts from the correspondence just read. Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, October 31, 1885, says:

I deem it proper to transmit to your excellency, inclosed herewith, copy of the communication of the Treasury Department of the 5th of July of that year, to which are annexed the sentences of the district court of the south and center of Tamaulipas, which were duly carried out, and have therefore completely ended the question in conformity with the laws in force.

Again he says, in the same communication:

In view of the foregoing, and the executive being unable to remedy or change the consequences of an affair which has been followed, resolved upon, and consumated by the judiciary, to whom Captain Dujay was submitted for trial, I deem it useless to forward to the court at Tampico the report which your excellency was pleased to send me with your note above referred to.

In the letter of Mr. Secretary Bayard, addressed to Shellabarger & Wilson, May 26, 1886, he says on this subject:

All arguments have been unavailing, the Government of Mexico contending that the records of its courts should be incontrovertible.

Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, February 9, 1886, says:

It is also shown by the respective documents that as it was communicated by the treasury department to that of foreign affairs in note of July 5, 1884, in compliance with the orders of the Mexican court, the goods were sold at auction, and the corresponding duties were applied to the federal treasury, the balance being distributed among the corresponding participants. Therefore, Mr. Minister, this is a matter which has been examined, decided upon, and executed by the judicial power in conformity with the laws of the Republic, and which must not and can not be subject to revision by the executive.

Again:

To the remarks offered by your excellency I might reply with others which, in my opinion, are sufficiently strong, but the constitution guarantees the most complete independence among the supreme federal powers, and the duty as well as the decorum of the President of the Republic will prevent him from accepting a discussion respecting the legality of the acts of the other powers.

Again he says:

The fact that the legislation and the political institutions of Mexico and of the United States are quite analagous, and are founded upon the same principles, inclines me to confidently trust, Mr. Minister, that your excellency and your enlightened Government will recognize how impossible it is for this Government to accept any arrangement or solution in the matter of the schooner Rebecca thus destroying the irrevocable sentence of the judicial authority.

Mr. Mariscal, in his reply to General Jackson, admits that our minister had sent the records of the signal office to show that the weather was stormy off Brazos at that very time. Mr. Bayard, in his letter to Shellabarger & Wilson, speaks of the violence of the storm being such that the vessel could not enter Brazos. But the judge professed to have received, not evidence in any legal form, but private information from Brazos that at that particular time the weather was unusually fine, and upon that private information he rendered his judgment, confiscating the schooner Rebecca and her cargo, and divided the money between the Government of Mexico and the corresponding employés. Just who these corresponding employés were I do not know. I suppose they were the informers and sharpers who instigated the robbery and confiscation.

Again he says:

The president has always done so whenever it has been possible for him to overcome the rigor of the law and give way to that impulse of friendship and good will, such action being within the constitutional faculties, but now it is not within his power to destroy what was done by virtue of a sentence pronounced with the legal requisites, and which was carried into effect because the party in interest interposed no recourse against it.

Thus you see, Mr. President, that Mexico stands firmly upon the position that a judgment of her local court not appealed from, no matter how illegally or unjustly rendered, nor how partial or oppressive it may be, is conclusive against the citizens of this Republic.

Mr. Cassard, who was acting as our consul at Tampico at the time, says:

Reference to the court's sentence in that case shows that the seizure was decreed simply upon private information received by the court from Brazos, that that part of the captain's declaration before the court stating that "owing to the stormy weather which prevailed on the date when said schooner was about to effect her entry into said port of Brazos, and which stormy weather blew the vessel in distress into the port of Tampico," proved untrue, since on that same date as aforesaid investigation discloses the fact that the weather was unusually good.

But this is the judgment rendered, as Consul Cassard says it was, upon private information which the judge claimed to have received from Brazos, that the weather was unusually fine, when the reports of the weather bureau and the affidavits of persons on board the schooner all show that she encountered a terrific storm, which rendered it impossible to enter the port of Brazos.

Such is the judgment rendered on this flimsy pretext without any legal evidence to sustain it, which the Government of Mexico claims as final, conclusive, and irreversible, against the claims of the captain of the schooner for illegal imprisonment, and the owners of the schooner and of her cargo for indemnity for the robbery perpetrated under the aggravated circumstances above detailed. It seems to me the people of the United States ought to be informed of the character of this claim, and of a number of others of like character that are now pending; that to communicate such information to them is not incompatible with the public interest; and they ought to indicate to their officials, in terms that can not be misunderstood, that it is their duty to use diligence in securing restitution for such aggravated wrongs.

The executive department of this Republic, with as little delay as possible, should use every means in its power to secure redress. We need a minister like Jackson there, of great legal ability, powerful in logic, and irresistible in argument, armed with the proper authority, and sustained by the State Department, and that fact known to the Government of Mexico, to press this correspondence to a successful conclusion.

And if the Government of Mexico, in utter disregard of the principles of justice and international law, continues to refuse to make reparation until the point is reached where the executive department has no further power by negotiations, the facts ought to be then communicated to Congress, and the legislative department of this Government should not be slow to devise a proper remedy and provide means for its prompt enforcement.

APPENDIX.

[Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson to Mr. Bayard.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 6, 1886.

SIR: We are in receipt of your favor of the — instant in regard to the matter pending in your Department making claim on behalf of the owners of the schooner Rebecca and her cargo against Mexico for the wrongful seizure and appropriation of said property. Our engagements have prevented an earlier note in reply to that communication. We now wish to make formal application to you for a copy of the communication of our Government to Mexico on this subject to which allusion is made in your letter as one presenting to the Government of Mexico this claim, and also for a copy of the reply made by Mexico. If there is any reason why we should not have copies of these papers and yet may obtain from you a fuller statement of their contents, then we ask for as full a statement of the contents of said communications of each Government, respectively, as we may properly be permitted to have.

This being a matter of private claim, we hope there is no reason why we should not have the copies asked.

In your letter you state, in substance, that Mexico refuses to recognize the validity of the claim and rests the refusal upon the ground that the decision of competent tribunals, in matters of this kind, must be regarded as final.

One purpose of this note is to enter a formal and solemn protest against the doctrine of the finality of judicial determinations being applied in the present case to shield Mexican citizens and their government from responsibility (as between the two nations and the claimant citizens of our nation) for an outrage, which so far as it involves pretended judicial proceedings, was itself an act of mere violence.

The object of this note is not to argue this question now, but simply to make protest and to ask for papers upon which, on seeing them, we may decide to base a fuller statement of our objections to the position of Mexico.

Yours, truly,

[Mr. Bayard to Messrs. Shellabarger & Wilson.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, May 26, 1886.

GENTLEMEN: I have received your letter of the 6th instant, touching the claim of the owners of the schooner Rebecca and her cargo, against the Government of Mexico.

It is contrary to the practice of the Department to furnish copies of its instructions to private individuals in any case. But I submit for your information, in order that you may make your desired examination upon the subject as full as possible, the following:

In brief, the case of the Rebecca as you know, is this: In January, 1884, she cleared from a port in Louisiana with a duly manifested cargo of lumber, for Tampico, and in addition, several cases of merchandise consigned to parties in Brazos Santiago, Tex., a port of destination, previous to starting for Tampico.

Under the privilege which she enjoyed as an American registered vessel there was no necessity of manifesting these several packages. Owing to a severe storm, the Rebecca was, however, unable to enter Brazos, and, the storm increasing, was driven southward. Opposite Tampico the storm abated, and that port was entered, the vessel being in a damaged condition. In consequence of these several packages of merchandise not being on her manifest, the Rebecca was seized, condemned, and sold.

The instructions of the Department have invariably contended and endeavored to show beyond dispute that there was no intention on the part of any one to violate the customs regulations of Mexico, and that the vessel's entrance into Tampico with those unmanifested articles was an accident, for which, in the judgment of this Government, she should not have been held liable to the strict letter of the law.

The case seemed undoubtedly one wherein rather that spirit of international comity, regard for commercial rights, and equitable treatment should have prevailed.

It has been explained, in case the circumstances were reversed and the bona fides been so clearly established, how different would have been the action of the customs authorities in this country under its laws. As was remarked to Mr. Henry R. Jackson, the United States minister at the city of Mexico in an instruction, No. 63, of September 14, 1885, reviewing the case of the Rebecca, and forwarding copies of your letter of the 2d of that month, with its several accompaniments, "The only question of law arising in this case is whether a vessel driven by stress of weather into a foreign port is liable to penal process in such port either for smuggling or for bringing goods into the port without proper papers.

"I contend that this vessel was not so liable, and to have seized and confiscated the Rebecca under the circumstances of her enforced entrance into Tampico appears to have been a peculiar and unreasonable hardship. It has been frequently held by this Government, in conformity with repeated rulings of the court, that the casus of unavoidable necessity is a defense to any charge of invasion of custom-house regulations."

All arguments, however, have been unavailing, the Government of Mexico contending that the records of its courts should be incontrovertible.

With the foregoing explanation I herewith inclose copies of notes from the Mexican minister for foreign affairs, which will fully acquaint you with the Mexican Government's position and its reasoning in support thereof.

Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, October 31, 1885, with dispatch No. 109.

Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson, February 9, 1886, with dispatch No. 160.

Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Morgan, April 2, 1886, with dispatch No. 200.

It is believed that with this information before you you will be able to make the examination you suggest, and take such further steps as you may deem the interests of your clients require and demand.

In conclusion, it may be remarked that the United States representative at the city of Mexico has been intructed to express our discontent at the refusal of that government to make amends for the seizure of the Rebecca, and to continue to press the case.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

T. F. BAYARD.

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, Mexico, October 31, 1885.

SIR: In due time I had the honor of receiving the esteemed note of your excellency, dated the 19th instant, relating to the case of the schooner Rebecca, with which you are pleased to inclose a lengthy report taken from the journals of the signal office at Galveston, in order to show that the said vessel underwent bad weather in her last trip to Tampico, Tamaulipas.

Although the minister of Mexico in the United States informed the ex-Secretary of State, Mr. Frelinghuysen, in a note of June 5, 1884, of everything that occurred in the premises, sending him a copy of the respective evidence, I deem it proper to transmit to your excellency, inclosed herewith, copy of the communication of the treasury department, of the 5th of July of that year, to which are annexed the sentences of the district court of the south and center of Tamaulipas, which were duly carried out and have, therefore, completely ended the question in conformity with the laws in force.

In those documents the following essential facts are set forth:

First. That the American schooner Rebecca anchored in front of the custom-house of Tampico on the 17th of February, 1884, bringing various packages of merchandise, of which no mention was made in the general manifest of the ship.

Second. That for this omission there was imposed upon the captain, Gilbert F. Dujay, the penalty of triple duties, in conformity with the provisions of fraction 3, article 87, of the maritime and frontier custom-house tariff.

Third. That the captain thus fined neither paid the fine within the time fixed for that purpose nor took any steps whatever against the sentence.

Fourth. That at the instance of the collector of the custom-house, after hearing the opinion of the prosecuting attorney, and upon the ground established in fraction 10th, and the part relating thereto of the 8th, article 92, of the tariff, the sentence was declared as consented to, and as a definite judgment.

Fifth. That in accordance with the laws now in force and by order of the court, the confiscation and sale at auction of the ship were carried out in order to pay the said triple duties and hand to the corresponding employés the part to which they were entitled after setting aside what belonged to the treasury, all of which has been done, as stated by the treasury department.

I am exceedingly sorry, Mr. Minister, that in the matter we are treating of no effective steps can now be taken, in my opinion, in order to satisfy the desires expressed by your excellency, as it is evident that the captain of the Rebecca violated the fiscal laws of the country as regards foreign commerce, although he was well acquainted with them, as he had traded with our ports for many years past.

Although he sought to excuse his fault, attributing it to bad weather through which the vessel had passed, giving one to understand that he arrived at Tampico by force of circumstances, in the sentences of the district judge it is shown that the Rebecca had cleared for the very port of Tampico, and that if bad weather had retarded the arrival of the ship, this did not prevent the latter from arriving at the port for which she was destined.

In view of the foregoing, and the executive being unable to remedy or change the consequences of an affair which has been followed, resolved upon, and consummated by the judiciary to whom Captain Dujay was submitted for trial, I deem it useless to forward to the court at Tampico the report which your excellency was pleased to send me with your note above referred to.

Trusting that with above explanations and the careful perusal of the accompanying documents your excellency will become convinced of the complete justice with which proceedings have been carried on in the matter connected with the schooner Rebecca, I protest to you my very distinguished consideration.

IGNO MARISCAL.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Mexico, February 25, 1886.

SIR: In conformity with the instructions conveyed generally by your dispatch No. 120, of 26th ultimo, I made immediate reply to a note from Mr. Mariscal relating to the case of the Rebecca. Copies of the note and the reply and a translation of the former I now have the honor to inclose.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

HENRY R. JACKSON.

[Mr. Mariscal to Mr. Jackson.]

DEPARTMENT OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS, Mexico, February 8, 1886.

MR. MINISTER: I have had the honor of receiving the note of your excellency of the 17th of December last relating to the case of the American schooner Rebecca, in which you are pleased to state that you have received instructions from your Government to inform this department that it can not accept the necessity nor the convenience of the denial contained in my preceding note, dated the 31st of October, 1885, trusting that I will kindly, as you are pleased to express yourself, reconsider and revise the question at issue. The sincere interest which my Government takes in preserving the most cordial relations with that of the United States, and its earnest desire to proceed in every case in accordance with the exigencies of justice, as also to show the consideration to which your excellency is personally entitled, have induced this department under my charge to again devote especial attention to this matter.

Unfortunately, after the above examination, I have found it impossible to meet legally and decorously the desires of your excellency's Government.

As shown by the documents, a copy of which I had the honor of transmitting to your excellency, inclosed with my note of 31st of October, in the sentence of the district judge for the center and south of Tamaulipas, dated the 2d of April, 1884, it was declared: First, that the merchandise seized on board the American schooner Rebecca were packages omitted in the general manifest of the ship, and were comprised in fraction 5 of article 86 of the custom-house tariff in force at the time; second, that on account of that omission there was imposed the penalty of triple duties, under the terms of fraction 3, article 87, of the same tariff, a fine which Capt. Gilbert F. Dujay should pay upon the execution of the sentence.

The responsible party was notified of the sentence, and by order of the 10th of April the court decided that inasmuch as the sentence had not been opposed nor objected to by Captain Dujay within the respective period of time, or at any time, the final part of the previous sentence should be complied with in due legal form, as he had been advised of the execution of said sentence, and the schooner and other goods seized were liable to embargo, so as to secure the payment of the amount as made known to the accused, and besides the value of the revenue stamps used in the proceedings and other expenses incurred.

It is also shown by the respective documents that as it was communicated by the treasury department to that of foreign affairs, in a note of July 5, 1884, in compliance with the orders from the court, the goods were sold at auction, and the corresponding duties were applied to the federal treasury, the balance being distributed among the corresponding participants.

Therefore, Mr. Minister, this is a matter which has been examined, decided upon, and executed by the judicial power in conformity with the laws of the republic, and which must not, and can not, be subject to revision by the executive.

To the remarks offered by your excellency, I might reply with others which, in my opinion, are sufficiently strong; but the constitution guarantees the most complete independence among the supreme federal powers, and the duty as well as the decorum of the President of the Republic prevent him from accepting a discussion respecting the legality of the acts of the other powers.

I suppose that the documents which your excellency was pleased to send with your note of the 19th of October last, had their contents been known to the court in time, would perhaps have modified the sentence pronounced by it; but if they were not taken into consideration, nobody is to blame for it but Dujay himself, who, imitating the bad example of some foreigners who treat with disdain the tribunals of the country, omitted to make use of the recourses which our laws granted him on an equality with the natives, and waived the presentation of such proofs before the courts, failing to appeal from its decision, as the laws freely allowed him to do, presuming that he could remedy everything afterwards by means of a diplomatic claim; which claim, although certainly very respectable on account of the high functionary who sustains it, and of the Government in whose name it is presented, is by all means untenable when justice has not been denied.

The fact that the legislation and the political institutions of Mexico and of the United States are quite analogous, and are founded upon the same principles, inclines me to confidently trust, Mr. Minister, that your excellency and your enlightened Government will recognize how impossible it is for this government to accept any arrangement or solution in the matter of the schooner Rebecca, thus destroying the irrevocable sentence of the judicial authority.

And here I should close, were it not for the following passage from your excellency's note, to which I now reply:

"All the evidence and all the argument which it is possible for my Government so far to accept conduct to the suspicion (to say the least of it) that in order to hand to the corresponding employés the part to which they were entitled, the property of American citizens, brought into a Mexican as into a friendly port for security from the dangers of the sea, and with no criminal intent whatsoever, has been confiscated and sacrificed by the harsh enforcement of the mere letter, in reckless disregard for the reason and, therefore, the life of the Mexican law; and that, too, in contempt of the interposition of the American Government through its minister at this capital."

Such a suspicion might wound the official to whom it refers, were it not for the fact that the district judges who take cognizance of the cases of contraband and apply the respective tariff laws, ordering the distribution of the amount of fines, have no share whatever of the latter, as they receive no compensation for their services other than the salary paid them by the treasury of the federation. It must, besides, be borne in mind that the said judges, appointed at the instance of the supreme court of justice, are called upon to try delinquent custom-house officials, and are vested by the law with authority to grant protection against the decisions of such authorities as violate the individual guarantees conceded by the constitution. Hence, they are not even seen to act in harmony with the said employés, nor in general with the officials of the administrative branch, for which reason they are free from the influences which might give rise to the suspicion alluded to by your excellency.

The Government of Mexico by remitting heavy fines imposed upon the captains of American vessels for violation of the custom-house laws has on frequent occasions given proofs of its kindly spirit and of its earnest desire to maintain the good relations which happily unite Mexico and the United States, to the benefit of their mutual commercial interests.

The president has always done so whenever it has been possible for him to overcome the rigor of the law and give way to that impulse of friendship and good will, such action being within his constitutional faculties; but now it is not within his power to destroy what was done by virtue of a sentence pronounced with the legal requisites, and which was carried into effect because the party in interest interposed no recourse against it.

I take pleasure, Mr. Minister, to protest to your excellency on this account the assurance of my very distinguished consideration.

IGNO. MARISCAL.

[Mr. Jackson to Mr. Mariscal.]

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Mexico, February 25, 1886.

SIR: In acknowledging receipt of the esteemed note of 9th instant, I can not refrain from expressing my deep regret that your excellency should still decline to consider the intrinsic merit of the claim to which it relates.

That the claim may have merit is clearly admitted by the following words:

"I suppose that the documents which your excellency was pleased to send me with your note of the 19th of October last, had their contents been known to the court in time, would perhaps have modified the sentence pronounced by it," and may be as conclusively inferred from expressions previously used in the esteemed note of 3d October, 1885:

"I am exceedingly sorry, Mr. Minister, that in the matter we are treating of no effective step can now be taken, in my opinion, in order to satisfy the desires expressed by your excellency. * * * The executive being unable to remedy or change the consequences of an affair which has been followed, resolved upon, and consummated by the judiciary to whom Captain Dujay was submitted for trial."

The startling significance of both these extracts is to be found in the persistent application of what, in your excellency's esteemed note of December, 1885, relative to the claim of the owners of the Mina Belle, is assumed to be a principle of international law: "I to-day refrain from discussing the facts connected with the case for the respect which I owe to the duly pronounced judgment of the court, appearing on pages 21 and 22 of the pamphlet referred to, and to the principle of international law which establishes that determinate sentences dictated by competent judges or tribunals should be considered as just and incontrovertible, restrains me from this."

It is altogether obvious that no one can be more directly or deeply concerned "in preserving the most cordial relations" between our Governments than a minister who must needs feel that this, at last, is the dominating purpose of his mission. The records of this legation will show that, time and again, under appeals the most urgent, I have refused to trouble your excellency's government with the applications for relief of American citizens, loudly complaining of wrongs inflicted upon them by maladministration of Mexican law. In disposing of such complaints, I have clung tenaciously to the principle that the foreigner who shall place his person or his property upon Mexican soil, must submit them to Mexican law as administered by Mexican courts; and that his own Government will always assume that those laws have been rightly administered.

But as invariably have I coupled with this principle another, which, for the present at least, I must hold to be inseparable from it, namely, that if the assumption be fallacious and a litigation between private parties in a Mexican court shall finally result in an unjust sentence against an American citizen, he will have the right to appeal to his own Government for protection against it. Now, your excellency will perceive that this latter principle is quite inconsistent with the one so elaborately urged in the notes referred to. Impossible for both of these principles to stand together! One or the other must succumb or the hope of maintaining a perfectly cordial relationship between our Governments will be imperiled.

Most earnestly, but respectfully, therefore, I pray of your excellency to refer me to the authorities upon international law "which establish 'the principle' that determinate sentences, dictated by competent judges or tribunals, should be considered as just and incontrovertible," to the end that if conclusive they may close the unhappy contentions which the past has let down upon us, and may also effectively regulate my own official action in the future. I have not failed to seek those authorities in the books which are at my command, but I have signally failed to find them. So far from it, I am constrained by my researches so far—superficial perhaps—to the conclusion, that, if set out in any work upon international law, they are in direct conflict with such writers as Grotius, Bynkershoek, Vattel, and Wheaton. This will appear from the following collation made by Mr. Wheaton in his Treatise upon International Law (see sixth edition, pages 460 and 461):

"Grotius states that a judicial sentence, plainly against right, to the prejudice of a foreigner, entitles his nation to obtain reparation by reprisals. So, also, Bynkershoek, in treating the same subject, puts an unjust judgment upon the same footing with naked violence in authorizing reprisals on the part of the state whose subjects have been thus injured by the tribunals of another state. And Vattel, in enumerating the different modes in which justice may be refused, so as to authorize reprisals, mentions a judgment manifestly unjust and partial."

Mr. Wheaton adds for himself that "an unjust sentence must certainly be considered a denial of justice, unless the mere privilege of being heard before condemnation is all that is included in the idea of justice."

Your excellency will perceive that the judicial sentences here referred to by all of these writers are sentences rendered in conflicts between private, unofficial parties. Not until the judge of the court shall have pronounced the unjust sentence has the act been committed which Bynkershoek "puts * * * upon the same footing with naked violence." Whatever the character of the original controversy, the case now assumes the features of tort. One of the parties yields place to the Government, which, through its judicial arm, has done a tortious act against the subject of another. This, according to Grotius, "entitles his nation to obtain reparation by reprisals."

I suppose it is to supersede such violent and semi-belligerent remedy that amicable governments resort to the via diplomatica. But unless I gravely misunderstand the position assumed by your excellency in several controversies now pending between us, the foreigner, who has been subjected to wrong by decree of a Mexican court is already debarred from this gentler resort; the simple fact that a decree has been rendered against him having raised in his path an impassible bar. Do I err in drawing such inference from the following words:

"Therefore, Mr. Minister, this is a matter which has been examined, decided upon, and executed by the judicial power in conformity with the laws of the republic, and which must not be subject to revision by the executive."

And may not such closing against the wronged foreigner of the entrance to the via diplomatica be to force a resort by his Government to the recognized international remedy of reprisal? But unless I be the victim again of serious misapprehension, your excellency has taken a position yet more startling, namely, that even in cases (like the long-mooted case of the Daylight, for instance) where the act complained of is not only from the beginning an act of naked violence but an act committed by government itself through its own officials, resort can not be had to the via diplomatica until the sufferer shall have first sought relief at the hands of that department of government most directly involved in the commission of the wrong, and, if dissatisfied with its decision, shall have appealed in the second place to the courts of the tort-feasing government for redress.

Have I erred in drawing this inference from the following paragraphs, taken, the first, from the note addressed by your excellency to my predecessor, Mr. Morgan, under date May 30, 1885, in the case of the Daylight, and the second from the note to which I now have the honor of replying: (1). "It is not the first time that I have had occasion in my friendly discussions with your excellency to call your attention to the marked inclination which certain foreigners, in countries like Mexico, have to constitute the government and ministers as their agents in every complaint and for every claim which they wish to make against the authorities of the nation, endeavoring always to begin their negotiations by a diplomatic reclamation which produces an international discussion;" and (2) "I suppose that the documents which your excellency was pleased to send me with your note of the the 19th October last, had their contents been known to the court in time, would perhaps, have modified the sentence pronounced by it; but, if they were not taken into consideration, nobody is to blame for it but Dujay himself, who, imitating the bad example of some foreigners who treat with disdain the tribunals of the country, omitted to make use of the recourses which our laws granted him on an equality with the natives, and waived the presentation of such proofs before the court, failing to appeal from its decision as the laws freely allowed him to do, presuming that he could remedy everything afterwards by means of a diplomatic claim, which claim, although certainly very respectable on account of the high functionary who sustains it, and of the government in whose name it is presented, is by all means untenable when justice has not been denied."

Do I err in so construing these extracts as to be led to the conclusion that your excellency regards the appeal of Captain Dujay to his own Government, as represented at this capital for the arrest of acts of naked violence which were being committed upon him and his property at Tampico, as the prime and proximate cause of his ruin? that the only remedy allowed him by the laws of nations was to turn from one to another arm of the same national tort-feasor for redress of the tort when that tort should have consummated its work of mischief? And that having failed to appeal to a higher from the sentence rendered by a court of primary jurisdiction in an ex parte proceeding between the government of the said court, on the one side, and himself, isolated citizen of a foreign sovereignty, on the other, and rendered, too, despite and in contempt of the active interposition of the latter, by his own laches he has affirmed and made for all time "just and incontrovertible" the said sentence, even though an inquiry into the merits of the controversy might show it to be full of injustice and wrong? If I be not in error as to the views expressed by your excellency, it is quite impossible to conceive of a case in which the entrance to the via diplomatica could be more violently closed.

Nay, if your excellency be asserting, and shall succeed in maintaining that all cases of wrong inflicted upon foreigners, not simply by act of private parties, but by act of government through its officials, must be taken to the courts of the country for redress, and that the determinate sentences of those tribunals must be considered as just and incontrovertible, the "via diplomatica," as it seems to me, will have disappeared from the relationship of nations as completely as if negotiated out of existence by treaty stipulation.

My attention could not but be arrested by the closing words of the last of the foregoing extracts, "*which claim * * * is by all means untenable when justice has not been denied*," since they excited a momentary hope that your excellency was referring to and recognizing the international law as laid down by Grotius, Bynkershoek, Vattel, and Wheaton.

Most respectfully I ask of your excellency whether I erred in dismissing that hope upon a reperusal of the esteemed note which lies before me?

Does your excellency concede the right of my Government to decide for itself the question whether justice has been denied to one of its citizens by the sentence of a Mexican court? And if not, is it not always possible, in the language of Mr. Wheaton, that "the mere privilege of being heard before condemnation is all that will be included in the idea of justice?" Most happy shall I be to know that your excellency does recognize as a cardinal principle the right of a foreign government in the last resort to decide such question for itself, and that this right involves the exercise of a power which no sovereignty can possibly abdicate, since it is coupled with a duty which no government that has a decent respect for itself or the opinions of mankind can fail to discharge.

I avail myself of this opportunity to renew to your excellency the assurance of my most distinguished consideration.

HENRY R. JACKSON.

LETTER OF EX-UNITED STATES CONSUL, A. J. CASSARD.

NEW ORLEANS, October 11, 1886.

SIR: In reply to your dispatch dated the 4th instant, which refers to the request from parties interested in the schooner Rebecca, seized at Tampico, I have the honor to inform you that all the facts relating thereto, within my personal knowledge, were in the proper course of time officially reported either to the Department or the legation at Mexico.

Some time ago, having been called upon by the parties aforesaid for a written statement of said facts, I deemed proper to refrain from so doing, unable without the consular records at my disposal to write any valuable document.

I have, however, stated to them that the trial of that case had left me intimately convinced that the said schooner had been improperly seized, considering the complete failure of the prosecution in furnishing the slightest evidence implicating the said vessel or her crew, in even an attempt at defrauding the revenue of Mexico. Reference to the court's sentence in that case shows that seizure was decreed simply upon private information received by the court from Brazos that that part of the captain's declaration before the court stating that 'owing to stormy weather which prevailed on the date when said schooner was about effecting her entry into said port of Brazos and which stormy weather blew the vessel in distress into the port of Tampico" proved untrue, since on that same date as aforesaid investigation disclosed the fact that the weather was unusually good.

Referring to the captain's imprisonment, I stated that, inasmuch as he had never resisted in any way the orders of the custom-house and court authorities, and considering that the judge himself declared to me that the captain's apprehension and close detention was a mere "medida precautoria," precautionary measure, I considered said apprehension and detention by military force totally arbitrary and illegal.

In connection with that case and an almost similar one (the seizure of the steamer Pittsburgh) allow me to remind you that in both cases my official intervention was most peremptorily ignored.

I am, &c.,

AUGUSTUS J. CASSARD,
Late United States Consul at Tampico,
at Germania National Bank, New Orleans.

Hon. JAMES D. PORTER,
Acting Secretary of State, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Georgia are directed to a communication sent to this body this morning by the President of the United States referring to matters and facts which certainly the Senate is not yet possessed of. The communication of the President to the Senate, inclosing a letter from the Secretary of State, was read, but the letter of the Secretary of State which was inclosed was not read.

It would be manifestly impossible to undertake at this time a consideration of what seems to be a difference between the distinguished gentleman who lately represented this country in Mexico and the Department of State, without further information. The President has sent to this body, in accordance with precedent and custom, such facts and statements as he deems not incompatible with the public interest to disclose. I therefore ask that the letter of the Secretary of State which accompanies the President's message to this body be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, and which I consider a sufficient answer for the present to the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there be no objection, and the message of the President and the accompanying documents will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed.

The communication of the Secretary of State is as follows:

To the President:

The Secretary of State, to whom was referred the resolution of the Senate of the 21st ultimo, requesting the President to communicate to that body, if not incompatible with the public interest, "copies of all correspondence between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of Mexico in reference to the seizure and sale by the Mexican authorities of the American schooner Rebecca, in the port of Tampico or other port in Mexico; and that he also communicate to the Senate all correspondence between the Secretary of State and Hon. Henry R. Jackson, late minister to Mexico, in reference to the resignation of Minister Jackson, together with all correspondence addressed by Minister Jackson to the President on the subject of his resignation," has the honor to report, first, in respect to the case of the Rebecca, that, in his opinion, the public interest would not be promoted by the publication of the correspondence with the Government of Mexico had up to the present time, in relation to the case, the circumstances of which may, however, be properly stated and which are as follows:

The Rebecca, an American schooner, cleared at Morgan City, La., on the 30th January, 1884, with a cargo of lumber for Tampico, Mexico, and having also on board six cases of merchandise to be left on the way at Brazos Santiago, Tex., and which were not on the manifest of the cargo for Tampico. While on her voyage and off the bar at Brazos, a storm arose, which increased in violence until the vessel, which was then awaiting a favorable opportunity to enter the port of Brazos, was driven a considerable distance to the southward and so seriously damaged by the storm that the captain, deeming it unsafe to attempt to return to Brazos Santiago, made for the port of Tampico, which he entered with his vessel, in a leaking and seriously disabled condition.

When the Rebecca began to leak at sea the six cases of merchandise intended to be landed at Brazos Santiago, and which had been reached by the water, were broken open and the packages, thirty in number, contained in the cases, were so stored as to be protected from damage by the sea. On the arrival of the vessel at Tampico, the master immediately noted a protest of distress with the United States consul. On the following day the Mexican customs officials seized the thirty packages in question, which were not on the manifest of cargo for Tampico, on the ground that they had been brought into port in violation of the Mexican law requiring all goods entered in a Mexican port from a foreign country to be manifested, and arrested the master of the vessel on the charge of attempting to smuggle. This charge was not sustained, and the master was released; but he was subsequently arrested and required to give bond to answer the charge of bringing goods into a Mexican port without proper papers. In due time this charge was heard before the district court for the south and center of Tamaulipas, sitting at Tampico, and it was adjudged by the court that the goods should pay triple duty. The masterrefused to comply with this sentence, and thereupon the goods and vessel were sold by order of the court.

The Department has taken the ground that as the Rebecca was driven by stress of weather from her intended course and entered the port of Tampioc in distress, making no attempt to conceal the unmanifested merchandise, and without any intention on the part of the master or ownerts to violate the port regulations or tariff laws of Mexico, the vessel was not liable to penal prosecution either for "smuggling" or for "bringing goods into port without proper papers;" and that the seizure and sale of the vessel, under the circumstances above stated, was a gross breach of ccmity and hospitality peculiarly unreasonable and unjust.

The Mexican Government, while denying that the entrance of the Rebecca into Tampico was enforced by stress of weather, has taken the position that the judgment of its courts, ordering the sale of the vessel, is final and conclusive, especially as the master and owners failed to take an appeal from the judgment so rendered to another court, as it is contended might have been done.

This Department has contested and denied the doctrine that a government may set up the judgment of one of its own courts as a bar to an international claim, when such judgment is shown to have been unjust or in violation of the principles of international law; and has further maintained that, under the circumstances of the case and in view of the fact that the prior proceedings had been so palpably arbitrary and unjust, the master and owners were not bound to attempt further judicial remedies in the local tribunals.

The correspondence in the case of the Rebecca is still open and proceeding, and it is not believed that its publication at present would be compatible with the public interest.

In respect to the correspondence "between the Secretary of State and Hon. Henry R. Jackson, late minister to Mexico, in reference to the resignation of Minister Jackson," the undersigned has the honor to report that, in his opinion, it would not be contributory to or compatible with the public interest to publish that correspondence at the present time. As to any correspondence which Mr. Jackson may have had with the President, either directly or through any other channel than the Secretary of State, the undersigned is not called upon to make any statements.

Respectfully submitted.

T. F. BAYARD.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 24, 1887.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in compliance with a request of the Committee on Appropriations of the 24th instant, a list of claims allowed by certain of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department since the allowance of those embraced in House Executive Document No. 180 of the present session, under appropriations the balance of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs presenting draught of a bill to provide for the sale of land allotted and patented to certain members of the Black Bob band of Shawnee Indians; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of 62 citizens of Ohio, and a petition of 35 citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill to permit the people of the District of Columbia to vote on the question of local option; which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of John A. Rawlins Post, No. 1, Grand Army of the Republic, Washington, D. C.; a petition of Webster Post, No. 389, Grand Army of the Republic, Webster, Kans.; a petition of Floral Post, No. 213, Grand Army of the Republic, Floral, Kans.; a petition of O. M. Mitchell Post, No. 69, Grand Army of the Republic, Osborne, Kans.; a petition of E. C. Johnson Post, No. 336, Grand Army of the Republic; a petition of Allison Post, No. 16, Grand Army of the Republic, Burlington, Kans.; a petition of Erie Post, No. 311, Erie, Kans.; a petition of Belle Plaine Post, No. 337, Grand Army of the Republic; a petition of Lewis Post, No. 294, Grand Army of the Republic, Dodge City, Kans.; a petition of E. D. Baker Post, No. 40, Grand Army of the Republic; a petition of Harbine Post, No. 212, Grand Army of the Republic, Kansas; a petition of ex-soldiers residing at and near Fort Scott, Kans.; and a petition of Reynold Post, No. 43, Grand Army of the Republic, Cawker City, Kans., praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SHERMAN presented a memorial of the Cleveland (Ohio) Vessel-Owners' Association, remonstrating against the building of a bridge across the Detroit River; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of Coplin Post, No. 56, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, and a petition of C. B. Parson Post, No. 484, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CHENEY presented resolutions adopted by the Louis Bell Post, No. 3, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New Hampshire, favoring the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CULLOM presented a joint resolution of the General Assembly of Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Joint resolution of the Thirty-fifth General Assembly of the State of Illinois, concerning swamp lands.

Whereas the United States has, by various acts of Congress, granted to several of the States certain of the swamp and overflowed lands situate in their respective limits; and

Whereas some of said swamp and overflowed lands were thereafter erroneously sold and otherwise disposed of by the United States in derogation of the rights of the States entitled thereto, and contrary to and in violation of the provisions of the grants aforesaid; and

Whereas no adequate indemnity to said States or relief to the purchaser of said lands has been hitherto provided; and

Whereas bill (H. R. 4792) to provide for the adjustment and settlement of the claims of any State against the United States for all lands which have been or may hereafter be sold or otherwise disposed of by the United States that were included in grant of swamp or overflowed lands to such States, has been introduced in the House of Representatives: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the sense of this house of representatives, the senate concurring therein, that the Senators and Representatives of this State in the National Congress should support and use their best efforts for the passage of said bill.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
State of Illinois, ss:

OFFICE OF SECRETARY.

I, Henry D. Dement, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of a joint resolution adopted by the Thirty-fifth General Assembly, now on file in this office.

In witness whereof I hereto set my hand and affix the great seal of State, at the city of Springfield, this 25th day of February, A. D. 1887.

[SEAL.] HENRY D. DEMENT,
Secretary of State.

Mr. CULLOM presented resolutions adopted by D. T. Tucker Post, No. 407, Grand Army of the Republic, Swan Creek, Ill., and resolutions adopted by Hall Post, No. 138, Grand Army of the Republic, Shelbyville, Ill., urging the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the committee of the Consolidated Cattle-Growers' Association of the United States, praying for legislation to extirpate contagious diseases among cattle; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON presented resolutions adopted by William Baumer Post, No. 24, Grand Army of the Republic, Nebraska City, Nebr.; resolutions adopted by Canby Post, No. 8, Grand Army of the Republic, Saint Paul, Nebr.; resolutions adopted by Lafayette Post, No. 161, Grand Army of the Republic, Weeping Water, Nebr., and resolutions adopted by Garfield Post, No. 80, Grand Army of the Republic, of Red Cloud, Nebr., in favor of the passage of the dependent relative and service pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I present a petition of the Choctaw Nation, praying Congress to make an appropriation of $2,891,247.30, less $250,000 paid under the act of 1861, to pay certain claims against the Government. As this is an important matter, I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made unless there be objection.

The petition is as follows:

Memorial of the Choctaw Nation to Congress, praying for the payment of the judgment rendered November 15, 1886, by the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of the Choctaw Nation vs. The United States.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the Choctaw Nation most respectfully showeth:

That on the 22d of June, 1855, the United States and the Choctaw Nation concluded a treaty, which, among other things, provides as follows:

ARTICLE 11. The Government of the United States not being prepared to assent to the claim set up under the treaty of September 27, 1830, and so earnestly contended for by the Choctaws as a rule of settlement, but justly appreciating the sacrifices, faithful services, and general good conduct of the Choctaw people, and being desirous that their rights and claims against the United States shall receive a just, fair, and liberal consideration, it is therefore stipulated that the following questions be submitted for adjudication to the Senate of the United States:

First. Whether the Choctaws are entitled to, or shall be allowed, the proceeds of the sale of the lands ceded by them to the United States, by the treaty of September 27, 1830, deducting therefrom the cost of their survey and sale, and all just and proper expenditures and payments under the provisions of said treaty; and, if so, what price per acre shall be allowed to the Choctaws for the land remaining unsold, in order that a final settlement with them may be promptly effected. Or,

Second. Whether the Choctaws shall be allowed a gross sum in further and full satisfaction of all their claims, national and individual, against the United States; and, if so, how much.

ARTICLE 12. In case the Senate shall award to the Choctaws the net proceeds of the lands ceded as aforesaid, the same shall be received by them in full satisfaction of all their claims against the United States, whether national or individual, arising under any former treaty; and the Choctaws shall thereupon become liable and bound to pay all such individual claims as may be adjudged by the proper authorities of the tribe to be equitable and just, the settlement and payment to be made with the advice and under the direction of the United States agent for the tribe:

And so much of the fund awarded by the Senate to the Choctaws as the proper authorities thereof shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the just liabilities of the tribe, shall on their requisition be paid over to them by the United States.

* * * * * * *

It being expressly understood that the adjudication and decision of the Senate shall be final.

That on the 9th day of March, 1859, the Senate did award to the Choctaws the net proceeds of the lands ceded by them to the United States by the treaty of September 27, 1830, and that thereupon, under Article XII of the treaty of 1855, the Choctaws became liable and bound to pay all such individual claims as the proper authorities of the Choctaw Nation might determine to be "equitable and just;" and the United States bound themselves that "so much of the fund awarded by the Senate to the Choctaws as the proper authorities thereof shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the just liabilities of the tribe, shall on their requisition be paid over to them by the United States."

That on the 15th day of November, 1886, the Supreme Court of the United States affirmed the award of the Senate, and adjudged that there is due to the Choctaws under said award the sum of $2,981,247.30, subject to a deduction of $250,000, paid under the act of 1861.

The "proper authorities" of the Choctaw Nation have ascertained and determined more than once that the amount awarded by the Senate and adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States will be insufficient to pay the amount of the liabilities of the United States to individual Choctaws, from the onus of which the United States is relieved and the Choctaw Nation is burdened by the provisions of Article XII of the treaty of 1855. This conclusion is summarized in a memorial of the Choctaw general council, passed October 29, 1874, and addressed to Congress. It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The memorial of the general council of the Choctaw Nation assembled respectfully showeth:

That an award was made in their favor under the eleventh article of the treaty of 1855, by the Senate of the United States, on the 9th day of March, 1859, of the net proceeds of their lands ceded by the treaty of 1830.

That the amount due the Choctaw Nation under said award was officially reported, on the 8th of May, 1860, to be $2,981,247.30, which amount, less $250,000 paid in 1861, has been due the Choctaw Nation from the United States since the 9th of March, 1859.

That in consequence of said award, the Choctaw Nation became liable and bound, by the twelfth article of the treaty of 1855, to pay the claims of its individual citizens upon the United States.

That the aggregate of said claims was ascertained and reported to the United States Senate in the year 1857, by the delegates authorized to represent the nation, to be $3,671,292.50, being $690,045.90 more than the amount of the award.

That since the year 1857 the amount of said claims has largely increased, swelling the aggregate to nearly five and a half millions of dollars.

That a substantially correct account of the nature and character of the various claims embraced in this aggregate is contained in the letter of P. P. Pitchlynn, Choctaw delegate, to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated July 10, 1874, a copy of which is subjoined.

That the adjudication of said claims, and the obligation to pay them, was imposed, by the treaty of 1855, exclusively upon the Choctaw Nation.

That the settlement with and collection from the United States of the amount of said claims was intrusted more than twenty years ago to the delegation now represented by P. P. Pitchlynn and Peter Folsom, whose powers have been repeatedly reaffirmed and never revoked.

That payment of the amount due under said award has been repeatedly applied for and urged by the Choctaw Nation, through its authorized delegates above referred to.

That the general council beg leave respectfully to add their own urgent solicitations to those above referred to of the authorized delegates of the nation, to the end that the individual claimants may receive the amounts which have been so long due them.

Signed by order of the Senate.

J. B. MOORE, President Senate.

Attest: THOMPSON MCKINNEY,
Recording Secretary of the Senate, October 29, 1874.

Signed by order of the House.

W. W. HAMPTON, Speaker.

Attest: WM. P. MCCLURE,
Recording Clerk of the House.

I certify that the within and foregoing is a true copy of the original memorial as signed by order of the Senate and of the House of Representatives of the Choctaw general council.

[SEAL.]

JNO. P. TURNBULL,
Nat. Secretary Choctaw Nation.

By the foregoing memorial it is manifest that the sum awarded by the Senate and adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States to be due the Choctaws under that award, is insufficient to pay the just claims of individual Choctaws against the United States, the payment of which is assumed by the Choctaw Nation by the express provisions of Article XII of the treaty of 1855.

The United States have repeatedly conceded and announced the same conclusion, and the records in the various Executive Departments establish its truth beyond question. The Senate of the United States, sitting as a tribunal of arbitration, adopted the report of their committee to which they referred the questions submitted by the eleventh article of the treaty of 1855. Attention is respectfully called to the following extract from that report:

"And while, on the one hand, to award to the tribe the net proceeds of their lands would surely be no more than just to them, because practically no regard is paid to actual value by the United States in the sales of public lands, and undeniably the real market value of these lands which the Indians might have realized, if protected in their possession, was far greater than the price for which they actually sold; on the other hand, the United States would neither have lost, paid, nor expended anything whatever, but would only have refunded to the Choctaws the surplus remaining on hand of the proceeds of their own lands, after having repaid themselves every dollar expended for the benefit of the Choctaws; and that, after having had the use of this surplus for many years without interest, and when, according to the estimates of the General Land Office, it would really amount to little more than half of what might be recovered in a court of equity, if the case were one between individuals, as will appear by the comparative statement hereto appended."

This extract is quoted with approbation by the Supreme Court of the United States in their opinion setting forth the grounds upon which they base their judgment affirming the award of the Senate.

The Supreme Court, after stating fully the failure of the United States to comply with the covenants of the treaty of 1830, say:

"In such a case there is a plain equity to enforce compensation by requiring the party in default to account for all the pecuniary benefits it has actually derived from the lands themselves. This is the solid ground on which the justice of the award of the Senate of the United States, under the treaty of 1855, seems to us fairly to stand.

"The committee of the Senate which reported the resolutions adopted by that body as the award under the treaty of 1855 reached their conclusion upon the same premises."

It therefore follows:

First. That by the express terms of Article XII of the treaty of 1855 the Choctaw Nation has become liable and bound to pay all the claims of individual Choctaws against the United States "arising under any former treaty."

Second. That the United States are relieved from all obligation to pay such individual claims.

Third. That the Choctaw Nation has the exclusive right to determine the amount of such individual claims.

Fourth. That the Choctaw Nation, by its proper authorities, has determined that the amount of such individual claims exceeds the amount adjudged by the Supreme Court of the United States to be due under the award of the Senate.

Fifth. That Article XII of said treaty provides that "so much of the fund awarded by the Senate to the Choctaws as the proper authorities thereof shall ascertain and determine to be necessary for the payment of the just liabilities of the tribe, shall, on their requisition, be paid over to them by the United States."

Sixth. That as the whole of the fund awarded by the Senate and adjudged to the Choctaws by the Supreme Court of the United States is insufficient to pay in full "the just liabilities of the tribe" as shown by "the proper authorities thereof," it follows that the entire fund so awarded and adjudged should "on their requisition be paid over to them by the United States," as stipulated in Article XII of said treaty.

Seventh. Your memorialist respectfully calls attention to the well-known fact that the claims of individual Choctaws, the payment of which the Choctaw Nation is bound to make, matured in 1836, and have been pending now for more than half a century; that they resulted from a failure on the part of the United States to fulfill their solemn covenants, as made in the treaty of September 27, 1830, between the Choctaw Nation and the United States; that no interest has been adjudged to the Choctaws by the Senate award or the judgment of the Supreme Court; that the treaty of 1855 binds the Choctaws as follows:

"ART. 12. In case the Senate shall award to the Choctaws the net proceeds of the lands ceded as aforesaid, the same shall be received by them in full satisfaction of all their claims against the United States, whether national or individual, arising under any former treaty."

The inadequate sum for which judgment has been rendered, and the delay of payment for half a century of the just claims of individual Choctaws, which the Choctaw Nation is bound by treaty obligation to pay, are not here complained of to evade the last-quoted or any other treaty obligation imposed upon your memorialist. On the contrary, your memorialist acknowledges its obligation and declares its fixed purpose to keep sacred and inviolate all its treaty obligations, however onerous they may be.

Your memorialist, in consideration of the facts here stated, and of many more that might be added, only prays that Congress will not delay the making of the necessary appropriation to pay to your memorialist the sum for which the Supreme Court of the United States has rendered judgment in its favor.

THE CHOCTAW NATION,
By CAMPBELL LEFORE,
Its Delegate.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented resolutions adopted by George Logan Post, No. 363, Grand Army of the Republic, Brighton, Iowa, and resolutions adopted by Ellsworth Post, No. 30, Grand Army of the Republic, Ames, Iowa, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. HOAR presented resolutions adopted by Post No. 25, Department of Massachusetts, Grand Army of the Republic, Chelsea, Mass., and trustees of the soldiers' home in Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SAULSBURY presented petitions of J. D. R. Morrison, D. V. Colclayer, William R. Riley, B. D. Carpenter, Oliver Dufour, and John H. McChesney, all citizens of the District of Columbia, praying for the reference of their claims against the United States to the Court of Claims; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB presented a petition of ex-Union soldiers of Cora, Kans., and a petition of Sedgwick Post, No. 24, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, praying for the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SABIN presented a resolution adopted by Goodsell Post, No. 86, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota; resolutions adopted by John A. Logan Post, No. 64, Grand Army of the Republic, Saint James, Minn.; resolutions adopted by Joseph Garrison Post, No. 131, Grand Army of the Republic, Dodge Center, Minn.; resolutions adopted by McCalley Post, No. 55, Department of Minnesota, Grand Army of the Republic, Delavan, Minn.; and a resolution adopted by Muller Post, No. 1, Department of Minnesota, Grand Army of the Republic, Stillwater, Minn., favoring the passage of the dependent pension bill over the President's veto; which were ordered to lie on the table.

DESIGNATION OF REJECTED NOMINEES.

Mr. HOAR. The Committee on Privileges and Elections were directed to inquire and report to the Senate concerning the power of the President under the Constitution to designate temporarily to perform the duties of certain offices persons who had been rejected by the Senate when proposed for such offices. I ask leave that the report of that committee may be made to the next session of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection to that request, and it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE ON RULES.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to say, in response to what was said by the Senator from Massachusetts a little while ago——

Mr. HARRIS. Allow me to make a report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further petitions or memorials, reports of standing and select committees are now in order.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who is necessarily absent from the Chamber, requested me to report from the Committee on Rules a resolution. I do so on behalf and in the name of the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] reports a resolution, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and is hereby, continued and authorized to sit during the recess of Congress, and that the necessary expenses thereof be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over for consideration under the rules.

INQUESTS BY NATIONAL AUTHORITY.

Mr. HOAR. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to interrupt the morning business for one moment to withdraw a motion to reconsider, which I entered fifteen or twenty minutes ago. It has been agreed between myself and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] that the members of the majority of the Judiciary Committee or any of them may have leave, if the Senate shall so order, to file their views as a report and have them printed for the use of the Senate at any time before the first day of the next session of Congress. I ask unanimous consent that that may be done and the motion to reconsider be withdrawn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider can only be withdrawn by leave of the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion is withdrawn.

Mr. HOAR. The withdrawal of the motion was on the other condition, that the Senate agree to the other proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made if there is no objection.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent now to make a statement in this connection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to make a statement. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GEORGE. Several allusions have been made to myself in the course of the statements made on this subject. I wish to say that the delay was occasioned solely by the fact that the report, which is nearly a law argument, was held back tobe delivered in open session of the Senate, in case the bill was brought up. When it was found that the bill would not be brought up for discussion it was determined among the minority members to convert what I had prepared as a speech into the form of a report.

Mr. HOAR. The bill to which the Senator from Mississippi refers was put in the order of business at the close of the last session of Congress, and it was reached on the morning of the last day, when it was obvious that there could be no considerable debate upon it. I made a few remarks upon it, and a few were made by the Senator from Delaware on the other side, and then it went over. At this session of the Senate another case, said to resemble in some of its features the case which gave rise to the bill, what is known as the Copiah case, arose in another State, and is now under consideration in the Committee on Privileges and Elections. While that matter was going on it did not seem worth while to introduce a debate upon this question which related to that subject, and accordingly I have not called it up at the present session, but I expect at the next session of Congress to introduce anew the bill and to procure its passage through Congress if it shall be in my power.

Mr. GEORGE. I make no complaint of the failure of the Senator from Massachusetts to call up the bill for debate. I merely desired to state why there was delay in presenting the views of the minority.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 118) for the relief of J. M. Hobbs, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3208) for the relief of Henry M. Rector, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1240) for the relief of Alice E. Culver, administratrix of the estate of F. B. Culver, deceased, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CHENEY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3257) for the relief of S. E. Scarborough, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 111) to provide for payment of compensation to jurors summoned in condemnation of a site for the Congressional Library, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. SHERMAN on the 28th of June, 1866, directing the Secretary of War to investigate the claim of John R. Reynolds for commissary and quartermasters' stores, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3302) for the relief of the sureties on the official bond of Alexander H. Adams, late pension agent at Lexington, Ky., reported it without amendment.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on the Library, to whom the subject was referred, reported a joint resolution (S. R. 115) amending and re-enacting joint resolution approved June 14, 1879, directing a monument to mark the birthplace of George Washington, as amended and re-enacted February 26, 1881; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of David L. Pool, praying for an increase of pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 3353) granting increase of pension to David L. Pool; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of San Francisco, Cal., asking for appropriations for maintenance of a branch hydrographic office, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 448) to investigate the issue of fraudulent land warrants, and to protect soldiers and sailors of the United States from loss therefrom, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of J. A. Patterson and others, employés of the Government Printing Office, asking for certain balances of pay due them under the act of April 16, 1880, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it be printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2358) granting a pension to Mary Renfro, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1507) to reclaim to the United States certain lands improperly and illegally listed to the State of Michigan for the Portage Lake and Lake Superior Ship-Canal Company, reported it without amendment.

Mr. MANDERSON, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred an amendment submitted by Mr. CULLOM, intended to be proposed to the deficiency appropriation bill to pay one hundred compositors and eight pressmen employed exclusively at night on Congressional work during the second session Forty-ninth Congress, reported it favorably with amendments, and moved its reference to the Committee on Appropriations, and that it be printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Committee on Claims, on the 17th of this month, reported a bill (S. 3318) for the relief of George N. Quintard and George E. Weed, assignees of John Roach, and submitted a report thereon. On the 25th the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Claims, together with the accompanying report. The committee have had the same again under consideration, and now direct me to report it back to the Senate without amendment, together with a report, and recommend its passage.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I submit the views of the minority to accompany the report in that case, and ask that they be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made unless there be objection.

Mr. EVARTS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3301) to authorize the settlement and adjustment of all claims and demands between the United States and the State of Vermont, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MAHONE, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 132) for the purchase of suitable grounds in the city of Richmond, in the State of Indiana, and the erection thereon of a public building for a post-office, United States collector's office, United States commissioner's office, and for the use of other United States officers in said city, appropriating money for said purposes, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3233) to change the limit of appropriation for the public building at Jacksonville, Fla., reported it without amendment.

Mr. PALMER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9064) prescribing the times for sales and for notice of sales of property in the District of Columbia for overdue taxes, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8976) to incorporate the Washington Cable Railway Company of the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom the subject was referred, reported a bill (S. 3354) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at a point to be selected within 5 miles of the city of Yankton, Dak.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10666) for the allowance of certain claims reported allowed by the accounting officers of the United States Treasury Department, reported it with amendments.

CHOCTAW NATION CLAIMS.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs, which was instructed by a resolution of December 14, 1886, to inquire into claims made against the Choctaw Nation, arising from a judgment in favor of that nation against the United States, have performed that duty, and have taken testimony in reference to the subject, and instructed me to report back the resolution and testimony, and ask that they be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made unless there be objection.

SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. The Committee on Public Lands direct me to report back favorably a resolution introduced by myself on the 21st instant, calling for certain information, and I ask its immediate consideration.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate under what authority swamp and overflowed lands have heretofore been listed and patented to the several States; what rules and regulations have from time to time governed in the selection, listing, and patenting the same; what amounts of such lands have been approved, and what amounts have been patented to the several States; what amounts are still claimed by them; what amounts of lands have been approved to the several States as indemnity for swamp and overflowed lands sold by the United States, and what amounts in money have been paid to the several States as such indemnity; under what laws and regulations such payments have been made, and what States are still entitled under existing laws to such indemnity, and the amount thereof, and the reasons why the same have not been made; what claims for such indemnity have been made by the several States, in what manner, and in what States selections of swamp and overflowed lands are now being made; and to furnish the Senate with any other official information in his possession upon the subjects aforesaid which, in his judgment, should be laid before the Senate.

REPORT ON EDUCATION IN ALASKA.

Mr. GORMAN. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the Senate concurrent resolution providing for the delivery to the Commissioner of Education of 1,000 copies of report on education in Alaska, have instructed me to report it favorably without amendment. I ask its present consideration.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House concurring), That the Public Printer be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to deliver to the Commissioner of Education 1,000 copies of Report on Education in Alaska (Jackson), printed in compliance with a concurrent resolution of August 2, 1886, the distribution of which was not therein directed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the resolution?

Mr. PLUMB. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution goes to the Calendar.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the Senator from Kansas to withdraw the objection.

Mr. PLUMB. I may after awhile.

Mr. PLUMB subsequently said: I withdraw the objection I made to the adoption of the resolution reported from the Committee on Printing by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The objection being withdrawn, the question is on the adoption of the resolution

The resolution was agreed to.

REPORT OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a Senate concurrent resolution for printing the report of the Commissioner of Education, to report it with an amendment. I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of the report of the Commissioner of Education for 1885–'86 there be printed 6,000 copies for the use of the Senate, 12,000 copies for the use of the House, and 25,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was, in line 4, to strike out "25,000," and insert "20,000;" so as to read:

And 20,000 copies for distribution by the Commissioner.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY.

Mr. PLUMB. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 176) to increase the endowment of the Louisiana State University and Agricultural College, to report it with amendments. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to hear it read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 2, line 4, after the word "made," to insert "or recognized as being valid;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That the governor of Louisiana may appoint one or more agents to select the lands granted in this act from any public lands within said State not included in some subsisting grant made or recognized as being valid by the United States; and such agent shall make report of such selection to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move, after the word "erection," in line 5 of section 1, to insert "or repair;" so as to read:

That 25,000 acres of the public lands in Louisiana are hereby granted to the State of Louisiana, to be applied, as far as may be necessary, to the erection or repair of suitable buildings for said university, and to the restoration of the library and scientific apparatus heretofore destroyed by fire, such application to be made in such manner as the Legislature of said State may direct or may empower the trustees of said university to direct.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the amendments of the Committee on Public Lands was resumed. The next was, in section 3, line 2, after the word "pre-emption," to insert or "timber-culture entry;" and, in line 4, after the word "pre-emption," to insert "or timber culture;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the provisions of this act shall not apply to any legal subdivision of land to which the right of homestead entry or pre-emption or timber-culture entry shall have attached in favor of any person who is entitled to such homestead and pre-emption or timber-culture entries, and who is occupying and claiming such subdivision of the public land in Louisiana at the time when such selections are approved by the Secretary of the Interior; and in cases where it is found that such claims are superior to the rights of the State of Louisiana herein granted, the said State may select other lands in lieu thereof, and in like quantity, elsewhere in the said State, from the public lands of the United States, so as to make up as nearly as may be the total number of acres of land granted in this act to said State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, line 3, after the word "Louisiana," to insert "and shall be applied alone;" and in the same section, line 11, after the word "Louisiana," to insert "for the purpose aforesaid;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 4. That when the selections of said lands are so made and are approved by the Secretary of the Interior, the title to the same shall vest in the State of Louisiana, and shall be applied alone to and for the use and benefit of said Louisiana State University and Agricultural College, to be applied to the uses and purposes declared in the first section of this act, and then to the endowment of said university, and to no other purpose whatever; and patents shall issue to said State for the land so selected and approved. And the State of Louisiana shall by law direct the sale of such lands, and the money arising from such sales shall be paid into the treasury of the State of Louisiana for the purpose aforesaid, but no expenses that may be incurred in making such sale after the selection of lands made under this act are confirmed by the Secretary of the Interior and entered on the township maps of the proper land-offices, shall be paid by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT BINGHAMTON.

Mr. MAHONE. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10731) for the erection of a public building in the city of Binghamton, N. Y., have instructed me to report it without amendment. I ask that the bill be put on its passage at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOINT RESOLUTION.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 116) for the purchase of a certain number of Lanman's Biographical Annals; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. GRAY. I give notice of an amendment to the general deficiency appropriation bill and ask that it be read.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

That there be paid to Elizabeth Reynolds, widow of Zachariah Reynolds, late a watchman in the Treasury building, and who was killed while in the performance of his duty, the sum of $600, being equal to one year's pay of the said Zachariah Reynolds, and that the same is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the legislative, &c., appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. AKINS AND JACOB D. FELTHOUSEN.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the bill (S. 1803) for the relief of William H. Akins and Jacob D. Felthousen be recommitted to the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know that I ought to object to that bill being recommitted to the Committee on Patents if anybody desires to have it recommitted, but it has been once considered and reported to the Senate, and I want to say that if recommitted it is manifestly impossible that the Committee on Patents should have another meeting or give it any consideration at this session of the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. The party representing the bill seems very anxious to have it recommitted to the committee, and I move that it be so referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion can only be entertained at this time by unanimous consent. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Connecticut to object?

Mr. PLATT. I do not object to it, but I make the statement which I have made. If it is recommitted I want it recommitted with that statement before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

W. P. BROWNLOW.

Mr. MILLER submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That there be paid to W. P. Brownlow, for extra services in folding-room from July 1, 1886, to June 30, 1887, $240.

COMMITTEE ON PRINTING.

Mr. MANDERSON. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing, as at present constituted, be authorized to sit during the coming recess, and to prosecute the investigations into the public printing and the codification of the laws on printing and binding as ordered by a resolution adopted by the Senate on the 29th of June, 1886.

Let that go over until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will lie over.

DIFFERENCES OF RAILROADS WITH THEIR EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. BLAIR. I observe that there is no unfinished business on the Calendar, and therefore the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order of morning business has not yet been completed. With the consent of the Senator from New Hampshire, the Chair will continue to call for concurrent and other resolutions before entertaining any motion. If there be no further concurrent or other resolutions, the Chair will receive the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire, the morning business being closed.

Mr. BLAIR. I move that the Senate proceed to consider Order of Business 553, being the bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MILLER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. The pleuro-pneumonia bill, which was under discussion for two days as unfinished business, was laid aside informally. I desire to inquire whether that bill is not properly the unfinished business at 2 o'clock to-day?

Mr. BLAIR. Unless it was laid before the Senate at the termination of the business on the following day or the same day it disappeared from the list of special orders and went to the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair was not observing when the action of the Senate was taken; but the Chair is informed by the clerks at the desk that that bill by the action of the Senate has gone to the Calendar, and its consideration can only be resumed by a vote of a majority of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT. While I voted for an amendment which was supposed to be by the authors of the pleuro-pneumonia bill—I did not so consider it—the destruction of the bill, I certainly understood that the bill was informally laid aside and was to be the pending business to-day. I know not how the record was made up; I know not whether all the steps were taken in detail which would make it keep its place, but it was my understanding that it was to remain as the unfinished business of the session, and was to be taken up again at some future time.

Mr. PLUMB. It can be taken up by a vote of the Senate on motion at any time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. As the Chair is at present advised, without having had the opportunity of consulting the record, the Chair would hold that the bill known as the pleuro-pneumonia bill could only be reached by motion sustained by a majority of the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. I will waive the matter for the present, but I give notice that if it is not found to be the unfinished business I shall move to take it up at the first opportunity.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7479) to provide a method for settling controversies and differences between railroad corporations engaged in interstate and territorial transportation of property or passengers and their employés.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not propose to debate the bill. It is reported by the Committee on Education and Labor as it passed the other House with the recommendations of no amendment whatever. There are no amendments pending to the bill. Notice was given of an intention to offer amendments by two Senators at the last session, but one of them can no longer participate in these proceedings, and the other Senator has informed me that he did not desire to press the amendment which he had earlier designed to present.

So the committee and those who have given attention to the bill simply ask for its passage as it came from the House of Representatives. Of course it will be perceived that at this late period in the session any amendment whatever made to the bill would endanger its becoming a law as the result of the efforts of this Congress.

It is simply a bill providing for voluntary arbitration between railroads engaged in interstate commerce and their employés when difficulties arise between them such as ordinarily have led to industrial disturbances. Its provisions are simple. It provides for the only form of arbitration which has ever been successful to any extent in this or any other country, and the committee believed that without discussion and from a simple reading of the provisions of the bill it would recommend itself to the Senate and secure its adoption.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection to this bill, although I do not believe it will accomplish much for the laboring men of the country. The prosperity of the whole people depends on the prosperity of the laboring portion thereof. If all the laboring people are in financial distress capital will realize but little profit. It is the laborer alone that creates wealth, defends the State from attacks within and without, and makes it possible for him who has capital to live in ease and safety.

National power does not depend on the number of people, nor is it determined by the wealth of the people, but by the mental, moral, and physical condition of that class that makes the great body of the people.

Good food, suitable clothing, opportunities for education and recreation are indispensable to the production of good men. An overworked ox or horse will not live out half the time of its natural life, even if well fed, and if you add to overwork a lack of suitable food, his days will be short. How can we expect to produce the highest type of men if they are overworked, poorly fed, improperly clothed, and denied opportunities for obtaining an education? Opportunities should be given to all to complete their mental, moral, and physical stature as God intended they should. It was not intended that there should be either mental, moral, or physical dwarfs.

The right of every man, then, to reach the highest possible standard of mental, moral, and physical perfection cannot be questioned. All laws that deny to him this privilege, whether put in the forms of statutory enactment by legislative bodies, or the result of combinations or associations, are void, and ought to be resented in the interest of the laboring men of the country.

To secure the proper means to develop the mental, moral, and physical nature of themselves and their children most men have nothing to sell but the strength or skill of their hands. This they should be allowed to sell on their own terms.

No power should interfere to prevent the free exercise of this right, and no laboring man should for a moment surrender that right, either to the State, to his fellow-workmen, or to capital. His labor is valuable to him only as it is at his uncontroled disposal, both as to whom he will sell it and at the price for which he will sell it, and when he will sell it. Any interference by his fellow-workmen of the same trade or any other in the disposal of his labor is an invasion of his rights that he should not be slow to resent. If he has greater strength or skill than his neighbor he has the right to demand more for the exercise of his strength or skill than has his neighbor; if it is less, he may take less.

Millions of accumulated labor, called capital, may combine against him to fix the price of his labor, and he may think it necessary to combine with his fellows to prevent the combination from harming him; and when such combination of labor is in the nature of co-operation, it may be successful; but if it is a combination only to fix the character of the labor to be performed, the hours of labor, or the price thereof, although it may bring capital to the feet of labor as a suppliant it will not inure to the real benefit of the laborer; for by such combination he has destroyed his individuality and put himself on the plane of the weakest member of his combination, so that the few weak and unfortunate members of the combination fix and control the status of the many who have the ability to rise above the dead level fixed for them by such combination. The difference between a slave and a freeman consists mainly in the fact that the freeman may freely dispose of his labor whether it be mental or physical on the terms fixed by himself, and he who surrenders that right can hardly be called a freeman.

The laboring man of to-day who claims and exercises the uncontrolled right to dispose of his labor on his own terms is very likely to be the capitalist of to-morrow. To-day an employé, to-morrow an employer. This he will never be if he surrenders the control of his strength and skill to others who are to share with him in an unequal partnership. A labor partnership in which all the members do not contribute the same capital of strength, skill, and mental capacity is an unfair one.

What the American laborer needs is individualism, freedom from the control of others, the right to control his mental, moral, and physical faculties in the way that shall bring him the most gain, whether that be measured in dollars and cents or in the comforts and joys of life.

I shall attempt no eulogy on the men who labor; the whole world is full of the evidences of their power. Turn whichever way you will you will find either the laborer himself or his children dominating and controlling all classes of society; whether it be in affairs of state, national or local. In matters of finance, education, or religion it is the laboring man or his children that control. That control is because that heretofore the American laborer refused to surrender his capital to the control of others. Because he was independent and had individual aspirations; because he was not content to be always a laborer. If the lack of opportunities and other circumstances made it impossible for the father to look beyond the sphere of the laborer, he took good care that his sons and daughters should have a wider field than his, and thousands of American laborers have had the satisfaction of seeing their sons fill high stations with credit to themselves and advantage to their country. There are no castes in America. Labor is neither a hindrance to public preferment nor a badge of disgrace. The men who have done the most to illustrate American history with heroic deeds, who have attained the highest pinnacle of intellectual fame, have been laborers or the sons thereof.

In the executive and legislative departments of government, both National and State, can be found great numbers of men discharging their duties in a satisfactory manner, who have blistered their hands with honest toil, and "who despise not the days of their small beginnings."

I repeat, what the American laborer wants is freedom from control, either of capital or his fellow workmen, independence, individuality, the right and disposition to take care of himself untrammelled, either by legislation, the rules of guilds, associations, trades unions, or other combinations that deny to him the free control of his labor and the full opportunity to leave the ranks of labor when his skill, strength, or ability will enable him to do so. If all the laboring people will assert for themselves individually the rights I have claimed for them, their power will be greatly enhanced, their opportunities for advancement immeasurably increased, and in the future, as in the past, no man need be ashamed of the fact that he has been or still is a laborer.

When the laborers shall decline to be considered or treated as a class having different wants and interests, needing different legislation, with different aspirations and ambitions from that of the balance of the citizens of the Republic, and shall, with confidence in their strength and ability to perform, demand that which is clearly their due—the right of self control, an open, unobstructed highway out of the ranks of mere labor, into any and all other occupations, employments, professions, or places that they are qualified to fill—then will there be an end of the supposed conflict between capital and labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HAWLEY in the chair). The Chair takes the liberty of observing to the Senator from New Hampshire that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] has an amendment pending.

Mr. BLAIR. I spoke to the Senator from Ohio regarding that, and he said that he did not care to press it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair found the proposed amendment with the bill. It seems to have been submitted as an amendment proposed to be offered, but not actually presented.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. The Senator from Ohio is now present, and I call his attention to the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was my purpose at an earlier stage of the session to offer an amendment to this bill which would have made it practical and efficient, so that it would secure to the laboring men of this country some substantial benefit; but I think at this late period of the session it had better not be done. The probability is that any amendment now would defeat the passage of the bill.

Many of the laboring men of the country believe that this bill, which proposes voluntary arbitration, may be of service to them. I think it will bear barren fruit. It confers upon them no rights, no facilities for settling disputes between themselves and their employers that do not exist by the common law. The right of arbitration is secured by the law of every State and of every country in the world, and this confers nothing but that right; but to undertake to amend the bill in the way I had proposed, at this stage of the session, would probably be to defeat it. I proposed the organization of a commission, to be composed of two members of the Senate, three members of the House of Representatives, and seven members from civil life to be appointed by the President of the United States, and to give them a liberal compensation with a view to examine into the whole question and advise us fully as to what remedies should be proposed in cases of controversy between employers and employed. What I wished was a broad and liberal examination, similar to those which have been authorized by the British Parliament, and from whieh very beneficial results have come.

The amendment I had intended to propose, but shall not now offer, was to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill, and to insert:

That a commission is hereby created called the arbitration commission, to consist of twelve members, composed as follows: Two members of the Senate, to be appointed by the President of the Senate; three members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House; seven members from civil life, to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, not more than four of whom shall belong to one political party, who shall be selected for superior intelligence as to the industrial and laboring interests of the country. The civil commissioners shall receive as compensation for their services each at the rate of $10 per day when engaged in duty, and each member of the commission shall receive actual traveling and other necessary expenses, such compensation and expenses to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. Said commission shall choose from among their own number a chairman, and shall have power to employ a stenographer and a messenger.

SEC. 2. That it shall be the duty of said commission to take into consideration and to thoroughly investigate all the various controversies that have arisen or are likely to arise between the employers and the employed, whether they be corporations, or associations, or private individuals, and whether engaged in transportation, manufacturing, mining, or other industrial interests of the United States, so far as they relate to such controversies between rival and competing companies or between transportation, manufacturing, and mining companies and their employés; and for the purpose of fully examining the matters which may come before it, said commission, in the prosecution of its inquiries, is empowered to visit such different portions and sections of the country as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 3. That the commission shall make to Congress final report of the results of its investigation, and the testimony taken in the course of the same, not later than the first Monday in December, 1886, and especially such measure or measures as in its judgment may be expedient and within the constitutional power of Congress to adopt for the decision and settlement of controversies and to avoid or prevent the same; and it shall cause so much of the testimony taken to be printed from time to time as it may deem advisable; and 2,000 copies thereof shall be distributed by the Public Printer, one-third to the Senate and two-thirds to the House of Representatives.

But, as I said, I do not wish to embarrass this bill at this time. I prefer to vote for it as it stands, and hope that hereafter some effective legislation may be adopted by Congress to carry out the object proposed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7021, Order of Business 1455.

Mr. BLAIR. What is the subject of the bill?

Mr. PLUMB. It is a bill for the adjustment of railroad land grants.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator to consent that perhaps five minutes more may be taken to pass a bill coming from the other House in which the laboring people of the country have taken great interest, that I do not think will occupy much time.

Mr. PLUMB. If the bill I refer to is taken up, I will then yield.

Mr. BLAIR. As we have taken so little time with the bill which was just passed, and which it was supposed would take some time, I would like a little indulgence for the bills of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Kansas was out a few minutes ago when I gave notice that as soon as the arbitration bill was finished I should ask the Senate to take up the pleuro-pneumonia bill and dispose of it. I suppose the pleuro-pneumonia bill is properly the unfinished business of the Senate, but the Calendar does not show it. I want the bill considered. I desire to bring it up at this time and get a vote on the motion to reconsider the amendment which was adopted, and, if we are successful in that, to pass the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. I think that had better come in a little later. When that comes up we shall probably have a repetition of the debate we had before, and it may lead to a night session. In the mean time, it seems to me the heart of the day ought not to be cut into by matters of this kind. I do not yield to any one in my desire that that bill shall become a law; still there will be debate upon it and time will be consumed.

Mr. MILLER. I gave notice a few moments ago, when the President pro tempore was in the chair, of my intention to call up the pleuro-pneumonia bill, and if he had continued there I think he would have recognized me instead of other Senators, and my motion would have been made in order.

I do not desire to antagonize the measure of the Senator from Kansas, but there was, I believe, a unanimous understanding among the friends of the pleuro-pneumonia bill that it should be taken up to-day at two o'clock. I have given them notice to that effect, supposing that it was the unfinished business. It seems to me that if taken up at all it should be taken up at the present time, because unless it is passed to-day there is not much prospect for it. I do not know whether the Senator from Kansas expects debate on his own bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Not at all.

Mr. MILLER. Then I give notice that at the conclusion of that bill I will move to take up the pleuro-pneumonia bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the President pro tempore left the chair and called the present occupant to it, he gave him instructions that the Senate would proceed regularly with the Calendar under Rule 9 unless a certain order of business agreed on upon both sides of the Senate should be called up, and the Chair recognized the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], who moved the consideration of a bill under that agreement. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land-grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to take up the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. The bill has been read, and the amendments have also been read.

Mr. BLAIR. May I appeal again to the courtesy of the Senator from Kansas? His bill is up. I ask the Senator to consent to the informal laying aside of his bill for perhaps five minutes.

Mr. PLUMB. I think we had better not consent to that now. We can conclude this bill in five minutes.

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the Senate that for the sake of facilitating the business of the Senate I have permitted a bill, which might well, as other Senators indulge themselves, have taken two or three days of debate, to pass almost without a word from myself, and it is now a law so far as the Senate can make it so. There is only one other bill which the Committee on Education and Labor desire to call to the attention of the Senate during the session. It will pass in the same way, without objection from anybody, I think.

Mr. PLUMB. I will yield to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas yields to the Senator from New Hampshire.

CONVICT AND ALIEN LABOR.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask then that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 2366, House bill 5541.

Mr. PLATT. That displaces the pending order.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask unanimous consent to lay aside the other informally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent for the consideration of Order of Business 2366, being the bill (H. R. 5541) to prevent the employment of convict labor and alien labor upon public buildings and other public works, and convict labor in the preparation or manufacture of materials for public buildings or other public works, and to regulate the manner of letting contracts therefor. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. HARRIS. Let the bill be read at length, subject to objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That in all advertisements for the erection or construction of public buildings or other public works, or for materials to be used in their erection, construction, or completion, and for all supplies of every description to be furnished to or for the use of any of the Departments, and in all contracts made under or in pursuance of such advertisements, there shall be inserted a condition that no convict or prison labor whatsoever, or the product thereof, shall be employed or used upon any public building or other public work, or in the preparation or manufacture of any of the articles, materials, or supplies contracted to be furnished therefor; and there shall also be inserted in said contract the further condition that no person who is not a bona fide resident within the limits of the United States, and who has not declared his intention to become a citizen thereof in the manner provided by law, shall be employed in the erection, construction, or completion of any public building or other public work.

SEC. 2. That any willful breach of any of said conditions by any contractor shall authorize and work a forfeiture of the contract, and shall constitute a complete defense in bar against any claim or action against the United States for the recovery of any sum or sums under said contract; and it shall be the duty of the officer letting any such contract, upon being advised that any contractor has knowingly violated the terms of such contract, to declare the same forfeited.

Mr. BLAIR. Let the report be read. It is very brief, and it gives the point of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the consideration of the bill. It is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and the report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. BLAIR, February 26, 1887:

The Committee on Education and Labor report back favorably House bill 5541, entitled "An act to prevent the employment of convict and alien labor upon public buildings and other public works, and convict labor in the preparation or manufacture of materials for public buildings or other public works, and to regulate the manner of letting contracts therefor."

The purpose of this bill is to provide that the expenditure of the moneys, taken by taxation from the American people, upon the public works of the United States, whether for wages, or materials which are created by labor, and therefore substantially as a whole are really paid out of the national Treasury for labor, shall be paid to honest and respectable American citizens, or to those who, having resided in our country six months shall have declared their intention to become our fellow-citizens.

The practice prevails largely along the line of Canada and elsewhere to pay out the appropriations for rivers and harbors, public buildings, and for other public purposes, to cheap labor from abroad, which immediately returns whence it came, and to convict labor, or for materials produced by such labor, to the exclusion of our own people, and to those who avail themselves of the unclean profits derived from the half-paid toil of the criminal classes.

It is important that the bill pass, in compliance with a strong public opinion, which for a long time has demanded this legislation.

We recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND-GRANT RAILROADS.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of——

Mr. PLUMB. There is a bill pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes, called up by the Senator from Kansas, is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. It was informally laid aside.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment of the committee. The matter has been a subject of discussion among persons interested, and at the suggestion of other persons I move to amend, in line 5 of the first section of the amendment, by inserting what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5 of section 1 of the amendment of the Committee on Public Lands, moved as a substitute, after the word "adjusted," it is proposed to insert:

In accordance with the principles of construction and administration heretofore applicable thereto, including the decisions of the Supreme Court.

So as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately adjust, or cause to be adjusted, in accordance with the principles of construction and administration heretofore applicable thereto, including the decisions of the Supreme Court, each of the railroad land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and heretofore unadjusted.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that section 1 of the committee's amendment as amended be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to amend the committee's amendment in section 2 by striking out, in line 4, the words "or by any State," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That if it shall appear, upon the completion of such adjustments, respectively, or sooner, that lands have been, from any cause, heretofore erroneously certified or patented, by the United States, to or for the use or benefit of any company claiming by, through, or under grant from the United States, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that section 2 of the amendment as amended be adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to amend the amendment, in section 3, by striking out the proviso from line 31 to line 36 inclusive.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

And provided, That all lands heretofore erroneously certified or patented to or for the benefit of any company as aforesaid, and by such companies sold to aliens, shall revert to the United States and be disposed of under the public land laws:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that section 3 of the amendment be adopted as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to adopt section 4 of the amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move now, in section 5 of the committee amendment, to insert, after the word "canceled," in line 2, the words "or suspended;" so as to read:

SEC. 5. That all purchasers from the Government whose entries have been canceled or suspended because in conflict with the grant to a railroad company, which grant shall have afterwards been forfeited, or when the title to the same is still in the Government and free from the right of said railroad company or other person, and in which cases the purchase-money is still retained by the Government, shall have the right to receive a patent for the land so purchased without further payment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move the adoption of section 5 of the committee's amendment as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend section 6 by striking out and inserting according as I have marked on the paper which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to amend section 6 so as to make it read:

SEC. 6. That no more lands shall be certified or conveyed to any State or to any corporation or individual, for the benefit of either of the companies herein mentioned, where it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior that such transfers will create an excess over the quantity of land to which such State, corporation, or individual would be rightfully entitled.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move the adoption of section 6 as amended.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I will state that these amendments were suggested by Senators from other land-grant States, and in a general way have my concurrence. They are undoubtedly in the line of perfecting the bill.

Mr. CALL. I ask that the bill be read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment reported as a substitute will be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the amendment as amended, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to immediately adjust, or cause to be adjusted, in accordance with the principles of construction and administration heretofore applicable thereto, including the decisions of the Supreme Court, each of the railroad land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and heretofore unadjusted.

"SEC. 2. That if it shall appear, upon the completion of such adjustments respectively, or sooner, that lands have been, from any cause, heretofore erroneously certified or patented, by the United States, to or for the use or benefit of any company claiming by, through, or under grant from the United States, to aid in the construction of a railroad, it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to thereupon demand from such company a relinquishment or reconveyance to the United States of all such lands, whether within granted or indemnity limits; and if such company shall neglect or fail to so reconvey such lands to the United States within ninety days after the aforesaid demand shall have been made, it shall thereupon be the duty of the Attorney-General to commence and prosecute in the proper courts the necessary proceedings to cancel all patents, certification, or other evidence of title heretofore issued for such lands, and to restore the title thereof to the United States: Provided, That the lands so erroneously conveyed shall be excepted from the provisions of this section which have been sold by such company to citizens of the United States, or persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, or which, at the date of any sale by such company, were in the possession of any person claiming the same under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, and which claims have since been asserted in good faith, and when such claimants did not subsequently purchase from the aforesaid company, or which had been settled upon under the homestead and pre-emption laws, by bona fide settlers, prior to the date when the rights of such company attached to the adjacent lands, as to which excepted lands the Secretary shall demand a release to the United States from said company, free from all incumbrances by or through such company; and the said pre-emption or homestead claimants shall be permitted to perfect their proofs and entries and to receive their patent, except as to such settlers as voluntarily abandoned such entries, and except also as to such as have located or made entry of other lands in lieu of the lands so abandoned.

"SEC. 3. That all lands, except those mentioned in the foregoing section, which have been so erroneously certified or patented as aforesaid, and which have been sold by the grantee company to citizens of the United States, or to persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, the person or persons so purchasing, his heirs or assigns, shall be entitled to the land so purchased, upon making proof of the fact of such purchase at the proper local land office, within such time and under such rules as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, after the grants respectively shall have been adjusted; and patents of the United States shall issue therefor, and shall relate back to the date of the original certification or patenting; and the Secretary of the Interior, on behalf of the United States, shall demand payment from the company which has so disposed of such lands of an amount equal to the Government price of similar lands; and in case of neglect or refusal of such company to make payment as hereafter specified, within ninety days after the demand shall have been made, the Attorney-General shall cause suit or suits to be brought against such company for the said amount: Provided, That all lands so wrongfully certified or patented and not sold by the grantee company shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of under the public land laws: And provided, That any lands heretofore claimed by such company under grants by Congress, which have not been certified or patented, and which, upon a proper adjustment as required by this act, shall be found not to belong to such company, shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of under the public land laws; and priorty of right shall be give to bona fide settlers residing thereon: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall prevent any purchaser of lands erroneously withdrawn, certified, or patented as aforesaid from recovering the purchase-money therefor from the grantee company, less the amount paid to the United States by such company as by this act required: And provided, That a mortgage for pledge of said lands by the company shall not be considered as a sale for the purpose of this act; nor shall this act be construed as a declaration of forfeiture of any portion of any land grant for conditions broken, or as authorizing an entry for the same, or as a waiver of any rights that the United States may have to enter for breach of said conditions and to forfeit any such grant.

"SEC. 4. That where any said company shall have sold to citizens of the United States, or to persons who have declared their intention to become such citizens, as a part of its grant, lands not conveyed to or for the use of such company, said lands being the numbered sections prescribed in the grant, and being coterminous with the constructed parts of said road, and where the lands so sold are for any reason excepted from the operation of the grant to said company, it shall be lawful for said company to make payment to the United States for said lands at the ordinary Government price for like lands, and thereupon patents shall issue therefor to said company, which shall inure to the benefit of its purchasers; or said purchasers may themselves make said payment, and thereupon receive patents in their own names: Provided, That all lands shall be excepted from the provisions of this section which at the date of such sales were in the occupation of adverse claimants under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, and whose claims and occupation have since been continued in accordance with law, and where said claimants have not purchased the railroad title, as to which excepted lands the said pre-emption and homestead claimants shall be permitted to perfect their proofs and entries and receive patents therefor: Provided, further, That this section shall not apply to lands settled upon subsequent to the 1st day of December, 1882, by persons claiming to enter the same under the settlement laws of the United States, as to which lands the parties claiming the same as aforesaid shall be entitled to prove up and enter as in other like cases.

"SEC. 5. That all purchasers from the Government whose entries have been canceled or suspended because in conflict with the grant to a railroad company, which grant shall have afterwards been forfeited, or when the title to the same is still in the Government and free from the right of said railroad company or other person, and in which cases the purchase-money is still retained by the Government, shall have the right to receive a patent for the land so purchased without further payment: Provided, further, That where any such lands have been sold and conveyed, as the property of any railroad company, for State and county taxes thereon, the purchaser thereof shall have the prior right, which shall continue for one year from the approval of this act, and no longer, to purchase such lands from the United States at the Government price, and patents for such lands shall thereupon issue: Provided, That said lands were not, previous to or at the time of the taking effect of such grant, in the possession of or subject to the right of any actual settler.

"SEC. 6. That no more lands shall be certified or conveyed to any State or to any corporation or individual, for the benefit of either of the companies herein mentioned, where it shall appear to the Secretary of the Interior that such transfers will create an excess over the quantity of lands to which such State, corporation, or individual would be rightfully entitled."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

A bill to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, and ask a conference with the House of Representatives on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. TELLER, and Mr. MORGAN were appointed.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1494) granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith;

An act (S. 2982) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to permit the temporary occupation of streets by a railway for the purpose of transporting material to fill about the base of the Washington Monument;

An act (S. 1458) to provide for holding terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Michigan at Bay City, in said district;

An act (S. 2519) granting an increase of pension to Richard B. Rians; and Joint resolution (S. R. 51) authorizing and directing the Department of Justice to transfer certain rooms which have been occupied by the United States courts to the city of Jackson, Miss.

DISEASES OF CATTLE.

Mr. MILLER. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3025) to extirpate contagious pleuro-pneumonia, foot-and-mouth disease, and rinderpest among cattle, and to facilitate the exportation of cattle and the products of live-stock, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the motion of the Senator from New York?

Mr. BUTLER. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. BUTLER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 36, nays 15; as follows:

YEAS—36.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Cockrell, | Jones of Nevada, | Riddleberger, |
| Allison, | Cullom, | Manderson, | Sabin, |
| Beck, | Dolph, | Miller, | Sherman, |
| Blackburn, | Eustis, | Mitchell of Pa., | Spooner, |
| Blair, | Evarts, | Morrill, | Teller, |
| Bowen, | Farwell, | Palmer, | Van Wyck, |
| Call, | Harrison, | Payne, | Williams, |
| Cameron, | Hoar, | Platt, | Wilson of Iowa, |
| Cheney, | Ingalls, | Plumb, | Wilson of Md. |

NAYS—15.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Berry, | George, | Harris, | Vance, |
| Butler, | Gibson, | Kenna, | Vest, |
| Coke, | Gray, | Pugh, | Whitthorne. |

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Brown, | Frye, | McPherson, | Sewell, |
| Camden, | Gorman, | Mahone, | Stanford, |
| Chace, | Hale, | Maxey, | Voorhees. |
| Conger, | Hawley, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Walthall. |
| Dawes, | Jones of Arkansas, | Morgan, | |
| Edmunds, | Jones of Florida, | Ransom, | |
| Fair, | McMillan, | Sawyer, | |

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. When the bill was last under consideration the Senate had adopted an amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], and a motion was pending to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to, which is the question now pending. [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. COKE and Mr. HARRIS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] on this question. I am not apprised how he would vote. I should vote for the motion to reconsider if at liberty to do so.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. GEORGE. My colleague [Mr. WALTHALL] is paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. SPOONER. My pair with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL] has been transferred to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. I therefore vote "yea." I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. SAWYER] is detained from the Chamber to-day by sickness. He met with an accident and is unable to be here. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—30.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Allison, | Dolph, | Jones of Nevada, | Spooner, |
| Blair, | Evarts, | McMillan, | Teller, |
| Bowen, | Farwell, | Manderson, | Van Wyck, |
| Call, | Frye, | Miller, | Vest, |
| Cameron, | Hale, | Palmer, | Williams, |
| Cheney, | Harrison, | Payne, | Wilson of Iowa. |

| Berry, | George, | Jones of Arkansas, | Saulsbury, |
| Blackburn, | Gorman, | Kenna, | Vance, |
| Butler, | Gray, | Maxey, | Whitthorne, |
| Coke, | Hampton, | Morgan, | Wilson of Md. |
| Colquitt, | Harris, | Platt, | |
| Edmunds, | Hawley, | Pugh, | |

ABSENT—24.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Conger, | Mahone, | Riddleberger, |
| Beck, | Eustis, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Sawyer, |
| Brown, | Fair, | Mitchell of Pa., | Sewell, |
| Camden, | Gibson, | Morrill, | Stanford, |
| Chace, | Jones of Florida, | Plumb, | Voorhees, |
| Cockrell, | McPherson, | Ransom, | Walthall. |

So the motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS. The pending question now is, will the Senate agree to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator from Vermont is engaged upon a committee of conference and can not be present. I therefore move that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow, so that the Senator from Vermont may be present when the question is pending upon his amendment. I think it is due to that Senator that he should be present when the Senate acts upon the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. MILLER. I do not care to discuss the motion to postpone. Of course the friends of the bill will not consent to any such motion as that under any circumstances.

Mr. BUTLER and Mr. HARRIS called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Tennessee to postpone the bill until to-morrow.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORRILL (when Mr. EDMUNDS's name was called). My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is absent, engaged on a conference in relation to the fisheries question. That is the reason why he can not be present at this time.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired upon this question with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SPOONER. If my colleague [Mr. SAWYER] were here, he would vote "nay."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 16, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—16.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Berry, | George, | Harris, | Vance, |
| Butler, | Gorman, | Jones of Arkansas, | Vest, |
| Coke, | Gray, | Kenna, | Whitthorne, |

NAYS—35.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Cullom, | Jones of Nevada, | Riddleberger, |
| Allison, | Dawes, | McMillan, | Sabin, |
| Beck, | Dolph, | Manderson, | Sherman, |
| Blackburn, | Evarts, | Miller, | Spooner, |
| Blair, | Farwell, | Mitchell of Pa., | Teller, |
| Bowen, | Hale, | Morrill, | Van Wyck, |
| Call, | Harrison, | Palmer, | Williams, |
| Cameron, | Hoar, | Payne, | Wilson of Iowa. |
| Cheney, | Ingalls, | Platt, | |

ABSENT—25.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Brown, | Fair, | Maxey, | Sewell, |
| Camden, | Frye, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Stanford, |
| Chace, | Gibson, | Morgan, | Voorhees, |
| Cockrell, | Hawley, | Plumb, | Walthall. |
| Conger, | Jones of Florida, | Ransom, | |
| Edmunds, | McPherson, | Saulsbury, | |
| Eustis, | Mahone, | Sawyer, | |

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr EDMUNDS].

Mr. BUTLER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MILLER. I hope not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER The Senator from South Carolina moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. BUTLER. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. If he were here I should vote "yea."

The roll-call having been concluded, the result was announced—yeas 12, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—12.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Berry, | Coke, | Harris, | Pugh, |
| Blackburn, | Colquitt, | Jones of Arkansas, | Vance, |
| Butler, | Gray, | Payne, | Vest. |

NAYS—33.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Allison, | Dolph, | Mahone, | Spooner, |
| Beck, | Evarts, | Manderson, | Teller, |
| Blair, | Farwell, | Maxey, | Van Wyck, |

| Call, | Harrison, | Morrill, | Williams, |
| Cameron, | Hoar, | Platt, | Wilson of Md. |
| Cheney, | Ingalls, | Riddleberger, | |
| Cullom, | Kenna, | Sabin, | |
| Dawes, | McMillan, | Sherman, | |

ABSENT—31.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Fair, | Jones of Nevada, | Saulsbury, |
| Brown, | Frye, | McPherson, | Sawyer, |
| Camden, | George, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Sewell, |
| Chace, | Gibson, | Mitchell of Pa., | Stanford, |
| Cockrell, | Gorman, | Morgan, | Voorhees, |
| Conger, | Hampton, | Palmer, | Whitthorne. |
| Edmunds, | Hawley, | Plumb, | Wilson of Iowa. |
| Eustis, | Jones of Florida, | Ransom, | |

So the Senate refused to proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. What is the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill and insert:

That the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the President and in his discretion, through the Commissioner of Agriculture, to aid the proper authorities of the several States in preventing the spread of the disease commonly known as pleuro-pneumonia among cattle. This appropriation shall expire at the end of two years from the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I believe that is the same amendment which was offered last Thursday or Friday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is, and the amendment was adopted, and the vote has been reconsidered. The question again recurs on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. I ask for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerks inform the Chair that when the motion to reconsider was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] two or three days ago there was an amendment to the amendment pending, offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. MILLER. The question was taken on a reconsideration, and the vote having been reconsidered, the question must now be on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The reconsideration has been ordered, and the Chair supposed that left the situation precisely as stated. If the amendment referred to is not pressed, the question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MORRILL (when Mr. EDMUNDS'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. EDMUNDS] is absent on a committee of conference.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. If he were here, I would vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. FRYE (after having voted in the negative). I withdraw my vote. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS].

Mr. WALTHALL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I see he is absent, and I withdraw my vote.

Mr. SPOONER entered the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] is present.

Mr. SPOONER. I will state to the Senator from Mississippi that my pair with him was transferred, by arrangement with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], leaving me at liberty to vote.

Mr. WALTHALL. Very well; I have withdrawn my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 29, as follows:

YEAS—21.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Berry, | Eustis, | Hawley, | Vance, |
| Blackburn, | George, | Jones of Arkansas, | Vest, |
| Brown, | Gorman, | Kenna, | Wilson of Md. |
| Butler, | Gray, | Maxey, | |
| Coke, | Hampton, | Morgan, | |
| Colquitt, | Harris, | Pugh, | |

NAYS—29.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Allison, | Evarts, | Mahone, | Spooner, |
| Beck, | Farwell, | Manderson, | Teller, |
| Blair, | Hale, | Miller, | Van Wyck, |
| Bowen, | Harrison, | Palmer, | Williams, |
| Cameron, | Hoar, | Payne, | Wilson of Iowa. |
| Cheney, | Ingalls, | Riddleberger, | |
| Cullom, | Jones of Nevada, | Sabin, | |
| Dolph, | McMillan, | Sherman, | |

ABSENT—26.

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Aldrich, | Edmunds, | Mitchell of Pa., | Sewell, |
| Call, | Fair, | Morrill, | Stanford, |
| Camden, | Frye, | Platt, | Voorhees, |
| Chace, | Gibson, | Plumb, | Walthall, |
| Cockrell, | Jones of Florida, | Ransom, | Whitthorne. |
| Conger, | McPherson, | Saulsbury, | |
| Dawes, | Mitchell of Oreg., | Sawyer, | |

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. I offer an amendment to the bill, to come in at the end of section 3.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 3 add:

That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State, whenever the plans and methods shall be accepted by any State in which pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, and whenever the governor of a State, being thereto authorized by law, or other properly constituted authorities signify their assent to the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized to expend in said State so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigations and such disinfection and quarantine measures, including the slaughter of animals, as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease in said State, or from said State into any other State or Territory.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask to have that read again, and with a little more deliberation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Missouri that this identical amendment having been offered on a previous day and disagreed to, it would not be in order to offer it again as in Committee of the Whole. It can be offered when the bill is in the Senate.

Mr. VEST. Of course I know the rule, but I do not think the amendment as it stands now was voted down. It is modified now by striking out certain words that were in the original amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the amendment is not the same it would be in order, but the Chair has been informed that the amendment is identical.

Mr. MILLER. I think the Senate will remember that it is identical. The words stricken out were stricken out before it was voted down. Of course the Senator can call for a vote on the amendment when we come into the Senate, and that will test the matter the same.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment being identical, as the Chair is informed, it is not now in order.

Mr. VEST. I ask permission to modify it.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is the reason why I asked that it be read with more deliberation. I thought it was the old amendment in a new form.

Mr. BUTLER. While that is being considered, for the edification of the Senate and the country, I ask the Secretary to read the vote upon what was known as the Edmunds amendment on the 25th of this month, so as to ascertain what "change" has come over "the spirit of the dream" of some Senators since that time.

The Secretary read as follows:

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to have the pairs announced, in justice to the Senators who were paired. The Secretary will find the pairs stated on the opposite page.

The Secretary read as follows:

Mr. MCMILLAN (when his name was called). The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has been compelled to withdraw from the Chamber, and I agreed to pair with him. If he were present, he would vote "yea" and I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. My colleague [Mr. BECK] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and they are both absent on a conference committee.

Mr. PLUMB (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PUGH], and I therefore withdraw my vote. If the Senator from Alabama were present, I should vote "nay" and he would vote "yea."

Mr. KENNA. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon (after having voted in the negative). I voted under a misapprehension. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE]. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. VEST. I now offer my amendment with certain words stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 3 add:

That it shall be the duty of the President of the United States to certify such rules and regulations to the executive authority of each State, whenever the plans and methods shall be accepted by any State in which pleuro-pneumonia or other contagious, infectious, or communicable disease is declared to exist, and whenever the governor of a Sta'e, being thereto authorized by law, or other properly constituted authorities signify their assent to the extinction of any contagious, infectious, or communicable disease in conformity with the provisions of this act, the commission is hereby authorized to expend in said State so much of the money appropriated by this act as may be necessary in such investigations and such disinfection and quarantine measures, including the slaughter of animals, as may be necessary to prevent the spread of the disease from said State into any other State or Territory.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator state to the Senate briefly what the difference is between the amendment as he now offers it and the amendment as it was voted down?

Mr. VEST. The original amendment provided that the money should be expended in disinfection and the slaughter of animals to prevent the spread of the disease in said State, or from said State to any other State or Territory. I struck out the words "in said State," so that as it reads now it is intended to prevent the spread of the disease from said State to any other State or Territory, bringing it, in my judgment, exactly within the commerce clause of the Constitution.

Mr. MILLER. Then the effect will be, as I understand it, that if the quarantining or slaughtering of animals would have a tendency to prevent the spread of the disease within a State, the President could not act, none of the money could be expended.

Mr. HARRISON. Even if the governor assented.

Mr. MILLER. Even if the governor and the Legislature had assented to it. That certainly reduces it down to a point where it would leave nothing whatever in the bill.

Mr. VEST. I understand that the bill on its very face says that it is for the purpose of increasing commerce in cattle between the States—"among the States," quoting the very language of the Constitution, "and with foreign nations." The amendment is strictly in consonance with that clause of the bill, which is in the first section. When the Senator from New York drew the bill he drew it upon that clause of the Constitution, and it speaks for itself and admits of no sort of denial. If this power does not come from that clause in the Constitution, then the framers of the bill could not find any other authority for it.

The amendment simply declares or reiterates that same principle, that this disease is to be stamped out to prevent its being spread to other States and Territories. Whether the commissioners, as a matter of discretion with them, consider it necessary in any given case to use these quarantine and other regulations in order to prevent the spread, is a question for them; but I simply reiterate the object of the bill as it is declared in the first section.

Mr. MILLER. The bill proceeds upon the fact, well-established, that the existence of pleuro-pneumonia in any State in this Union substantially prevents our country from having any foreign commerce in live cattle at all, and also it proceeds upon the presumption that the existence of pleuro-pneumonia in any one particular State prevents any interstate commerce with that State and all the other States in the Union so long as pleuro-pneumonia shall exist in that State.

I find by the late papers that the cattle commission in the State of Maine have just undertaken to prevent the bringing into the State of Maine of any cattle whatever from any other State of the Union, without any regard to whether they are diseased or not, simply because some pleuro-pneumonia has been brought in from other States, and because they know that it now exists in New York, and even in Massachusetts. The same thing has also been done within a few days in the State of Massachusetts; so that substantially interstate commerce and foreign commerce in cattle is being absolutely stopped to-day in three or four States of the Union, because the disease exists in some particular States. I read what appears in the papers of to-day:

DISEASED CATTLE ON SALE.

BOSTON, MASS., February 25.—It is stated that on January 26 last a lot of milch cows from Buffalo were received at Brighton and disposed of to purchasers in the city of Boston. One of the animals died in South Boston on February 15 with suspicious symptoms, and Dr. Lyman, of the Harvard University Veterinary School, upon investigating the case found that the cow had died of contagious pleuro-pneumonia. Other authorities having been called in consultation confirmed Dr. Lyman's diagnosis, and the State cattle commissioners have been working diligently since then to recover traces of the herd. The commissioners have been successful in a number of cases, and while they admit that there is great danger that the disease has been spread, they believe that the measures adopted will prevent serious results. Most of the animals have been placed in quarantine.

I might proceed to read here from the cattle commission of the State of Maine, in which they have substantially prohibited all cattle from being brought into the State, except such as are brought in cars and taken directly to the dock and put on board steamers to be sent to England, there to be killed upon the docks in Liverpool.

Mr. President, the fact is simply that the existence of pleuro-pneumonia in any one State of the Union has absolutely put a stop to the commerce in cattle from this country to foreign countries. If you can not go to the root of the disease, then you can not regulate foreign commerce in cattle from this country, because we can no longer have any foreign commerce in cattle until we have extirpated this disease.

Several States, as I have shown, have taken measures to prevent the bringing into those States of any cattle whatever. As the Senator from Iowa stated the other day, his State was quarantined against Illinois, and some of the States are undoubtedly exercising an unconstitutional power. The State of Illinois can not undertake to keep out of its own borders cattle coming from any other State unless it can show that they are diseased, but it is doing so to-day, and no other State undertakes to dispute the power to do it. If it be an unconstitutional power it would be better that it should be exercised by the Federal Government, and it can do it correctly and rightfully, I believe, under the power giving Congress control of the foreign commerce and control of interstate commerce.

The amendment of the Senator from Missouri would entirely destroy the bill.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri what section or what article of the Constitution of the United States is violated by this pleuro-pneumonia bill. It is worth my while to ask it, because I hear it alleged here every day; and it is easy, it is cheap to say something, but it possibly is worth while to ask what article and what section is violated. I have heard of constitutions before. If the Senator from Missouri undertakes to declare here that there are men on this floor who recognize the fact that the Constitution fixes the limit of legislative power and do not know that they are violating it when they pass this pleuro-pneumonia bill, I ask him to point out what section, what article of the Constitution we violate. I challenge him to do it.

It goes to the country that we are here violating the Constitution. It goes to the country that we are enacting wild legislation, outside of the limit of our power, because, forsooth, a Senator who has been here long enough to have achieved the reputation of a statesman shall make the simple declaration. I ask him to state to the Senate what clause of the Constitution, what section of it, what article of it is violated. When he puts in an amendment here and says that the President shall do so and so, what is the difference between the President violating the Constitution and the legislative body doing it? There is no distinction. If it can be shown by any declaration that will amount to a fact and will conform itself to any single article or section of the Constitution that I am proposing to violate it, I shall change my vote; but I am here to advocate the passage of the pleuro-pneumonia bill as it came to the Senate because the country demands it, because the prosperity of the country demands it, because one of the chief industries of this country demands it.

If there be anything in the Constitution of the United States which forbids the curing of a disease among the cattle of this country, I have failed to read it. The President can not go around over this whole continent and drench cows for colic without violating the Constitution of the United States unless the Senate shall do the same thing when it shall go with a bottle under its arm. Constitutions come in between the Senate and disease. Constitutions come in between the national Congress and that which is destroying one of the principal industries of this country.

I want this bill to pass, as far as I am concerned, as it came from the Committee on Agriculture, as it has been advocated here by the Senator from New York. That is the only bill which will do any good to the owners and breeders of cattle who have to transport them from one State to another and from this country across the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Missouri; on which the yeas and nays are demanded.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Am I recorded as having voted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The name of the Senator from Virginia is recorded in the negative.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I was just thinking whether we are voting on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina or of the Senator from Missouri. Which amendment are we voting on?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I have possibly made a mistake. I do not know whether I am voting exactly right about this matter. Before the vote is added up, I wish the Chair would have the amendment read. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be read so that I may be certain I am voting right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That would be in the nature of debate and out of order, except by unanimous consent. Is there objection to the amendment being again read? The Chair hears none, and it will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read, and having read some lines of the amendment,

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I withdraw the request for the reading. I understand it now, sir.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 26; as follows:
